If our society cares about housing and about young people being able to buy their own homes, we should support the amendment, which is a tiny step down that road. If the newspaper reports are true and we have entered the season in which we learn by leak of future policy, let Treasury Ministers have the courage tonight to say, "Yes, we are going to raise the £30,000 level. It will come." Let them also have the courage to say that it will come for those who need it most, not for those who have the most.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Norman Lamont): When the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) was moving her amendment she explained the technical background to it. She made it quite clear that she accepts that the amendment does not make any sense, but she said that she had put it forward to initiate a discussion of the subject. She then made it clear that she had two objectives: first, to show that it was the policy and intention of the Labour party to phase out mortgage interest relief for those who pay income tax at above the basic rate, and, secondly, to increase the £30,000 limit for the basic rate taxpayer.

The hon. Lady began by quoting newspaper reports, although she quoted selectively from them. She did not quote all that The Guardian said about how wrong it would be to increase the £30,000 limit. She quoted a few newspaper reports that speculate about the intentions of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. The hon. Lady used the word "speculation." It is exactly that—pure speculation. It has no foundation in fact. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has always attached the highest possible political priority to increasing home ownership. She takes enormous pride in the fact that home ownership is now at its highest level ever. It is in no way surprising —indeed it is wholly natural—that my right hon. Friend should always be concerned about the opportunities for young people to buy their own homes, but that is the beginning and end of the matter.

The Opposition's proposal is that the higher rate relief for mortgage interest should be withdrawn altogether. The hon. Lady quoted a figure of £1 billion, a figure that was echoed by the hon. Member for St. Helens (Mr. Bermingham), who referred to the amendment directing £1 billion towards the construction industry. I ought to point out to the hon. Lady that £1 billion is the total cost of tax relief to the higher earnings group, above £20,000, but that is not the cost of the higher rate relief. That is £320 million. The £1 billion includes the basic rate element, so the resources released by the amendment would not be of the magnitude implied by the hon. Member for St. Helens, South. That does not affect the principle, but we should be clear about the arithmetic.

The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) instanced the special position of housing within the tax system, not just by merit of mortgage interest relief, but by merit of capital gains tax. This long-standing practice was introduced when home ownership was at a lower level. Nobody could quarrel with the fact that housing enjoys a special position in our tax system.

The hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon) did not make his position entirely clear. He did not come clean on whether higher rate mortgage interest relief should wither on the vine or whether there should be some other form of transitional relief. He seemed to agree with the Labour party, but at the same time implied that something could be said for leaving the system to wither on the vine. I should be grateful if the hon. Gentleman would clarify his position.

Mr. Penhaligon: I am sorry that I did not make my position clear. I said that the case for restricting mortgage interest relief to the standard rate on a phased system was overwhelming. Given that it is based on the standard rate, there is a case for adjusting the limit at least in line with inflation.

Mr. Lamont: Is it the policy of the alliance to phase out the higher rate relief?

Mr. Penhaligon: Yes.

Mr. Lamont: I am grateful for the fact that that has been put on the record.

Mr. Penhaligon: I said "phased".

Mr. Lamont: Phased, as distinct from withering on the vine. We all look forward to analysing that vague, rather nebulous and imprecise distinction. I do not think that I was alone in not being entirely clear about the position of the alliance. I am sure that 800,000 mortgagors who would be affected by the change advocated in the amendment, which was unequivocally supported by the hon. Gentleman, will note his remark.

The Government see nothing wrong in allowing relief at the higher rates of tax as the natural consequence of our progressive tax system. If tax relief on mortgages is to continue—the Opposition have promised to continue it—it is reasonable that it should apply to borrowers at all rates of tax.

Of course, housing has a privileged position. The hon. Gentleman compared it with that of industry. Mortgage interest tax relief is long standing, and in looking at it today we must take into account the fact that many people have entered into long-standing commitments that are of enormous financial importance to themselves. It is therefore difficult to justify any sudden change.

The Government have considered the position of mortgage interest relief in our tax system each year. In 1983 we increased the limit from £25,000 to £30,000. This year we cut the basic rate of tax and increased personal allowances. We felt that the mortgage interest relief limit should remain at its present level. We shall continue to review it in the future.

The hon. Member for Thurrock commented on house prices in the south-east. Obviously, they are increasing rapidly, although it is still true that even in the south-east the average first-time buyer is within the £30,000 limit, although only just within it. As with other tax relief limits, this limit is set for the country as a whole. It would be impossible to introduce differential relief limits according to regional variations. Recent interest rate reductions are the way in which we can help home ownership and the first-time buyer. The Government are seeking to do this by their economic policies, and by bringing about a situation in which interest rates are likely to fall.

Mr. Penhaligon: The Minister commented on the disadvantages of my proposal to the 700,000 people who benefit under the higher levels of relief. Could he explain, shortly and succinctly, to the other 28 million people in Britain who do not benefit from this why the Government defend allowing over twice as much relief to a person earning £40,000 a year as they allow to a person earning £14,000 a year?

Mr. Lamont: Because something is not available to everybody, it does not mean that it should not be available to anybody. For many years tax relief has been available to people with higher incomes, and they have been encouraged to borrow money to buy houses. It is a logical consequence of a progressive tax system that the greatest benefit of relief is available to those who pay higher rates of tax. Liberal Members do not seem to understand that when they discuss very small adjustments to the tax system.

Mr. Penhaligon: The Minister is saying clearly, for everyone to understand him, that he thinks it is rational, proper and reasonable that if a person in a specific house, and with a specific mortgage commitment, increases his salary from £14,000 to £40,000 a year, the Government should give him as cash in his hand twice as much relief as previously.

Mr. Lamont: It is extraordinary that the hon. Gentleman regards tax relief which allows somebody to keep more of his income as giving him cash in his hand. My instinctive reaction is that allowing a person to keep more of his own income is not giving him cash in hand. My presumption—it may be extraordinary—is that his income belongs to himself rather than to the state. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman finds that difficult to follow.

Mr. Hanley: Does my right hon. Friend agree that if the mythical constituent mentioned by the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon) raises his income from £14,000 to £40,000 a year he will pay greatly increased rates of tax? The net effect on that individual will be that he is paying more tax and is not receiving money.

Mr. Lamont: My hon. Friend is absolutely right, as he so often is. The Labour party says that it is the guardian of the poor and the lower paid. That is admirable, but Opposition Members seem to think that people on above average incomes have no rights and are of no importance on

at all. Not content with wanting to increase their income tax, they want to increase their bills massively. In the past this country has suffered from too high a burden of taxation on above-average incomes and it has affected our overall economic performance.

There is a clear division on this matter between the two sides of the House.

Mr. Gow: As the House has the advantage of the presence of the solitary representative of the Liberal party, can my right hon. Friend confirm my understanding that the policy of the Liberal party—leaving aside the SDP—is to end the exemption of houses from relief from capital gains tax?

Mr. Lamont: I am afraid that I am not as informed as my hon. Friend is about this matter. I am therefore happy to give way to the hon. Member for Truro.

Mr. Penhaligon: The Conservatives of Eastbourne are famous for making up their own versions of Liberal policy. However, as the years pass by, the good people of Eastbourne have the sense to pick the real version. The hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) is at it again.

Mr. Lamont: One can hardly blame my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) for trying to make up Liberal policy. It is difficult to work out Liberal policy, as we saw when I put a direct question to the hon. Gentleman. Even when he gives a straight answer, it is so vapid and foggy that much analysis is required to make sense of it.

This matter has perhaps been debated for long enough. There is a clear division between the two sides of the House. The 800,000 people who would be affected by this will notice not just what has been said by the Labour party, but what has been said by the hon. Member for Truro—that the alliance intends to remove relief from higher rate taxpayers.

Dr. McDonald: First, I thank the Financial Secretary for not misrepresenting the Labour party's views on maintaining and continuing mortgage tax relief when we take office. That, I fear, has been done in the past by Treasury Ministers and I am glad to note that he at least has not fallen into that trap. We have been at pains to overcome such misrepresentations and to make it clear that we intend to retain mortgage tax relief for standard rate taxpayers.

I was interested to note that the Financial Secretary seemed to move away a little from the original purpose of mortgage tax relief, which is, of course, to encourage and assist people in purchasing their homes. He seemed to regard it, as indeed it is so regarded by many higher rate taxpayers, as a means of lightening the tax burden. I could not help but notice that drift in the Financial Secretary's remarks.

We wish to limit mortgage tax relief to the standard rate because, in an area which is so sensitive and basic to most people's lives—the provision of a home for themselves and their families—help should be concentrated by Government where it is most needed. Higher rate taxpayers do not need to receive this relief at the higher rate. They usually manage to provide homes well above average for themselves and their families.

Therefore, it is not through any wish to attack the incomes of higher rate taxpayers in receipt of mortgage tax relief that we have moved the amendment; it is just that we think that in the provision of housing, whether through the purchase of one's own home, through co-operative ownership schemes or through houses or flats to rent in the public sector, aid should be concentrated where it is most needed. Therefore, we should not continue the relief at the higher rate.

I take the Financial Secretary's point about the progressive nature of the tax system. Of course, people on higher incomes benefit more. That is almost inevitable with a progressive tax system. But there comes a point when that system can be broken by saying that such a relief is not justified at that level. It is an expensive relief for Government to administer and therefore help should be concentrated on those who most need it for something as important as housing.

As I have already said, and as the Financial Secretary understood, the amendment does not achieve our real purpose. It is merely a method of giving notice that the next Labour Government will carry out the intentions that I have just described. Therefore, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 23

EMPLOYEE SHARE SCHEMES: GENERAL AMENDMENTS

Mr. Hanley: I beg to move amendment No. 225, in page 20, line 12, at end insert—

'(7) In paragraph 1(5) of the 1984 Schedule, delete "before 1st July 1985".'.

I thank my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary for paying me such a warm tribute by saying that I was so often right. I hope that he meant that I am always right and I hope that that opinion will extend to this amendment. I know that I was right when I greeted my right hon. Friend to the Committee on his appointment as Financial Secretary to the Treasury. I know that I was right to greet him warmly on his elevation to being a Privy Councillor. I hope that I can make three in a row. My right hon. Friend also knows that I moved six amendments in Committee and all six were accepted. In fact, one will be moved a little later by my right hon. Friend.

I wonder whether my right hon. Friend can help on this amendment, although the blame may lie elsewhere than in statute. The amendment is an attempt to redress an injustice to 155 people who have suffered from a bureaucratic mishap. All I ask is that the intention of the Finance Act 1984 be carried out for those employees.

I have written to my right hon. Friend on the matter, as indeed has my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth). We have both talked at length on the subject and feel that there is an injustice which can be altered quite simply.

8.15 pm

The injustice has been suffered by the employees of a company called BET. The company decided to introduce a share option scheme under section 38 of the Finance Act 1984. The scheme was approved by shareholders at the annual general meeting on 6 September 1984 and the first grant of options took place during the ensuing six weeks permitted by the regulations.

A formal application for approval of the scheme was submitted to the Inland Revenue, as required, before 1 January 1985, thus ensuring that the income tax concessions that were available in the Act for such schemes should apply from the outset. I admit that that was a generous concession by the Revenue.

In return, the Inland Revenue requested three minor amendments to the draft rules, each of which was entirely formal in nature, prior to confirming its approval. Those rule amendments were carried out on 16 May 1985, but it was not appreciated at the time that the Inland Revenue needed to be notified. In fact, the time period for such notification was 1 July 1985. Consequently, the Inland Revenue did not finally give written approval to the scheme until the rather late date of 11 February 1986.

In the meantime, the company had made a second grant of options, believing that the scheme had been allowed, during the six weeks following the announcement of the company's results on 18 July 1985. BET claims that, mainly through having been inadequately advised by its consultants, the company did not appreciate at that time that, because the grant formally took place after 30 June 1985 and before Inland Revenue approval had been received, the options granted would not be eligible for the relevant income tax concessions. That was an expensive and tragic mistake to many employees who have worked extremely hard and who have fallen foul of a bureaucratic slip-up.

The employees were severely hit. There were 155 employees who took up nearly 2 million shares. The price payable on exercise of those options was £3·20 per share, compared with the current market value of approximately £4·40. That would mean that the employees' benefit would stand at about £2,300,000. The increase in market value makes it difficult to restore the expectations of the employees by further grants.

The Inland Revenue regards itself as powerless to rectify the position by treating its approval as retrospective, although, as we know, much of the scheme has been facilitated by retrospective legislation. The company maintains that the situation that I have described is an unreasonably severe consequence of a minor deficiency in the documentation relating to the introduction of the scheme, which was perhaps caused by bad advice or negligence.

However, the matter could be rectified by a simple amendment and that is exactly what I have moved. As matters stand, a substantial number of employees are losing a benefit which the Act intended them to have. In Committee on 24 May 1984 my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore), my right hon. Friend's predecessor, said that that intention was clear both to politicians and the Revenue. Therefore, I beg my right hon. Friend to look with sympathy on this case, as I know he has looked sympathetically on other cases since he has taken over his important position.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The amendment of my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) addresses a detailed point about the status of options granted by a company in advance of the Inland Revenue approving its share option scheme under the provisions of the Finance Act 1984. In the case of options granted after such approval has been obtained which are exercised in accordance with section 38(3) and (4) of the 1984 Act, the option gain is free from income tax.

When the principal legislation was introduced, it was appreciated that the merits of the new scheme would probably result in many companies applying to establish schemes quickly and that there would be a serious risk that the Inland Revenue could not cope with all the approvals. Therefore, it was decided in Committee on the Finance Bill that the legislation should provide that options granted on or after 6 April 1984 but before 1 July 1985 under a scheme formally established by a company might be allowed to benefit from the favourable tax treatment. The provisos were that the scheme was submitted to the Inland Revenue for approval under the 1984 Act's provisions by 31 December 1984, and that it subsequently obtained such approval. Thus, where an established scheme was submitted for approval by the end of 1984, any options granted under it between 6 April 1984 and 30 June 1985 could qualify for the favourable tax treatment, provided that the scheme was subsequently approved. Only if approval was not forthcoming by the end of June 1985 would any options granted after that date be incapable of qualifying, and then only options granted between the end of June and the granting of approval.

I cannot accept the amendment, because it seeks to remove completely the limitation for this retrospective treatment—a limitation which was deliberately included in the original legislation. A realistic deadline for options granted to benefit from retrospective approval was placed in the transitional legislation to ensure that companies did not ignore the need to obtain approval from the Inland Revenue. Without such a limitation, companies could have continued to grant options while neglecting to take any action necessary to bring their scheme into line with statutory requirements. To avoid that, the legislation was drawn up to deny income tax relief for options granted under a scheme after 30 June 1985 unless the scheme had already been approved.

As the then Financial Secretary explained, the provisions allowed companies to design their schemes and put them into operation in the period before the Royal Assent and during an initial period thereafter while the Inland Revenue would have the heavy influx of new schemes. The provision was limited. It was not designed to have unlimited retrospective effect. Once the new legislation had been introduced and the initial surge of new schemes examined, the measure would be spent. As I explained earlier, the transitional legislation operated accordingly.

On the length of the transitional period, it is worth stressing that the statutory date, 1 July, was decided following consultation with representative bodies. At 1 July 1985, and in most cases well before that date, the Inland Revenue had fully examined all applications for Finance Act 1984 schemes drawn up during 1984 and notified the applicants of any points that needed attention. All schemes where the applicants responded satisfactorily and which were therefore capable of approval as at that date had been formally approved. The only instances where approval had not been given occurred where the applicants failed to respond to inquiries.

It is no doubt a relevant factor in the mostly successful outcome that the significance of the 1 July deadline was given considerable publicity. Apart from the debate in Committee, there was a press release dated 19 June 1984 which I have given to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes. I have read it, and it gives full details of the transitional arrangements. In addition, the Inland Revenue published explanatory notes to the legislation in December 1984 which included a chapter describing the transitional provisions. Just to underline the accuracy of the time limit, the general compliance with it and the effectiveness of the target, the Inland Revenue is aware of only two cases where options were mistakenly granted after 30 June 1985 before the company's scheme had been formally approved.

The share option scheme was given considerable publicity. Almost all the companies which adopted the scheme took steps to observe the requirements of the legislation and apparently did so without difficulty. At that time, many such schemes were introduced.

My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes said that I accepted many of his amendments. All that I can say is, "You can't win 'em all." I cannot go along with my hon. Friend on this amendment. I have every sympathy for the people in the company that he mentioned, but the legislation was clear. It was given much publicity, including press handouts, and everything possible was done. It is the responsibility of professional advisers and of those who create such schemes to make themselves aware of the conditions under which the schemes are created. No special circumstances apply to the firm. I have every sympathy with the company and the employees, and perhaps the firm's professional advisers must consider their responsibilities in the matter. I cannot comment on that, but I must say to my hon. Friend that I cannot alter the legislation, which was already generous in its retrospective effect.

Mr. Hanley: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary for examining this case with such care. He has fully explained the publicity that was given to the various documents. He has also given me some booklets and leaflets which show clearly that notice was given to those who, perhaps, should have given more competent advice to their clients. I fully understand my right hon. Friend's position, although it is to be greatly regretted that those 155 people cannot benefit through a small amendment to the legislation which, as I said earlier, would give them exactly what the legislation intended.

The fact that formal approval had not been given, but that informal approval had been given many months before the cut-off date and that the three minor amendments had been achieved two months before the cut-off date, must be especially galling to them. I am sorry that legislation cannot give them what they deserve, but I shall pass on to those individuals my right hon. Friend's words, especially with regard to the responsibility of the advisers. I am grateful for the fact that he has taken such trouble over this matter. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 25

SAVINGS-RELATED SHARE OPTION SCHEMES

Mr. Fred Silvester (Manchester, Withington): I beg to move amendment No. 204, in page 22, line 39, at end insert—

> '(aa) if, before the date on which the alteration takes effect, a person who held such rights on 18th March 1986 ceases, in either of the circumstances set out in the said paragraph 10(1)(e), to hold an office or employment by virtue of which he was eligible to participate in the scheme, then, so far as concerns the rights so held, the scheme may permit him to take advantage of the provision in question as if the alteration had been made immediately before he ceased to hold that office or employment; and'.

I wish to discuss a small matter, similar to that raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). It affects relatively few people, but it is based upon a more hopeful premise. The Government have wisely and sensibly embarked upon a change in the Finance Bill which will make it possible for people who have been thrown out of a company through no fault of their own because the company has been sold to another company to have the benefit of a share option scheme after one year rather than after three years. That is the gist of the matter. When the measure was announced, those likely to be affected by the Budget said, "Whoopee, that puts us on the right side of the law," only for it to dawn upon them that, alas, it would not come into effect until July or August and that they were caught between March and August. That happened to people in my constituency, who were employed by Fairey Engineering, which was a subsidiary of the Pearson Group. It has now been sold, and was caught being sold between March and August.

We made representations to my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary, and he was generous in the amount of time and thought that he gave the matter. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell), who led the charge from his side of the constituency boundary, and to Pearson's lawyers, who were most generous in helping to draft the amendment.

The amendment holds water and it would make it possible for people to claim this additional benefit from the date of the Budget. I stress that those few people who have been caught unwittingly between the devil and the deep blue sea should be given this relief.

8.30 pm

Mr. Favell: I rise to join my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) in commending the amendment to the House. I also thank him for his help in the battle. The amendment is relatively minor on a national scale, but to the employees of Fairey Engineering, who, through no fault of their own, have seen their company sold, it is a matter of great moment.

I pay tribute to the way in which Fairey Engineering has helped my hon. Friend the Member for Withington and me to bring this issue to the Government's attention. I should mention, in particular, Mr. Vincent Meadows, the works convenor at Fairey Engineering, and Mr. John Parsons, the managing director, who have worked hard together to ensure that fellow employees, who have been members of the share option scheme for only one year, can take advantage of it. As my hon. Friend the Member for Withington said, without the assistance of the Pearson Group plc, nothing would be possible. Although the Pearson Group has disposed of Fairey Engineering and no longer has any interest, the group has made it clear that it will do all that it can to assist the employees of its former subsidiary to exercise their options in the company. I pay tribute to the Pearson Group for that.

Perhaps it is because Fairey Engineering has the best brass band in the north of England that it has been able to make a noise that has reached the Treasury's ears. Mr. Nigel Rudd, the chairman of Williams Holdings plc, came here last night and, I am glad to say, assured me that

[Mr. Fovell]

Fairey Engineering's brass band would receive the support of the Williams Holdings and would be as good and as great as ever, albeit under the new name of Williams Fairey Engineering Band. I am sure that that is of interest to the House and of interest, in particular, to hon. Members from the north.

It gives me great pleasure to commend the amendment to the House.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Clause 25 eases the provisions of the Finance Act 1980 governing approved savings-related share option schemes. At present, these schemes may not permit employees to exercise options which have been held for less than three years if the company or part of its business in which they are employed is sold from, or otherwise leaves, the group operating the scheme. The Bill abolishes that time limit. As a result, a company introducing a scheme will in future be able to permit the exercise of options in those circumstances. The company with an existing approved scheme will be able to alter its rules to include a new right for scheme participants to exercise their options in the same circumstances.

As drafted, the clause will become operative on receiving Royal Assent, enabling companies then to seek Revenue approval for alterations to their schemes to take advantage of the new provision. This follows the normal course that, except in very special circumstances, legislation should receive full debate and approval before implementation. In any consideration of the starting date for the clause it is necessary to note that before the new provisions can be used to confer a new right on any scheme participant the company must first change the rules of the scheme under which the option was granted to allow participants to take advantage of the facility.

In following the normal course, we had intended to give companies time to assess their position and to put in hand, if they wished, their own procedures for changing scheme rules. Companies which agreed to sell subsidiaries, or parts of businesses, in the meantime would have done so in full knowledge of the consequences for those holding options less than three years old.

We received many representations. Indeed, the noise of the brass band from Withington and Stockport reached our ears. Initially, as will be known, I was a little resistant to this idea, but after talking to my hon. Friends the Members for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) and for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on more than one occasion, I was persuaded that the timing was a bit accidental and unfortunate. Incidentally, this amendment is quite different from the previous one. Some companies' plans were publicised on 18 March, and it is proper that their scheme participants should be able to take advantage of the new provisions if the company operating the scheme decides to alter its rules retrospectively, as would be permitted by the amendment.

Budget day is the natural choice for a revised starting date for the amendment. Another relevant factor in support of that timing is one which I must stress and invite interested companies to note. Rights have to be exercised —if they are to be exercised at all—within six months of the subsidiary company or business having been sold, or otherwise leaving the group. The six-month period is of general application for the exercise of options under the 1980 legislation. Any scheme alteration that is intended to take advantage of the amendment must be made in time for that six-month rule to be observed.

Where, for example, a subsidiary company is sold at the end of March and the approved scheme is to be altered to enable the subsidiary's employees to exercise options under the scheme, the alterations will have to be made and approved by the Inland Revenue, and the options exercised, before the end of September. After a little initial reluctance, I have been wholly persuaded by my hon. Friends the Members for Withington and Stockport, and I commend the amendment to the House.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 27

RELIEF FOR DONATIONS UNDER PAYROLL DEDUCTION SCHEME

Amendment made: No. 8, in page 26, line 14, leave out from 'and' to end of line 17 and insert

(b) the words "and does not exceed £10,000 in any year of assessment" shall be omitted.

(2) After subsection (1A) of that section there shall be inserted the following subsections—

"(1B) If at least £1,000 of an individual's income for any year of assessment consists of covenanted payments to charity which, in the hands of the charities receiving them, constitute income for which, by virtue of section 31 of the Finance Act 1986, relief under section 360(1) above is not available, so much of the individual's income as consists of those payments shall not be excluded from the operation of subsection (1) above by virtue of subsection (1A) above.

(1C) If, for any chargeable period of a charity,—

(a) the income of the charity includes two or more covenanted payments to charity, and

(b) only a part of the aggregate of those payments constitutes income for which, by virtue of section 31 of the Finance Act 1986, relief under section 360(1) above is not available, each of the payments which make up the aggregate shall be treated for the purposes of subsection (1B) above as apportioned rateably between the part of the aggregate referred to in paragraph (b) above and the remainder."'

Schedule 9

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Norman Lamont: I beg to move amendment No. 50, in page 124, line 14, at end insert—

'(5A) In arriving at the value of any interest in land for the purposes of this paragraph—

(a) it shall be assumed that there is no source of mineral deposits in the land of a kind which it would be practicable to exploit by extracting them from underground otherwise than by means of opencast mining or quarrying; and

(b) any borehole on the land shall be disregarded if it was made in the course of oil exploration.'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take Government amendments Nos. 72 to 80.

Mr. Lamont: I envy the Economic Secretary's speed in the progress of the amendments. I should be content simply to nod this amendment through, but I do not know whether the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) would be satisfied with that. Because points were raised in some detail in Committee, I felt that it would be right to amplify the proposed amendments, although I hope to do so as briefly as possible.

Amendment No. 50 concerns the restriction of building expansion scheme relief on investment in a company with a substantial holding of land and buildings. This restriction involves a test of whether more than half the net assets of a company are represented by land and buildings. If this test is failed, BES relief is restricted. The idea is that substantial holdings of land and buildings should provide an asset base on which finance can be raised and, therefore, BES relief is not needed.

Under the test, the value of any underground mineral workings would be taken into account, yet, because of the riskiness of this activity, the workings may not provide sufficient security on which to raise alternative finance. That point was drawn to my attention in Committee and I undertook to consider it. Having had the chance to do so, I think that an amendment to the rules is appropriate.

The purpose of amendment No. 50 is to exclude from the value of land and buildings in the test the value of minerals which would be extracted by underground workings. The value of any oil or gas is also to be excluded to prevent the oil exploration relief from being withdrawn as a result of the discovery of oil or gas. Any other value inherent in the land would continue to be counted in the ordinary way. At the same time, we are taking the opportunity to exclude from the test the value of any bore holes made in the course of oil exploration. Although we are advised that these are unlikely to have any intrinsic value, we thought it best to clarify the matter.

Amendments Nos. 72 to 80 merely extend the new oil exploration relief to Northern Ireland, for reasons which I hope are obvious.

Mr. Terry Davis: The Financial Secretary said that he envied his hon. Friend the Economic Secretary, who moved a series of amendments which went through on the nod. I, for my part, envied my hon. Friend the Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) who was covering those amendments because he did not need to say anything or even find it necessary to rise from his seat. I intend to try to emulate my hon. Friend by quickly resuming my seat because we do not challenge the amendment.

Mr. Healey: I sincerely thank my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary for putting his mind to an amendment which I proposed in Committee. The amendment is just and will help to give to those who try hard to provide employment in a difficult industry encouragement and the profits to enable them to grow. The private mining industry would have been severely hurt were it not for this measure. I hope that it will flourish and will be an inspiration to British Coal in its dealings in the future.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I beg to move amendment No. 51, in page 124, line 35, at end insert—

'(9) Where a company has ceased to be a qualifying company in consequence of the operation of this paragraph, section 62(6) of Chapter II shall apply as if the relief was withdrawn in consequence of an event which occurred at the time when the company so ceased to be a qualifying company.'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take Government amendments Nos. 52 to 55 and 61 to 71.

Mr. Lamont: One of the Bill's proposals is that relief can be withdrawn from BES shares where there is a rights issue and either the rights are sold or the BES shares fall in value as a result of rights being taken up. The amendment ensures that these rules apply equally where the rights are to acquire different classes of shares or debentures. This follows similar rules for capital gains tax.

The alternative basis of valuation for the purpose of the land and building restriction starts with the value of the land and buildings at the time of the share issue, adds on the purchase cost of any other land and buildings and any expenditure on improvement, and deducts any consideration received for any disposals. As the Bill is drafted, it is not clear whether the rule works properly when the consideration is received some time after a disposal. Amendments Nos. 52 and 53 remove any doubt. Amendment No. 54 corrects a drafting error.

On amendments Nos. 51 and 64, when BES relief is withdrawn, an assessment is made to collect the tax. This bears interest from a specified date. As the Bill is drafted, this date is not clearly specified where relief is withdrawn following a rights issue or where the land and building restriction comes into effect. These amendments make clear the date from which interest starts to run.

Under the general BES rules, a company is allowed to carry on some excluded activities provided they do not amount to a substantial part of the trade, which, as a rule of thumb, is taken to mean about 20 per cent. of the trade. Amendments Nos. 55 and 61 ensure that the company's excluded activities are added together when deciding whether they amount to a substantial amount of the trade.

Amendments Nos. 62, 63 and 65 to 67 make it clear that the various rules which apply in respect of shares on which BES relief has been given do not apply after all that relief has been withdrawn.

8.45 pm

Mr. Bermingham: I am puzzled at times when rights issues become a disqualifying problem. I have raised this matter before and I do so again because rights issues are a good way of raising secondary capital. The method is often used by a company in its initial thrusting period when the initial investment has been used in the purchase of capital, plant and so on. I do not intend to oppose the amendment, although I warn the Government that I may oppose many other amendments.

I ask the Government once again to consider rights issues. Often these are the rights issues to existing shareholders. Perhaps the Financial Secretary will assure me that, when it is necessary for a company to move from phase one to phase two of its development, it will not be prejudiced under the business expansion scheme by disqualification as a result of the rights issue.

Mr. Lamont: The hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) has made a fair point. There is, in a way, a bit of rough justice in the treatment of rights issues, although there is a purpose behind it. There is scope for people to use the BES in a way that is not intended.

As I understand it, the main purpose of the provision as drafted was to prevent a situation in which rights issues would be used to acquire different classes of shares and instruments such as debentures. Of course, a rights issue of an ordinary share might be a different matter. There is some merit in that argument. I shall look at this point, but I stress that I say that without any commitment. I have some sympathy with the hon. Gentleman's point. One must always bear in mind that the BES provides very generous tax relief, especially for high income earners, which can be compared to generous tax relief such as that on house purchase.

Mr. Bermingham: I think that the Financial Secretary knows my philosophical approach to the BES. I am especially concerned that companies which are subject to the BES may be forced to shrink as a result of the wording of this provision. Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that there is a way around this problem? Perhaps there could be an exemption where the shares are issued to existing shareholders for the purpose of further investment in the company, and that can be certified by accountants to the company or by the Department of Trade and Industry or even by Inland Revenue. I tender that as a first-thought solution to the problem which involves great difficulty and unfairness.

Mr. Lamont: I shall look into the matter. I am reminded that when I made my opening remarks in explaining the amendments I referred to a situation in which rights issues were at a discount. That is where the only problem arises. I do not think that I made that clear when I was responding to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham). This situation is a little rough and ready. I say without any commitment that I shall consider the hon. Gentleman's points.

Amendments made: No. 52, in page 124, line 46, leave out from 'consideration' to first 'of' in line 47 and insert 'for the disposal by the company'.

No. 53, in page 125, line 1, leave out 'on the grant' and insert 'for the grant by the company'.

No. 54, in page 125, line 8, leave out '(b)' and insert '(c)'.

No. 55, in page 127, line 18, leave out 'to any substantial extent of' and insert 'of one or more of the following activities if that activity amounts, or those activities when taken together amount, to a substantial part of the trade'.—[Mr. Norman Lamont.]

Mr. Norman Lamont: I beg to move amendment No. 56, in page 127, line 43, after 'Kingdom', insert—

'(bb) throughout the relevant period the company is solely responsible for arranging the marketing of the services of its ships.'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to consider Government amendments Nos. 57 to 60.

Mr. Lamont: This year we are extending the business expansion scheme to companies engaged in ship chartering. The changes we propose are designed to ensure that the scheme is open just to companies actively engaged in chartering where there is some element of risk involved and that the benefits flow to British companies using British registered ships. For that reason, our proposals contain a number of conditions which must be satisfied if a company is to qualify under the scheme.

It has been put to us — the point was raised in Committee — that in one or two respects these conditions might impose unnecessary constraints. We have considered those points. The Inland Revenue has had useful discussions with the General Council of British Shipping. The amendments we propose here are designed to relax slightly the conditions where we think there is some scope.

One of the conditions is that ships may only be let out on charter for periods not exceeding 12 months. This is to ensure that the scheme is used for genuinely risky charters rather than for longer ones where the stream of income is steady and secure. In Committee I said that I would look at this again. We still think that the length of this limit is about right. But we have managed to find some scope for relaxation without reducing the element of risk.

Amendment No. 58 would allow the person chartering the ship—not the BES company—to have an option, or options, to extend the charter so as to make it run for a longer period than 12 months. This would allow extensions to be made in line with normal commercial needs but would ensure that the BES company could not minimise its risks by entering into long-term charter arrangements. In particular, this meets one of the concerns put to us by the GCBS. The amendment would also allow a new letting to be agreed during the life of the current letting, but not so as to fix the use of the ship for a period ending more than twelve months away.

As the rules are drafted, a company would have to meet the conditions in respect of all of its ships and charters. That goes further than the rules for other trades under the scheme, which can undertake some non-qualifying activities provided that they do not amount to a substantial part of its trade. We concluded that the same sort of flexibility ought to be available to ship chartering companies—for example, a company might already have charters which do not meet the conditions and so would have to wait until these are finished before the BES can be used. Amendment No. 57 would allow some non-qualifying charters provided that they do not amount to a substantial part of the trade.

It has also been put to us that BES companies would be put at a considerable disadvantage if they were unable to make use of some of the services of a specialist ship manager. It has been argued that obtaining crews would be difficult and that stores and repairs would be costly to obtain.

One suggestion is that the ban on the use of managing agents should be removed altogether. That was considered in Committee, and I made it clear that I saw difficulties in allowing a company to hand over the running of its ships totally to an agent because one would then have a tax relief which would be a financing measure, which would allow people just to invest in the assets. We have looked at this point further, as we would not wish to force a BES company to operate in a commercially disadvantageous way. Therefore, we propose to allow a company to use an agent to undertake certain functions. These are what are known in the trade as husbandry and they include the supply of crew and provisions.

But the company would retain responsibility for the commercial management of the ship — for example, bunkerage and the loading and unloading of cargo. Amendment No. 59 makes that change, and amendment No. 56 requires the BES company to be responsible for marketing the services of the ship, arranging charters. I think that that strikes a fair balance between what was advocated in Committee and what makes sense within the scheme.

Amendment No. 60 deals with the subject of lettings within a group. There is a condition that charters must be arms length's bargains with unconnected persons. That ensures that the extension is not refused. The reasons for that are obvious. However, there is not the same possibility of abuse where the connected companies are all members of the same group and where the parent of the group is a company qualifying under the business expansion scheme, as all the companies would have to meet the qualifying conditions of the scheme. That point was raised in Committee and I undertook to bring forward an amendment to deal with it.

Dr. McDonald: We do not intend to oppose any of these amendments. We recognise that a number of them merely improve drafting and that some, as the Financial Secretary has made clear, tighten up the drafting. We consider some of these amendments, especially amendment Nos. 56 and 59, as anti-avoidance measures, so there is nothing to oppose here.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 57, in page 127, line 46, at end insert—

'but where any of the requirements mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) above are not satisfied in relation to any lettings of such ships, the trade shall not thereby be treated as failing to comply with this paragraph if those lettings and any other activity of a kind falling within paragraph 6(2) above do not, when taken together, amount to a substantial part of the trade.'.

No. 58, in page 128, line 3, leave out from 'provision' to end of line 5 and insert—

'is made at any time (whether in the lease or otherwise) for extending it beyond that period otherwise than at the option of the lessee;

(aa) during the period of the letting there is no provision in force (whether made in the lease or otherwise) for the grant of a new letting to end, otherwise than at the option of the lessee, more than twelve months after that provision is made.'.

No. 39, in page 128, line 11, leave out from beginning to end of line 12 and insert—

'(i) for taking, throughout the period of the charter, management decisions in relation to the ship, other than those of a kind generally regarded by persons engaged in trade of the kind in question as matters of husbandry; and'.

No. 60, in page 128, line 29, at end insert—

'but this sub-paragraph shall have effect, in relation to any letting between the company in question and its subsidiary, or between it and another company of which it is a subsidiary or between it and a company which is a subsidiary of the same company of which it is a subsidiary, as if paragraph (b) were omitted.'

No. 61, in page 128, line 36, after 'investment', insert—

'or of that activity and any other activity of a kind falling within paragraph 6(2) above, taken together'.

No. 62, in page 130, line 9, at end insert—

COMPANY RECONSTRUCTIONS

Amendment proposed: No. 81, in page 139, line 13, leave out from 'for' to end of line 14 and insert—

'the words from "any", in the second place where it occurs, to the end there shall be substituted "such apportionments of receipts, expenses, assets or liabilities shall be made as may be just."'.—[Mr. Norman Lamont.]

Mr. Bermingham On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is a technical point of order. My point is that amendments cannot be discussed if they are moved formally. The amendment as it stands may go through but I would suggest, with the greatest respect, that it would seem to be fair that the next amendment or the group should then be formally moved. I know that it is a technical point, but it would give any hon. Member who particularly wants to speak on an amendment the right to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not quite sure which amendment the hon. Gentleman is speaking to. If he is speaking to an amendment which has been discussed with another amendment, he should speak on the amendment which was called first. Will the hon. Gentleman tell me which amendment he is referring to?

Mr. Bermingham: Without seeking to be discourteous, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think that your learned Clerk appreciates my point. Amendment No. 81 has just been formally moved. It may have been bracketed for convenience in the order of selection with other matters, but when we come to amendment No. 82, which is the next one, it in turn has to be formally moved to enable an hon. Member to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is perfectly in order to speak to amendment No. 81, together with other amendments which are grouped with it. Does he wish to do so?

Mr. Bermingham: All I seek to do in raising this point of order is to be utterly formal. I know that it may be boring to certain hon. Members, but I do not seek to worry about that at this stage.

One is setting a precedent. All that I am asking is that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are on Government amendment No. 81, which is grouped with other amendments. Perhaps I dealt with it in too telescoped a manner, but the group includes amendment No 82. The hon. Gentleman is in order to speak to it, and I shall call him now if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Bermingham: I seek not to speak on any particular amendment. I am saying that a matter of principle is involved. After amendment No. 81 has been agreed to, we then move on to Government amendments Nos. 82 to 87. If the Government wish to move them formally, I have no objection to it, but it sets a precedent. It is just sloppiness. We have had enough problems on the Bill as it is. I seek merely to have each amendment put in turn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a well-established procedure. The grouping of amendments is on the Amendment Paper, which the hon. Gentleman no doubt has. It has been in the No Lobby for some time. I do not wish to rush the House, but it is customary, if a Minister moves an amendment formally, for me to see whether anyone rises. No one rose. I do not want to embarrass the hon. Gentleman. Again, I invite him to speak on any of this group of amendments. If he wishes to do so, I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. Bermingham: I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I merely wanted to say this. Amendment No. 146 is the last of the group. I wanted to ask the Minister why it was necessary to table the amendment. It is as simple as that.

9 pm

Mr. Norman Lamont: Amendment No. 146 is consequential on amendment No. 81. Amendment No. 81 slightly changes the wording of a provision that enables apportionments to be made where the predecessor company ceases to carry on only part of its trade and continues to carry on the other part. The amendment replaces the reference to "necessary apportionment" by a reference to "such apportionments . . . as may be just."

Mr. Bermingham: What worries me is when a large conglomerate with some subsidiaries decides to fold one to the advantage of another. Who would determine what was necessary and what was not?

Mr. Lamont: As I said, the question of necessity will not arise, but obviously there are ways in which the loans—which are the object of the hon. Gentleman's question—can be apportioned between different companies to continue the losses that are to be available for tax relief purposes. Amendment No. 81 is a relieving provision. It does not make it more restrictive. I would be treading in difficult territory if I attempted to define "apportionments . . . as may be just,"

but those are the words that are written into the Bill.

Mr. Bermingham: I thank the Minister for that reply. Perhaps he will see the point that I am driving at. By the very apportionment of loans between companies A, B and C, it is possible to shift tax losses, or reliefs, perhaps to the most profitable sector, to the detriment of the Revenue. I hope that the Revenue will keep that matter very much under observation.

Mr. Lamont: Of course we will. The purpose of this series of amendments is to restrict the relief that has been available. It is also designed to discourage the double counting of relief in those situations.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 82, in page 139, line 23, leave out 'and'.

No. 83, in line 24, after 'successor' insert—

'and which, in a case where the predecessor was the predecessor on a previous application of section 252 above, were not by virtue of section 252(8) above apportioned to a trade carried on by the company which was the successor on that application'.

No. 84, in line 34, leave out 'and'.

No. 85, in line 35, after 'successor', insert—

'and which in a case where the predecessor was the predecessor on a previous application of section 252 above, were not by virtue of section 252(8) above apportioned to a trade carried on by the company which was the successor on that application'.

No. 86, in page 140, line 16, leave out

'attributable to the trade and'.

No. 87, in line 24, at end insert—

'3. The following shall be inserted after sub-paragraph (5) of paragraph 17 of Schedule 9 to the Finance Act 1981 (restriction of carry forward of unused relief)—

"(5A) Where an amount for which a company is entitled to relief by virtue of section 252(3) of the Taxes Act (company reconstructions: successor's entitlement to carry forward predecessor's loss) is reduced by virtue of section 252(3A) of that Act, the part of the amount in respect of which, by reason of the reduction, there is no relief shall for the purposes of this paragraph be taken to consist—

(a) first of capital allowances for accounting periods of the predecessor ending not earlier than 14th November 1980;

(b) next of relief under this Part of this Schedule, taking relief in respect of a later period of account before relief in respect of an earlier one;

(c) next of losses incurred in the trade in accounting periods of the predecessor ending not earlier than 14th November 1980 (calculated without regard to capital allowances or relief falling within paragraphs (a) and (b) above) and including any losses treated under section 254(5) of the Taxes Act as incurred in such accounting periods;: and

(d) lastly of other losses, capital allowances and reliefs.

(5B) In sub-paragraph (5A) above "the predecessor" has the same meaning as in section 252 of the Taxes Act.".'.—[Mr. Norman Lamont.]

PENSION SCHEME SURPLUSES

Amendment proposed: No. 89, in page 148, line 2, leave out 'Where' and insert

'Subject to paragraph 6A(4) below, where'.—[Mr. Ian Stewart.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take Government amendments Nos. 91, 92, 94 to 97 and 101.

Dr. McDonald: I should like the Minister to confirm that amendment Nos. 89 and 91 are designed to improve the drafting, and that amendment Nos. 96 to 98 and 101 are technical amendments. Amendment No. 92 enables the Inland Revenue to ask an actuary to explain his valuation of a pension fund's assets and liabilities, and to provide background information. The amendment also lays down procedures for negotiations between pension scheme administrators and the Revenue. Why does that amendment appear at this stage? It seems to be obvious that such procedures should be in place.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The hon. Lady has interpreted the amendments correctly. The answer to her question about why the amendment has been included at such a relatively late stage is that the procedure for which the amendment provides is likely to be unusual. It was therefore not one of the first aspects of the scheme that came to mind. However, I agree that once one alights on the point it is obvious. I am glad that we have been able to include it.

Amendment agreed to.

Dr. McDonald: I beg to move amendment No. 90, in, page 148, line 31, at end insert

'except that the method prescribed in paragraph (a) shall only be a permitted way of reducing the excess if the other ways set down in paragraphs (b) to (f) are to be utilised to the fullest extent as is reasonable in all the circumstances.'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to consider amendment No. 93, in page 148, line 38, at end insert—

'The Board shall not approve any proposals which include repayments under sub-paragraph 3(a) above unless the administrator has provided in the submission explanations which in the view of the Board satisfactorily explain why the other permitted ways set out in sub-paragraphs 3*(b),(c)*, (d), (e) and (f) cannot reasonably be used, or further used, to reduce the excess'.

Dr. McDonald: The purpose of the amendment is to make the repayment to the employer of pension fund surpluses the last resort. This will effectively force the employer to adopt other ways of eliminating surplus such as suspending contributions or meeting benefits.

In essence, contributions to pension funds by employers are part of the pay package and it is suggested that, other things being equal, they are used to depress the level of current pay. It seems correct therefore that the surplus belongs effectively to the present and past generations of employees, allowing that a raid on the fund does not inevitably recognise that.

The issue of surpluses is not only that the tax benefits of pension funds might have been overused, but that the resources of employers for enhancing pay deals has been incorrectly allocated. Obviously the best way—and this is what we want to see happen—to deal with surpluses would be to enhance the benefits, as this would redress both the erstwhile excess use of the tax efficient regime and the fact that employee's pay has been unduly restricted.

The withholding of employers' contributions should logically be preferred to withdrawals from the fund as these are more likely to be taken into account both by employees and employers in the determination of the amount and shape of remuneration packages. It enhances the opportunity of trade unions negotiating better terms than simply being able to point to a refund which the employer could say belongs to the past rather than to the current generation of employees. Additionally, the fact that the withholding of contributions is more likely to be spread over a number of years reinforces the link between a continuing negotiation on pay and conditions and the available resources.

The amendment is in two parts: the addition at line 31, and the consequential addition to line 38 which gives to the board the obligation not to approve proposals which give unreasonable priority to other means of dealing with surplus pension fund. We recognise that the amendment is not entirely satisfactory because it equally gives precedence over "(a)" to permitted ways under "(f)" as well as "(b)" and "(d)" although "(f)" is the undefined category. We are moving the amendment to ensure that where there is a surplus employees should benefit and that the repayment of any surplus to the employer should be the last item that is taken into consideration.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) has raised a matter which we discussed in a slightly different context in Committee in relation to the pension provisions in the Bill. She has candidly explained her amendments, saying that they might not be perfect. Treasury Ministers never complain that Opposition amendments are perhaps less than perfect and it would be churlish of me to make any such suggestion. I shall take the point for its substance, not its detail, and I hope that she would like me to proceed in that way.

However one defined the provisions of the type the hon. Lady has described, it would be difficult if a requirement were placed on the Inland Revenue to judge whether certain matters had been adequately fulfilled by the trustees before the Inland Revenue was willing or able to sanction repayment or refund to the company. Purely regarding mechanism, I must repeat that the Inland Revenue is not a suitable body to exercise judgmental decisions about the adequacy of pensions or how money is distributed by trustees of pension fund schemes.

As I explained in Committee, there are three main options. The first is that an excessive surplus in a pension fund scheme can be reduced by increasing benefits for the members of the scheme. The second is that the contributions of the employer and employee can be reduced. Indeed, they can be fully suspended for a period, if need be, as a means of causing an immediate recalculation of the commitments of the scheme which would do away with the whole or part of the excess over-funding. The third option is a refund to the company.

The hon. Lady's amendments are designed to ensure that the third option was not available, in effect, until one or other or both of the other two options had been exhausted. I understand and have some sympathy with her feelings that schemes should try to do as well as they can for their members as beneficiaries, and that it may in some cases be suitable both for the company as an employer and for the members of the scheme as employees not to have to pay any money into the pension scheme for a period. Obviously, that is the case.

However, I must stop at the idea that in no circumstances should a company be allowed to have a refund unless it has used the scope of those two alternatives to the limit. A reason for that is that if a pension fund on valuation is shown to be underfunded, there will be a requirement on the employer to top it up to a level where it will meet the commitments it faces. There were cases in the 1970s when, because of a negative return on gilt edged securities, the level of the stock market and the difficulty of calculating future income streams from companies in which pension funds were invested, some trustees found that their schemes were insufficiently funded to meet their commitments. Therefore, companies often made substantial extra payments into those schemes to meet the shortfall.

It seems wrong that if in better times the pension scheme recovers and finds with hindsight that the extra money paid in to meet the emergency is not needed the company should not be able to obtain a refund of the extra money that it had to pay in. Given that there are such circumstances, it would be wrong to accept the amendments, although I understand the spirit in which the hon. Lady moved them.

9.15 pm

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: As my hon. Friend has been kind enough to refer to the speech which I made earlier and has touched upon his difficulties, as a Treasury Minister, in trying to make policies in the area of occupational pensions, I should like to take the opportunity of drawing his attention to the remarks made this year by Professor Moore in his presidential address to the Institute of Actuaries.

Professor Moore took the trouble to emphasise that there does not appear to be any Government Department with overall control of policy governing these schemes. He pointed out that it is partly an Inland Revenue matter and partly a Department of Health and Social Security matter as well as a matter for the Department of Employment, the Occupational Pensions Board and the Government Actuary. I consider that the Treasury must have an overall interest in this because of the important part that these schemes play in striking a balance between consumption and saving in the economy.

What my hon. Friend has said seems to reinforce my suggestion that there should be a serious and early inter-departmental study of the way in which these schemes are operating, the tax provision and aspects of the law connected with occupational pension schemes. In that way the Government can make known a policy which is satisfactory to those who put money in and also to those who rely on the money that comes out of these schemes at the end of their careers.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I remind my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) that I shall be conferring with my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department of Health and Social Security about these matters. In a recent survey of opinion relating to pension funds it was suggested that almost two-thirds of the schemes would probably choose to improve benefits rather than the other methods. We welcome that.

Dr. McDonald: I am glad that the Minister is prepared to consider the issues which have been raised in the amendments I tabled.

I accept the Minister's point regarding employers paying an extra contribution when there was a negative return on investments during the 1970s. Nevertheless, the rights of employees as contributors to such schemes are being overlooked. When there is a surplus, their interests should be properly taken into account. They are, after all, deferring pay in order to receive a pension in the future. Part of an employee's pay goes into a pension fund and it is time that proper weight was given to this when we consider the disposal of pension fund surpluses.

I accept that the Board of Inland Revenue may not be the best possible mechanism to use. Tabling this amendment has given us the opportunity to air these important issues. Much thinking still needs to be done about pension schemes and the way in which they operate to ensure that they benefit those who contribute.

We wish to highlight that importance. I am glad that the Government will consider this matter, and we on this side of the House will certainly give a great deal of attention to these issues. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Schedule 12

Pension Scheme Surpluses

Amendments made: No. 91, in page 148, line 34, leave out 'If' and insert

'Subject to paragraph 6A(4) below, if'.

No. 92, in page 148, line 38, at end insert—

'6A.—(1) Where a valuation has been produced under paragraph 5 above, the Board may serve on the administrator of the scheme a notice requiring him to furnish the Board, within a prescribed period, with such particulars relating to the valuation as may be specified in the notice.

(2) Where a certificate has been given under paragraph 5 above, the Board may serve on the administrator of the scheme a notice requiring him to produce to the Board, within a prescribed period, a written valuation such as is mentioned in paragraph 5(2) above.

(3) Where a valuation has been produced in compliance with a notice served under sub-paragraph (2) above, the Board may serve on the administrator of the scheme a further notice requiring him to furnish the board, within a prescribed period, with such particulars relating to the valuation as may be specified in the notice.

(4) Where a notice is served on the administrator of a scheme under sub-paragraph (1) or (2) above, paragraph 6(1) and (5) above shall cease to apply.

(5) In section 98 of the Taxes Management Act 1970 the following shall be inserted at the end of the first column of the Table—

"Paragraph 6A of Schedule 12 to the Finance Act 1986".

6B.—(1) Where particulars have been furnished under paragraph 6A above, or a valuation has been produced under that paragraph, the Board shall, within a prescribed period, serve on the administrator of the scheme a notice—

(a) stating that they accept the valuation produced under paragraph 5 or, as the case may be, 6A above, or

(b) stating that they do not accept the valuation so produced, and specifying their estimate of the value of the liabilities of the scheme at the relevant time and their estimate of the value of the assets held for the purposes of the scheme at that time.

(2) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (1)(b) above, the relevant time is the time specified in the valuation produced under paragraph 5 or 6A above as the time by reference to which the values of the assets and liabilities are determined.

(3) Where—

(a) in a case falling within sub-paragraph (1)(a) above, the valuation shows that the value of the assets exceeds the value of the liabilities by a percentage which is more than the prescribed maximum, or

(b) in a case falling within sub-paragraph (1)(b) above, the value of the assets as estimated by the Board exceeds the value of the liabilities as so estimated by a percentage which is more than the prescribed maximum,

the administrator of the scheme shall within a prescribed period submit to the Board for their approval proposals which comply with paragraph 6(2) to (4) above.

(4) If the administrator of the scheme fails to submit proposals to the Board within the period mentioned in sub-paragraph (3) above, or if proposals submitted to them within that period are not approved by the Board within a further prescribed period, paragraph 8 below shall apply.'.

No. 94, in page 148, line 40, after '6(1)' insert 'or 6B(3)'.

No. 95, in page 148, line 41, after '6(5)' insert 'or 6B(4)'.

No. 96, in page 149, line 9, after 'specified' insert— ' (a)

No. 97, in page 149, line 10, after 'above' insert— ', or (b) where a valuation has been produced under paragraph 6A above, in that valuation,'.

No. 98, in page 149, at end insert—

'(3A) Sub-paragraphs (3B) to (3E) below shall apply where a percentage has been so specified, securities are transfered in the relevant period, and the transferor or transferee is such that, if he became entitled to any interest on them, exemption could be allowed under section 21(2) of the Finance Act 1970.

(3B) Paragraph 32(1) and (2) of Schedule 23 to the Finance Act 1985 (accrued income scheme) shall not apply.

(3C) Where, in consequence of sub-paragraph (3B) above, section 73(2)(a) or (3)(b) of the 1985 Act applies, the sum concerned shall be treated as reduced by an amount equal to the specified percentage of itself.

(3D) Where, in consequence of sub-paragraph (3B) above, section 73(2)(b) or (3)(a) of the 1985 Act applies, the relief concerned shall be treated as reduced by an amount equal to the specified percentage of itself. (3E) For the purposes of section 74(5) of the 1985 Act, the amount of interest falling to be reduced by the amount of the allowance shall be treated as the amount found after applying section 21(2) of the Finance Act 1970.

(3F) In sub-paragraphs (3A) to (3E) above expressions which also appear in Chapter IV of Part II of the 1985 Act have the same meanings as in that Chapter.'.

No. 100, in page 149, line 27, leave out 'sub-paragraph (3) above' and insert 'this paragraph'.

No. 101, in page 149, line 32, at end insert—

'9.—(1) The Board may make regulations providing that an appeal may be brought against a notice under paragraph 6B(1)(b) above as if it were notice of the decision of the Board on a claim made by the administrator of the scheme concerned.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may include—

(a) provision that bringing an appeal shall suspend the operation of paragraph 6B(3) and (4) above;

(b) other provisions consequential on the provision that an appeal may be brought (including provisions modifying this Part of this Schedule).

(3) The power to make regulations under this paragraph shall be exercisable by statutory instrument subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Commons.'.—[Mr. Ian Stewart.]

Clause 47

BUILDING SOCIETIES

Mr. Ian Stewart: I beg to move amendment No. 18, in page 42, line 41, leave out 'in subsection (2)' and insert

'subsection (1A)

(which was inserted by the Finance Act 1985 and enables the Board to make regulations requiring societies to account for amounts representing income tax on certain sums) shall have effect and be deemed always to have had effect with the insertion after the words "in accordance with the regulations" of the words "(including sums paid or credited before the beginning of the year but not previously brought into account under subsection (1) above or this subsection)".

(2) In subsection (2) of that section'.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin) has tabled an amendment to amendment No. 18, I shall introduce the amendment briefly so that I can listen to his comments.

Amendment No. 18 clarifies a technical point arising from the Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986, which were laid by the Board of Inland Revenue last March under powers conferred by section 40 of the Finance Act 1985. They set out the detailed rules for the new composite rate scheme for building societies which came into force earlier this year.

Doubts have been expressed about the validity of the regulations. The Government's legal advice has been and still is that the power conferred by last year's legislation is adequate and that the regulations are validly made. To avoid prolonged uncertainty, however, I am proposing the amendment to make it clear once and for all that section 40 of the Finance Act 1985 achieves the intended result.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin (Wanstead and Woodford): I beg to move amendment (a) to the proposed amendment, in line 6, leave out 'brought into account' and insert 'charged to tax'.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury for explaining the purpose of Government amendment No. 18. I hasten to say that some of the criticism about the amendment is to my mind misconceived. There is only one issue on which it is right to question the Treasury Bench — the issue of double taxation, or the raising of additional revenue by subjecting the same stream of income of building societies to taxation twice over.

I agree with my hon. Friend about retrospective legislation. It is perfectly legitimate to correct a potential misdrafting of a power in an earlier Finance Act to restore the law to what was intended. Nor do I accept that there is anything improper in trying to make unnecessary legal proceedings which are intended to show that the regulations are ultra vires.

The only question is whether the Government, when shifting from the previous to the new system of taxing interest on deposits, are instituting double taxation. I should like to emphasise the Chancellor's original intention when he wanted to put the building societies on the same basis as the banks in regard to payment of interest. In his Budget statement on 19 March 1985, he said:

"On 6 April, the banks will move over to the composite rate system for the payment of tax on bank interest. I now need to legislate to put the corresponding composite rate payments by building societies on a similar footing, starting next year."

This is the most important sentence of all:

"This will not produce any additional revenue." — [Official Report, 19 March 1985; Vol. 75, c. 797.]

It is no secret, because it has been widely commented upon in the press and I understand that there was an item about it on the radio this morning, that some societies, notably the Woolwich building society and the Leeds Permanent building society have complained that, contrary to the Chancellor's intention, there is substantial extra revenue, and they are having to pay it. The Woolwich has estimated that the provisions will cost it £65 million. I have seen it suggested that the extra burden on the entire building society movement may be in excess of £400 million.

We must ask how that lies with the Chancellor's intention that there should be no additional revenue. I think that I should explain how it arises. I shall take the example of the Woolwich building society, which has been most assiduous in ensuring that people understand its case. We are talking of a composite rate tax which is charged on interest paid to depositors in building societies, which is then deducted by the societies when they make interest payments to depositors, and which then has to be handed over to the Revenue.

In the old system, that tax was deducted by the societies when the interest was paid to the depositors and an amount was subsequently paid over to the Inland Revenue based on the interest paid in the society's accounting year ending in the tax year in question, sometimes called the basis year. In January of this year the Woolwich building society paid about £138 million to the Inland Revenue —this was the tax for the tax year 1985-86—based on the interest paid to depositors in the 12-month accounting period to 30 September 1985. Had the system remained unchanged I understand that there would be no dispute whatever between the Revenue and the society that the payment last January discharged the society's liability for the full tax year 1985-86, that is, to 5 April 1986.

Now that the system has changed, that is where the problem arises. The purpose of the change, which no one challenges, is to secure that tax in future should be paid quarterly in arrear on the actual payments made by the society to its depositors, and these payments will be made at the end of February, May, and November in each year. However, there is a transitional problem involved in moving from the old to the new system.

I would remind my hon. Friend that when this happened to the banks—and it happened a year earlier—the simple solution was taken of dropping out a year. No attempt was made to tax any interest twice. When the system moved from the preceding year basis to the actual basis, the banks simply had one year's interest dropped out of the system.

With the building societies, the Treasury has chosen to adopt a different tactic. The regulations, to which my hon. Friend referred, took the device of deeming some of the interest that had been paid to have been paid later than the dates on which it was actually paid and then to take that interest and tax it under the new system even though—this is the point that the societies make, to which I am bound to say I have not seen a convincing answer—it has already been covered by the tax paid under the old system.

My hon. Friend in his discussions with the society says that what he is doing is bringing forward the date of the society's liability to hand over the tax due. What the regulation does—and this is the point where my hon. Friend may be misdirecting himself—in the case of the Woolwich is to take the interest payments for the period 1 October 1985 to 28 February 1986, even though all basic rate income tax liability upon them has been fully discharged by the payment made last January, and deems them to have been made at a later date for the purpose of taxing them again.

By any normal interpretation of the words, that is double taxation. I ask my hon. Friend to bear in mind that, although the tax is collected vicariously from the building societies, it is in fact a tax upon building society investors in respect of the interest received by the investors. On the occasion of the first payment of tax, the investors duly received the appropriate credit, namely, the discharge in full of their basic rate income tax liability on the interest. On the occasion of the second taxation which the transitional provisions now impose, the second interest payment, of course, being entirely fictitious, the investors get no extra credit. This is, therefore, extra taxation.

I call in aid the fact that, in order to support amendment No. 18, the Treasury tabled a Ways and Means resolution, because of course it is raising extra tax. Without the Ways and Means resolution, it would have no power to do this. The House considered that on 8 July.

Where does this leave us? The Inland Revenue, for reasons that may well be imagined, instructed the draftsman to effect the transition in such a way as to defeat the Chancellor's expressed intention that "This will not produce any additional revenue."

The way that the draftsman has done that is by using the words, found in line 6,

"not previously brought into account."

That will allow the Revenue to claim, in the case of the Woolwich, that the interest that it paid for the period between 13 September and 28 February this year has not been brought into account and so can be taxed further by the deeming system under the new arrangements.

9.30 pm

That is wholly misconceived and it is entirely wrong in principle. The principle of taxation has been clear for many years. In the well-known case of Fry v. The Burmah Corporation in 1930, the judge said

"You do not tax the years by which you measure; you tax the year in which you tax"— in this case 1985-86—

"and measure by the years to which you refer."

In consequence of the general principle of income tax law, the payments of tax made by the Woolwich and all other building societies on or at 1 January this year represented tax on all the interest received by their investors during the whole of the year of assessment ending 5 April 1986. Any attempt to bring some of those interest payments back into charge a second time is double taxation; yet that is precisely the effect of the words "brought into account" in the amendment. It effectively subjects that income to tax twice over at a cost to the Woolwich of £65 million.

Is that really my hon. Friend's intention? It seems to sit uneasily alongside the expressed intention of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget last year. He has assured me that it is not his intention, but I can equally assure him that the words of amendment No. 18 mean that that will happen. I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees), who has considerably more experience in these matters than I have, and my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) have sought to remove those offending words "brought into account" and instead insert the words "charged to tax".

Those five months of interest have been charged to tax and, as I understand it, the Treasury does not dispute that. In his letter to the Woolwich of 11 March, my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary wrote:

"We agree that the payment of tax made by the Society at the beginning of this year [1986] satisfied its liability for the 1985-86 tax year."

That appears to be common ground. They should not be taxed again, and our amendment will ensure that there is no double taxation; that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's intention of no extra revenue is achieved; and that the Woolwich Equitable building society does not have to find an extra £65 million on top of the tax that it has already paid.

It is the job of the House to see that the Inland Revenue does not, in the words of yet another former Treasury Minister, my noble Friend Lord Bruce-Gardyne writing in the Sunday Telegraph this week, indulge "in two bites at the self-same cherry."

Without sub-amendment (a) that is precisely what the Government's amendment will do. With it, we shall avoid having two bites at the cherry.

Mr. Michael Meadowcroft (Leeds, West): Appearing in unaccustomed garb as a Treasury spokesman, I am encouraged by being on the same side of the argument as the distinguished Members whose names are attached to the secondary amendment, namely, the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin), the right hon. and learned Member for Dover (Mr. Rees) and the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith). The problem affects not only the Woolwich but particularly in my case the Leeds Permanent which finds itself in exactly the same uncomfortable position.

When a Government change the basis for assessing income tax two dangers arise. One is that some items will be taxed twice, and the other is that during the transition the new tax may fall more heavily upon some taxpayers than others even though equal taxable amounts are involved, usually because of different dates of accounting. That is happening in this case. Both dangers are present in the amendment that has been proposed by the Treasury Minister.

The amendment is based on the view that the taxpayer has to bear the transitional cost. Surely that is a reversal of previous Government practice. For instance, when PAYE was introduced, the Exchequer bore the cost of the transitional period. We are not talking about small amounts. For building societies the cost will be between £500 million and £600 million.

I want to use the Leeds Permanent building society to give an example of the effects of the Government amendment. Up to now the Leeds Permanent has paid income tax on 1 January every year to discharge its liability up to 5 April. Under the new scheme some liability will have to be met at 1 October because the Leeds Permanent accounting year ends on 30 September. Therefore, the amount which had previously been taxed up to 5 April will become the basis for a second, duplicated tax liability under the new scheme.

As the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford said, the amendment will create in effect a new six-month liability. I am aware that if things progress normally for building societies the actual cash will not be paid over. However, the point is that the new six-month liability will hang over the head of the building society in the event of the tax account being finally squared off. As I understand it, it is analogous to an individual with a private telephone paying the telephone rent in advance. Normally he could claim a rebate if he ceased to have the telephone, but under the Government scheme he would still be liable for the amount that had been paid in advance.

Because of their legal basis, building societies cannot take the same risk as an individual in regard to a small amount, such as telephone rental. Therefore, what had previously been a reserve on a building society's balance sheet will become a liability. The Leeds Permanent, for example, will have to sacrifice some £74 million of reserves. For the individual investor in the Leeds Permanent that is equal to a reduction in reserve backing of £31. The whole sum is equal to a quarter of the society's total reserves. It represents a fall in the society's reserve ratio of just over 1 per cent.

As the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford said, unfairness is being perpetrated on certain building societies. It depends capriciously upon the accounting year of each society. For instance, the Halifax, the largest building society in the world, with an accounting year ending on 31 January, will escape most of the double taxation.

It is important to point out that none of us wishes to terrify investors in building societies because their reserves are massive and well able to cope. I am sure that the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford would want to make that point about the Woolwich. We wish to avoid any sensational reporting of the possible effect of the double taxation. Nevertheless, I should have thought that the large number of investors in the Leeds Permanent and the Woolwich would cause the Government to think again.

The Government should accept the amendment proposed by the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford, otherwise there will be few courses of action open to them. One would be for them to take on the cost of the transitional period themselves. That would enable the change to come into effect without its being unfair to some societies.

Another aspect is important. Despite vigorous representations to the Treasury, including those of my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright), who would have spoken tonight had he not been in America with a Select Committee — that is a salutary reason why I am performing in a less adequate way than he would have done — there has not been a response that the societies regard as adequate.

The Leeds Permanent and the Woolwich have commenced a High Court action to seek to have the relevant statutory instruments declared ultra vires. Yet Government amendment No. 18 will pre-empt that court action by giving explicit powers to the Government to make a statutory instrument. That suggests that the Government feel vulnerable to the court action in process, and that that amounts to retrospective taxation.

It is unfair for the Government to make the building societies bear the cost of the transition. If they must do so, it is absolutely crucial that it be done in a manner that affects all building societies equally, which is not the case under the present system. I hope that, if the House divides, hon. Members will support the secondary amendment.

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): My name appears in support of amendment (a) to Government amendment No. 18. Sometimes when we consider taxation, people say that it is just a technical matter. This is a technical amendment. On the other hand, £65 million worth of tax is at stake for the Woolwich building society. A substantial amount is also involved for the Leeds Permanent building society. It is a technical matter. On the other hand, a substantial amount of revenue is at stake.

I think that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury is aware that I have taken an interest in the matter for some time. A few months ago, he kindly agreed to see Mr. Cumming of the Woolwich building society to discuss it. I do not want to enter into a debate about the merits of that. I was encouraged by the fact that my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees), who is an expert in such matters, felt that substituting the words "charged to tax" for the words "brought into account" would put the matter beyond doubt.

I hope that it will be possible, if the Woolwich wishes to do so, to challenge the matter in the courts and for the courts to be able to determine whether there is double taxation. Although I am an accountant, I do not feel qualified to comment on that. I am not a tax specialist. I think that the Woolwich should be given that opportunity. That is why I support amendment (a).

Dr. McDonald: I support the amendment moved by the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin). From the extent to which I have considered this complex matter and the advice that I have received not only from the Woolwich but from the Building Societies Association. I believe that there could be an element of double taxation involved in the way in which the regulations which govern the transitional period for the change and the way in which the composite rate of taxes is charged to building societies are framed. A figure of £65 million has been cited for the Woolwich. I think that it is about £40 million net. The overall figure for building societies over the next three years, beginning with this year, is about £450 million.

As the story unfolded, I could not help but wonder whether the Government, having lost various possible sources of revenue this year, such as the sale of water authorities, might have thought that it could gain more revenue over the next two or three years by this measure. I am sure that that is not the case—that there is some misunderstanding with the regulations or that the regulations have been ill conceived so that they impose the burden of double taxation which is quite unfair. That did not happen to the banks when the same tax regime was imposed on them. It is unfair that this should happen to the building societies.

There are two further problems. I understand that the matter has been discussed for a long time between the Economy Secretary to the Treasury and the Building Societies Association and the Leeds Permanent and Woolwich building societies separately. Last year the Building Societies Association had many discussions with the Inland Revenue. It made representations to, and had meetings with, Treasury Ministers. The council of the association recorded its grave concern about the effect of the transitional arrangements, but it concluded that the point had been pursued as far as possible.

9.45 pm

In pursuing the point with the Treasury, the problem that faces the Building Societies Association is that this affects building societies unequally. The accounting periods and the dates for the end of the accounting periods differ from one building society to another. Some building societies are little affected by the change. Others—in particular, the Leeds and the Woolwich building societies which have long accounting periods that finish at the end of September—are particularly hard hit by the double taxation element in the transitional provisions.

Therefore, I understand why it was difficult for the Building Societies Association to pursue this matter to the limit. The Economic Secretary knows that the Leeds and the Woolwich building societies were due to pursue it through the courts by means of a judicial review. They had applied for leave, leave had been granted, and proceedings were due to commence on 15 July. They fear that, if passed, the Government's amendment will preclude the possibility of pursuing the matter in the courts. They regard it as entirely unfair that the Government should have tabled this rather hasty amendment which precludes them from pursuing their action to any real effect.

In order to clarify the issue and to rule out, once and for all, the possibility of double taxation during the transitional period, I hope that the Economic Secretary will accept the amendment of the right hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford. It would clarify the point and leave the Woolwich and the Leeds building societies to pay the right amount of tax due in the transitional period, but they would not have to pay double that amount. I hope that the Economic Secretary will accept the amendment. If he merely gives an assurance that double taxation will not be imposed, that will not be sufficient. What stands as part of the Bill when it becomes law is, as the Economic Secretary knows, what is significant, not what is said by way of comment on the meaning of amendments during a debate. By accepting this amendment, any injustice that is caused to building societies during the transitional period will be entirely avoided.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall try to respond to all the points that have been raised. I appreciated the balanced manner in which my right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin) introduced his amendment more than I have appreciated some of the comments on the subject that have been aired in the last few days.

My right hon. Friend suggested that some of the criticism was misconceived. Apart from retrospection, I hope to deal with the legal question before coming to the substance of the timing of the taxation.

I agree with my right hon. Friend that to introduce in the amendment words which ensure that a provision in last year's Finance Bill has the import that was intended is not retrospective legislation. He asked me about the point of a Ways and Means resolution. I asked exactly the same question, and I was told that if anybody had any doubt about it, it could conceivably require a Ways and Means resolution. The fact that the Government did not have any doubt about it did not seem to matter, but I bow to legal advice on that.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: With the greatest respect, that does not dispose of the argument. The fact that whether an additional tax is being levied is in doubt, and the fact that my hon. Friend was advised that to put the matter beyond doubt he should have a Ways and Means resolution suggests that there is a prima facie case that there is an additional tax. Perhaps my hon. Friend should address himself to that.

Mr. Stewart: I note what my right hon. Friend says, but I do not accept that our amendment enlarges the ability of the Revenue, through regulations, to raise tax. Nevertheless, because there is a widening of scope, which in theory could enable regulations to be introduced of a wider form than might have been possible before, a Ways and Means resolution is apparently required. I only say what the position is as I am advised. However, I would not rely on that point.

In addition to the fact that the amendment makes sure that the section in last year's Finance Act operates as was intended, it was known at the time how the regulations should be formulated. That was widely discussed with the Building Societies Association. Although detailed provisions could be introduced into any Finance Bill saying that regulations shall provide A, B, C, D, all the way through to Z, if the basis and substance of the regulations are already known, there is a correspondingly lesser need to spell out so much in detail. The point on detail has now been raised, and that is why we are introducing it.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) touched on the legal question, as did other hon. Members. The purpose of the amendment is purely to ensure that the regulations as promulgated are within the vires of the power in last year's Finance Act to make them. It is not related to the content of the regulations on other grounds.

I have been told by a senior officer of one of the societies involved that the Government would be wrong to suppose that by means of the amendment we would be protecting ourselves from scrutiny of the regulations by the courts. I accept what I am told, but the amendment is directly addressed to the relationship between the section in last year's Finance Act and the regulations that follow.

Let me come to the substance and the claim of my right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford of double taxation. My first point on that is that the whole system of the transition has been designed to bring in, following the words of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, which my right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford quoted, the same amount of money to the Revenue in 1986-87 as would have been brought in if there had been no change in existing practice. As far as I know, that is what the system will achieve. There is no question of this provision, through the regulations, increasing revenue to the Exchequer this year. It merely accelerates the payments made by some societies. The hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) pointed out that not all societies are affected equally; it depends on their year end.

If the Woolwich or, for example, the Leeds Permanent building society has, say, £60 million involved in the period between the end of its financial year and the end of the fiscal year, that amount would fall out of tax altogether if it were not for these provisions. That tax, although applicable to interest and dividends paid, would not be accounted for. It has been said that if we stated "charged to tax", instead of "brought into account", that would solve the problem for the Woolwich. It might do, although I do not know whether it would, but it would deprive the Revenue of a substantial sum. I do not know what the figure is exactly, but we are talking about hundreds and millions of pounds. I said that it "might" rather than that it "would", because we are talking, not about the society's tax, but about a tax on the investment income of depositors. There is a difference between the tax that a society or company pays itself, and a tax that is accounted in respect of interest paid. There is, indeed, a crucial difference.

In the case of the banks, there has not been such a scheme before, and so no comparison can be drawn. The money was paid gross to the recipients, and they paid income tax through their own assessments. Let us suppose that the tax regime of a building society, such as the Woolwich, had ceased — without going into these transitional arrangements — to be done through the composite rate of tax at the end of September 1985, and that gross payments had been introduced from that date. The amount of tax payable by the Woolwich in 1985-86 would have been identical, but there would have been income tax to pay on interest and dividends from October to March by investors and members. That money would have had to be paid to the Revenue.

The fact that a composite rate tax is being used means that it is collected on behalf of those investors and depositors, and subsequently paid to the Revenue. If the existing system had continued that would have been the amount of tax payable in relation to composite rate tax during the fiscal year 1986-87. We have had to do a bit of catching up. In order to put the building societies on a footing with the banks, with quarterly payments, they will have a rather smaller time lag between the time of collecting the composite rate and the time that it is paid.

Clearly, different societies will be affected differently. The longer the period before the end of the fiscal year that a society has its own year end, the more it has to catch up. The Woolwich and the Leeds Permanent building societies are having to catch up more, because their year end at 30 September is much earlier than that of the bulk of building societies, at 31 December.

The new scheme will merely provide, in the case of a 30 September society, that in the fiscal year 1986-87 the tax for which it accounts at the composite rate of tax on investments and deposits will be not only for the 12 months from October 1985 to September 1986, which it normally would have been under the old system, but for the five extra months to February 1987. Of course, I accept that this means——

It being Ten o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

It being Ten o'clock, MR. SPEAKER proceeded to put forthwith the Question which he was directed by paragraph (1) of Standing Order 19A (Questions on Voting of Estimates &c.) to put at that hour.

ESTIMATES 1986-87

Resolved,

That a further sum not exceeding £44,636,349,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges for the service of the year ending on 31st March 1987, as set out in House of Commons Papers Nos. 259, 269, 284 and 439.

Bill ordered to be brought in upon the foregoing Resolution, upon the Resolutions [24 June and 9 July] relating to Estimates 1986-87, and upon the Resolution [10 July] relating to Supplementary Estimates 1986-87, by the Chairman of Ways and Means, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. John MacGregor, Mr. Norman Lamont, Mr. Ian Stewart and Mr. Peter Brooke.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL

Mr. Norman Lamont accordingly presented a Bill to apply a sum out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the year ending on 31 March 1987, to appropriate the supplies granted in this Session of Parliament, and to repeal certain Consolidated Fund and Appropriation Acts. And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 211.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at this day's sitting, the Motion relating to the Channel Tunnel Bill may be proceeded with, though opposed, until any hour.—[Mr. Cope.]

Finance Bill

Not amended in the Committee and as amended (in the Standing Committee), again considered.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I was dealing with the difficult technical question of the composite rate tax payments during the fiscal year 1986-87 in relation to the building societies, whose affairs we have been discussing. I do not deny that during the fiscal year 1986-87 they would need to account for the tax on interest and dividends of more than 12 months. Twelve of those months would have come into account in the ordinary way because that is how the old scheme operated. In addition, to catch up, tax must be paid for the subsequent months at the end of the fiscal year 1986-87. The problem with the Woolwich and other 30 September societies is that they have enjoyed a considerable advantage over other societies because of the difference between their year end and the end of the fiscal year. On average, they have had a delay of between 10 and 11 months in handing over the composite rate tax. To catch up with the others and to bring those societies into line with banks the delay has been reduced to between three and four months. Obviously, the societies are therefore required to pay a greater amount of composite rate tax to catch up time during the transition period. We have introduced transitional arrangements so that this is spread over a period. The transitional relief is more generous the longer the time before the end of the fiscal year that the society's financial year ends.

This does not affect the amount of tax collected. It merely affects the timing. In 1986-87 the later months of that fiscal year are added to the normal period when composite rate tax would have been collected under the old system.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: My hon. Friend appears to have conceded two points. The first is that undoubtedly extra taxation will be paid in the years 1986-87, and also in 1987-88 under the spreading arrangements. This will bring in revenue to the Treasury greater than that which would have been received from the societies had there been no change in the system. Therefore, in respect of those two years, this is clearly contrary to the intentions which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor expressed to the House last year in his Budget statement.

Secondly, my hon. Friend seems to have conceded firmly that, although payments made in January by the societies discharged their liability in full for the fiscal year 1985-86, they will have to pay more tax on interest which they have paid in the last five months of that year. Why is that not double taxation?

Mr. Stewart: The answer is, very simply, because it is a catching-up process. They have had a longer lag in passing over composite rate tax to the Revenue than most of their competitors, and when they have to catch up they have further to go. That is why they have to pay over more during 1986-87. It is not double taxation, it is merely that they have had to pay tax in respect of a longer period for the fiscal year 1986-87 than they would if the old system had continued. Of course it is uncomfortable for them, but I repeat what I said earlier, that there is no increase in the estimated yield from composite rate tax during this current fiscal year over the previous year. The whole of the transitional arrangement and the move to the new quarterly payments is based on the undertaking that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave.

It does not bring extra tax to the Revenue. Because of the timing of the quarterly payments, the amount of flow into the Revenue during the fiscal year 1986-87 will, we calculate, be, as near as possible, equivalent to what it would have been if the old system had continued. All that happens is that some of those payments are made earlier than they otherwise would have been. In the case of societies such as the Woolwich, it is earlier by a greater amount because its financial year ended substantially earlier than that of its competitors. Therefore, there is no double taxation, and I hope that my right hon. Friend will accept that.

Mr. Jenkin: It would greatly help me if my hon. Friend could reassure the House on the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) and the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald), that there is nothing in the Government's amendment that will preclude the societies, if they so wish, from pursuing their case in the courts on the ground that it is double taxation. My hon. Friend may say that they are wrong and that they will lose. However, if he could reassure me that that opportunity will remain open and that it is not his intention to close it off, I would feel a little happier.

Mr. Stewart: I can only give my right hon. Friend the same assurance as I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield. The amendment addresses itself purely to the connection between the clause in the Finance Act 1985 and the regulations. It does not address itself to the substance of the regulations, and I am advised by one of the societies that it is contemplating further action in relation to the substance.

Clearly I could not advise any taxpayers that they could or should challenge the law or the regulations on any particular points. However, I can say that I do not believe that it amounts to double taxation, and I am advised that one of the parties which considers itself to be aggrieved by it is contemplating a different kind of action, which may or may not follow.

Mr. Jenkin: My hon. Friend is clearly not going to accept my amendment but, I think, is leaving it open to the societies to pursue this in the courts. It would be wrong of me to try to press this to a Division, although I am tempted to do so. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mineral Extraction: The New Code of Reliefs

Amendments made: No. 102, in page 151, leave out lines 18-29.

No. 103, in page 157, line 12, after 'assets', insert 'is disposed of or otherwise'.

No. 104, in page 157, line 17, after second 'the', insert 'disposal or, as the case may be'.

No. 105, in page 157, line 18, at end insert—

'(1A) If, at any time after a mineral asset has been acquired by any person, it begins to be used (by him or any other person) in a way which constitutes development but is neither existing permitted development nor development for the purposes of a trade of mineral extraction carried on by him, the asset shall be treated as having permanently ceased, immediately before that time, to be used by him for the purposes of that trade; and for the purposes of this sub-paragraph, "existing permitted development" means—

(a) development which, prior to the acquisition, had been or had begun to be lawfully carried out; and

(b) any other development for which planning permission is granted by a development order made as a general order and in force at the time of the acquisition; and sub-paragraph (3) of paragraph 16 below applies for the purposes of this sub-paragraph as it applies for the purposes of sub-paragraph (2) of that paragraph.'

Clause 56

AGRICULTURAL LAND AND BUILDINGS

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I beg to move amendment No. 19, in page 50, line 32, leave out from '1986' to end of line 39.

I am pleased to move this amendment and I am grateful to Mr. Speaker for inserting it in his selection of amedments. Amendment No. 19 seeks to delete the definition of "husbandry" in clause 56 which "includes any method of intensive rearing of livestock or fish on a commercial basis for the production of food for human consumption."

My amendment seeks to delete those words because they refer to intensive farming methods. I have taken expert opinion, and I am advised that those involved in intensive farming methods will get tax allowance benefits as a result of the insertion of those words in the clause.

I looked up the definition of the word "husbandry" in Harrap's dictionary in the Library. It refers to the "rearing of animals on a farm."

The definition also states:

"to look after carefully/not to waste . . . resources".

In the context of the good use of resources, that implies care for the animals' health and welfare. Much present-day intensive husbandry does not do that. Animals are denied very basic freedoms—to stand up, lie down with ease, turn around, walk and mix with their own kind. The Government are providing financial inducements to take away those freedoms and encourage intensive farming methods. The insertion of those words in the Bill is another such inducement.

Among the people who will benefit are those who operate battery cages. Those cages measure approximately 18 in × 20 in, and house five laying hens, each hen having a wingspan of about 32 inches. It is an offence under the Protection of Birds Act 1954 to keep a bird in a cage where it cannot stretch its wings properly, but that does not apply to poultry. In addition, the hens cannot indulge in other natural behaviour such as nesting, dust bathing and scratching at the earth. Instead, they stand on wire mesh in their controlled environment housing, and never see the light of day. As the Farm Animal Welfare Council said,

"the extreme confinement in a physically barren environment denies or seriously restricts the birds' freedom to express natural patterns of behaviour. The birds may be subjected to chronic discomfort."

Those who do that will benefit under the clause as drafted.

Those who use veal crates will also benefit. Veal calves are kept in appalling conditions, in solitary wooden crates, in which bedding is denied. The shed is kept in semi-darkness. The calves are fed an unnatural diet: a high fat, low iron milk mixture, solely for the purpose of producing white meat.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food said in 1983 that her welfare code for cattle would get rid of the crate, but it has not. In that same year, Compassion in World Farming, to which I pay tribute for the work that it does, lost a test case in the courts although it showed that some 600 calves were chained by the neck and unable to exercise or even turn round. They could not stretch out their limbs when lying down, had no straw to lie on and were fed on an all-liquid diet devoid of fibre, which is essential to ruminant animals. Although the organisation produced that evidence, it lost in court because the code is not enforceable under the law.

Those who keep pigs in dire and unnatural conditions will also benefit. Straight after birth, the pigs are put into a dark box on a concrete floor with possibly no separate dunging area. The sows are ill-treated throughout their 16-week pregnancy in dry sow stalls or tether stalls. The dry sow stall is a cage with metal bars which is just large enough to hold one sow. In this cage the sow stands on concrete unable to take more than one step forward or one back. The sows are generally tethered by a girth strap or chain. I produce one here to show to the House as an example of the type of horrendous monstrosity that is used. I have the authority of Mr. Speaker to produce it tonight and I thank him for allowing me to show the House this terrible object. Some 2,000 sows are tethered under these conditions. I would not even wish to see the worst Tory Member wearing such a girth and it should not be used on a pregnant sow.

10.15 pm

The sows are kept in a barren environment against their natural instincts and are physically and mentally deprived. The Select Committee on Agriculture stated in 1981

"notice should be given that close confinement would be phased out over a reasonable but defined period . . . financial grants should be so directed as to provide positive support to producers using the small group system; they should not be given to those using the close confinement methods which we have criticised."

This part of the Finance Bill flies in the face of the recommendations made in that Select Committee on Agriculture report. What is worse, the Bill actually encourages the opposite. It encourages more farmers to adopt these cruel methods of intensive farming. It is not just intensive farming methods which will receive a tax boost under this clause. Intensive farming relates to the environment. For example, slurry tanks are used instead of a natural mixture of dung and straw which makes up a healthy manure compost. There is no straw in the tanks and the contents of a slurry tank are put on the land, very possibly containing disease and making the local air unbreatheable for local residents. Slurry tanks are known to leak and pollute local rivers and streams.

The system is also bad for human health. As consumers, we eat the food produced on intensive farms. We eat meat which has been pumped with fat and hormones and the animals are more likely to be in a state of ill-health. That ill-health can be transferred to us and is a factor in the excessive rate of heart disease that exists in this country. The public realise this, and that is why the trend is for more naturally produced food. That goes against the prevailing official ideology and the hard sell by producers.

Intensive farming methods, which the clause encourages, are in themselves appallingly wasteful. They are especially wasteful in terms of jobs in the face of the current level of high rural unemployment. Factory farming is essentially a labour saving device. So essentially, through their tax allowances for intensive farming methods, the Government are providing allowances for farmers to set against labour costs which encourages rural employment.

Intensive farming is also wasteful in land use. Much arable land is turned into prairies of barley grown specifically for animal feed. Alongside that, it is wasteful in Third world terms because intensive farming animals do not graze in fields. Their food has to come to them rather than the other way round. Much of that is imported from countries which can ill afford to produce it. In 1984 when the famine in Ethiopia was at its height, the United Kingdom imported £1·5 million of animal feed stuffs to feed the intensively farmed animals in the United Kingdom. That is a scandalous disgrace. On top of that, the meat is subsequently accumulated in the common market food mountains. That is a disgrace.

Many farmers, however, use humane methods. They do not want to use battery cages, crates and stalls. They allow animals in their care to conform to their natural behaviour patterns. Those farmers are true husbanders. They prefer not to practise intensive farming but often find themselves under pressure because of the financial inducements and incentives for intensive methods which are dangled before them. This part of the Finance Bill is another example of that. It is the Government's responsibility or irresponsibility which is the key factor in farmers' decisions in this respect. The Government should encourage natural farming methods through their tax allowances rather than the opposite which is their policy at present.

The Labour party intends to encourage more natural production. A resolution passed unanimously at the last Labour conference states:

"This Conference calls on the National Executive Committee to draw up a programme to introduce a controlled reduction in intensive farming methods in Britain, and also to start planning a programme of alternative, natural, ecologically acceptable and more humane methods of farming to return more workers to the land, which can realistically be encouraged and introduced by the next Labour Government."

Mr. Gow: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Cohen: I have nearly finished. I have only one more line to go.

Hon. Members: Give way.

Mr. Gow: Since the hon. Gentleman has given the text of a resolution passed at the last Labour party conference, could he remind the House of how many votes were cast in favour of the resolution and how many against it?

Mr. Cohen: I think that the resolution was passed unanimously, but I can check that immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. That is not relevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Cohen: I accept your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker. That is a worthwhile resolution for a future Labour Government which I hope will be improved on at future Labour party conferences. When it is implemented, Labour Treasury Ministers will not allow their Finance Bills to boost factory farming, as is the case with this Bill.

Mr. Tony Blair (Sedgefield): The House will welcome the opportunity afforded by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) in his amendment to have a brief debate on these important matters. I should like to pay tribute to my hon. Friend, who has been a vigorous campaigner for animal welfare and rights since he came to the House.

Two questions arise when we consider taxation in relation to intensive farming. First, do we wish to encourage intensive farming? Secondly, if we conclude that we do not wish to encourage intensive farming — the weight of evidence is on that side — is it right that the taxation system should encourage it?

Various reports, not merely Government-sponsored reports but also a report of the Agriculture Select Committee in 1981, have been virtually unanimous in their desire to move away from intensive farming. Indeed, the Brambell report commissioned by the Government reported in 1965 and recommended five basic freedoms. They included the freedom of movement, to be able to get up and turn around, for an animal to groom itself, to lie down and to stretch its limbs. We are now 20 years on and none of those is enshrined in statute.

The articles of the European Convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes makes specific reference to the welfare of animals which are kept under intensive farming conditions. Article 3 states:

"Animals should be housed and provided with food, water and care in a manner which—having regard to their species and to their degree of development, adaptation and domestication — is appropriate to their physiological and ecological needs in accordance with established experience and scientific knowledge."

A Select Committee report in 1981 recommended in relation to the three main items of intensive farming that there should be an early end to veal calf rearing in crates, measures to end the close confinement of sows and the phasing out of battery hens over a five-year period.

Again, it is fair to say that little has been achieved in relation to those specific recommendations. If one studies the answers to parliamentary questions, even as recently as April 1986, it is clear that in relation to veal crates and battery hens there has been little progress.

It is right to ask the Chief Secretary to explain what are the Government's policies. The Government are not merely signatories to the European Convention. EEC council directives have discussed the welfare of animals which are reared in intensive farming conditions. It is a little difficult not to reach the conclusion that legislation in this respect is long on aspirations but that the Government are short on the action needed to turn those aspirations into reality. The only firm legislation in this area is the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968. That set out, as an offence, the causing of unnecessary pain or distress to animals. I should like to know how many prosecutions there have been because of that legislation — I suspect precious few. I suspect that agricultural Ministers are curiously reluctant to vigorously prosecute.

There is a wide body of scientific and public opinion which considers some aspects of intensive farming as unacceptable. The European Convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes is against it. The Select Committee on Agriculture and many hon. Members are opposed to such farming. Indeed, the Government are committed to taking action on animal welfare and intensive farming. It is reasonable to conclude, therefore, that the House and Government's of all political persuasions are committed to action. What should be the taxation position in relation to intensive farming?

At the present time, I understand that there are extra statutory concessions which have the effect of giving capital allowance relief to intensive farming. The purpose of the provisions in clause 56 is to replace the extra statutory concessions with expressed laws written into section 68 of the Capital Allowances Act 1968.

[Mr. Tony Blair]

My hon. Friend the Member for Leyton has legitimately asked whether this is something we should encourage. If capital allowances are given, there is no doubt that it encourages such farming. There is no actual discrimination in favour of intensive farming but it has been pointed out in previous debates that if one was to change from crated veal to grass-fed veal one may buy or rent fields in order to feed that veal yet there is no tax relief available to do so. Such grass-fed veal production is a more acceptable type of farming. There are also taxation allowances available for industrial farming.

The Select Committee on Agriculture and frequent reports on this subject consider that the tax system should play some part in stating what the position of the public should be towards intensive farming. When the Chief Secretary replies, I trust that he will say whether he agrees with the recommendations of the 1981 Select Committee on Agriculture. That Committee asked that the Government should undertake a review of taxation to see if it was possible, through the taxation system, not merely to cease to encourage intensive farming but to find ways of discouraging it.

A short time ago I remember the Chief Secretary told us that it was in the interests of agriculture to diversify — we all agree on that. It is right that the Chief Secretary should state whether, as part of that diversification, he thinks that it is correct there should be a move away from intensive farming and towards a better system of farming which had been recommended on many occasions.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture is here and that he has been muttering away in the corner. I must point out to him that the Farm Animal Welfare Council, which is a Government sponsored body, has made it quite clear that many of the arguments that we have put forward this evening should have the support of the Government. I find it curious that the Minister should come to the House and mutter against them. We should have some sign of the Government's thinking.

This is a matter in regard to which Government action is lagging somewhat behind public opinion. There are growing consumer pressures, not to mention pressures from the animal welfare lobby, asking for a re-examination of the system of intensive farming and the relevant taxation. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton for raising this subject, and I hope that the Chief Secretary will shed some light on it.

10.30 pm

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. John MacGregor): I quite understand why the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) wishes to raise these matters, and I congratulate him on managing to initiate a debate on the Floor of the House as well as in Standing Committee. When we debated the matter in Committee, I warned him that, if we debated this again on the Floor of the House, I should have to focus on the narrow point regarding taxation.

I shall not go into the wider issues which the hon. Gentleman raised, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who is here and has listened to the debate, because I do not think that I should go into animal welfare, the rearing of livestock and the relevant regulations. These are matters on which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my hon. Friend the Member for Medway (Mrs. Fenner), often speaks in the House, and they are matters for her to respond to.

The hon. Member for Leyton said that, under clause 56, people with buildings that are used for intensive livestock production will get tax relief. He described it as another inducement, as though we are making a change and encouraging intensive livestock production by applying capital allowances to them. That is not true. He is labouring under a misapprehension. There have always been such allowances for these purposes. We are not changing the law in any way in regard to agricultural buildings allowances.

As the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) said, there has been an extra-statutory concession for many years. It has applied under successive Labour Governments. When we made a change in the agricultural buildings allowance—we are making a modest change in another direction in clause 56—it seemed appropriate to put the extra-statutory concession into primary legislation, as the House wishes, and not leave it as an extra-statutory concession.

We are merely applying the change in clause 56 and schedule 15 relating to balancing adjustments to buildings used for intensive livestock production, like all other agricultural buildings. We are not giving any extra incentives to intensive livestock rearing. If we accepted the amendment, we should reverse the practice of many years. That was never the point of clause 56 and schedule 15. If we want to debate their purpose, as the hon. Member for Sedgefield suggested, that would be a matter for a different occasion.

We should not make a major change to agricultural practices at this late stage in our consideration of the Finance Bill, and I cannot commend the amendment to the House.

Mr. Cohen: The issue will not go away and we will raise it again. Nevertheless, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Schedule 15

Agricultural Land and Buildings

Mr. MacGregor: I beg to move amendment No. 109, in page 172, line 20, leave out 'with' and insert 'on the first day of'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): With this it will be convenient to consider Government amendments Nos. 110, 111 and 112.

Mr. MacGregor: Schedule 15 includes a set of rules that govern the amount of the annual allowance that is to be given to the vendor and purchaser when there is a sale or other transfer of the relevant interest in the agricultural or forestry land on which the qualifying building or works stand, but no election for a balancing adjustment is made. In cases of this kind, the purchaser takes over the balance of allowances to which the vendor would otherwise have been entitled.

Although the rules as presently drafted would be adequate to deal with many such sales or transfers, our attention has been drawn to the fact that the present wording will give rise to difficulty when, for example, one unincorporated farmer sells to another unincorporated farmer who has a different accounting date.

In such cases, the rules as they stand are not as clear as they might be on the amount of allowances which the two parties to the transaction should receive at the time of the change of ownership. An additional long-term effect could be that full relief for the original capital expenditure might not have been given to the purchaser by the end of the 25-year writing-down period.

This is an area of considerable technical difficulty, but we believe that the proposed amendments, although somewhat lengthy, will put matters right.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 110, in page 174 , leave out lines 11 to 16 and insert

'the former owner shall not be entitled to an allowance under this Schedule for any chargeable period of his after that related to the acquisition and the new owner shall be entitled to allowances under this Schedule for the chargeable period of his related to the acquisition and for subsequent chargeable periods falling within the writing-down period.

(1A) If, in a case falling within sub-paragraph (1) above, the date of the acquisition occurs during a chargeable period of the former owner or its basis period, he shall be entitled only to an appropriate portion of an allowance for the chargeable period related to the acquisition and, similarly, if the date of the acquisition occurs during a chargeable period of the new owner or its basis period, he shall be entitled only to an appropriate portion of an allowance for the chargeable period (of his) related to the acquisition'.

No. 111, in page 174, in line 18, leave out 'sub-paragraph (1) and insert 'sub-paragraphs (1) and (1A).

No. 112, in page 174, line 41, at end insert—

Securities: Amendments of Finance Act 1985

Amendments made: No. 113, in page 191, line 2, leave out '(5)' and insert '(6)'.

No. 114, in page 191, leave out from beginning of line 3 to end of line 8 on page 192 and insert—

'(2) In sub-paragraphs (2) and (3) for "the unrealised interest" there shall be substituted "amount A".

(3) For sub-paragraph (4) there shall be substituted—

"(4) Where the transferee receives an amount by way of the unrealised interest (amount B) and that amount falls to be taken into account in computing tax charged for the chargeable period in which it is received, it shall for the purposes of the Tax Acts be treated as reduced by an amount (amount C) equal to —

(a) nil, if amounts have been previously received by the transferee by way of the unrealised interest and their aggregate is equal to or greater than the value (on the day of the transfer to the transferee) of the right to receive the unrealised interest,

(b) amount B, if that value is equal to or greater than amount B (aggregated with other amounts previously so received, if any),

(c) that value, if no amount has been previously so received and that value is less than amount B, or

(d) so much of that value as exceeds the aggregate of amounts previously so received, in any other case."

(4) In sub-paragraph (7) for "the amount of the unrealised interest" there shall be substituted "amount A".

(5) In sub-paragraph (7A) for "the amount of the unrealised interest" there shall be substituted "amount C".

(6) The following shall be substituted for sub-paragraph (8)—

"(8) In this paragraph 'amount A' means, in case where the transferor acquired the securities by a transfer on or after 28th February 1986 with the right to receive unrealised interest, —

(a) an amount equal to amount D less amount E, or

(b) if amount D is equal to or less than amount E, nil

(9) In this paragraph 'amount A' means, in a case not falling within sub-paragraph (8) above, an amount equal to amount D.

(10) In this paragraph 'amount D' is an amount equal to the value (on the day of the transfer by the transferor) of the right to receive the unrealiaed interest.

(11) In this paragraph 'amount E' means, in a case where the transferor (as transferee) has received in respect of the securities an amount or amounts falling within sub-paragraph (4) above,—

(a) an amount equal to amount F less the total received, or

(b) if amount F is equal to or less than the total received, nil.

(12) In this paragarph 'amount E' means, in any other case, an amount equal to amount F.

(13) In this paragraph 'amount F' means an amount equal to the value (on the day of the transfer to the transferor) of the right to receive the unrealised interest.

(14) In determining for the purposes of this paragraph which securities of a particular kind a person has transferred, he is to be taken to have transferred securities of that kind which he acquired later before securities of that kind which he acquired earlier.

(15) Where the unrealised interest is payable in a currency other than sterling—

(a) any amount received by way of the interest is for the purpose of this paragraph the sterling equivalent on the day it is received of the amount it would be apart from this sub-paragraph, and

[Mr. MacGregor]

(b) the value (on the day of a transfer) of the right to receive the interest is for the purposes of this paragraph the sterling equivalent (on that day) of the value it would be apart from this sub-paragraph;

and for this purpose the sterling equivalent is to be calculated by reference to the London closing rate of exchange for the day concerned.".'.—[Mr. MacGregor.]

INHERITANCE TAX

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: I beg to move amendment No. 115, in page 201, line 9, leave out 'otherwise than as settled property'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take the following amendments:

No. 116, in page 201, leave out lines 14 and 15.

No. 117, in page 201, line 32, after 'provision', insert 'other than section 52'.

No. 120, in page 205, line 20, leave out paragraphs 13 and 14.

No. 203, in page 205, line 26, at end insert—

'13A. After Section 52 there shall be inserted the following section—

"52A. (1). This section applies to a transfer of value of settled property where:—

(a) by virtue of a potentially exempt transfer made after 18th March 1986 ('the original transfer') a person other than the settlor ('the life tenant') becomes beneficially entitled to an interest in possession in the settled property immediately after the settlement commenced; and

(b) within seven years of the commencement of the settlement the life tenant's interest comes to an end whether during the life tenant's lifetime or on his death; and

(c) the transfer of value of the settled property then made ('the relevant transfer') is not a potentially exempt transfer or if the relevant transfer is made on the life tenant's death would not have been a potentially exempt transfer if it had been made during the life tenant's lifetime.

(2) Where this section applies the tax chargeable on the relevant transfer shall be the greater of:—

(a) the tax which would be chargeable on the relevant transfer apart from this section; and

(b) the tax which would have been chargeable on the original transfer if such transfer had not been a potentially exempt transfer less the tax (if any) which proves to be chargeable on the original transfer.

(3) References to the commencement of a settlement shall be construed in accordance with section 60 of this Act.".'.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: The Budget introduced a significant new departure in regard to the tax treatment of outright gifts: they will be entirely free of tax if the donor survives for seven years. That is intended to be, and will certainly constitute, a very strong encourgement to people with money or property to bequeath to hand it over well before they come to the end of their days. I feel some doubt about the extension of the period of risk to seven years, but the reform has been widely welcomed and is an important part of the Budget.

There is a matter of concern to many people who want to make prudent dispositions of their personal assets, including a number of my constituents in Kensington, not only people of very substantial personal wealth, but people with shares in family businesses or simply with spouses or dependants for whom they want to provide without running the risk that their assets after their time might be dissipated by immature or inexpert management.

The Government's proposals are also causing acute concern to the professional advisers who are responsible for helping such people, as I am sure my hon. Friend is well aware. This is because under the Budget proposals an element of discrimination is now introduced against trusts which create a life interest, technically called interest in possession trusts. This type of trust has been the classic vehicle for centuries for conveying family assets from generation to generation, and has played a recognised and entirely respectable part in maintaining continuity and stability in the control of personal wealth, including family businesses and agricultural estates.

To legislate in such a way as to put families that rely on this method of ensuring that their assets are competently managed and preserved over long spans of time would be entirely contrary to the Government's policy and damaging to the public interest. In disposing of their property, many people will now be advised to avoid the use of this sensible and satisfactory method of settlement; and trusts already in existence may be wound up prematurely when it would have been more prudent to have let them continue.

That, however, is the effect of what presently stands in the Bill. Outright gifts are to be made entirely free of tax if the donor lives for seven years, but if money is put into an interest in possession trust on the way to the very same beneficiary, or if it has already been put into such a trust, it will continue to be caught for tax on the transfer of the capital. This new departure is a breach of the established principle that outright gifts and gifts through interest in possession trusts should be treated on all fours for tax purposes.

Many people have relied on that principle and with good reason. The Capital Transfer Tax Act of 1984 makes the point in section 49, which provides:

"A person beneficially entitled to an interest in possession in settled property shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as beneficially entitled to the property in which the interest subsists."

The Act was merely repeating, without any change, the provisions of schedule 5 to the Finance Act 1975. That provision has thus been part of statute law for a considerable number of years and many people have relied on it. There could not be a more specific statement in statute that outright gifts and interests in possession trusts are seen as having equal tax status.. Many trusts have been set up in reliance on that statement. Now the settlors find, retrospectively, that they appear to have made a mistake.

The matter was raised in Committee on 10 June by my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell), but his amendments were rejected with a somewhat far-fetched argument from my hon. Friend the Minister. He introduced the bogey of a man of straw, who he felt might be brought into the matter to assist in creating a tax fiddle. Professional people who know this subject well found this suggestion surprising. In so far as there is a risk to the Inland Revenue, it could easily be overcome. My amendments include a provision that would make it profitless to bring a man of straw into the sequence of beneficiaries. There would be no risk that the donor could get money into a discretionary trust on the cheap, which is what my hon. Friend is afraid of. Other answers could no doubt be devised, but I recommend amendment No. 203 as the simple answer to the bogey that the man of straw might give rise to undesirable tax avoidance.

The tax implications of my proposal would be very small, if not nil, for the simple reason that people with assets to transfer will now take advantage of the freedom from tax available through outright gifts, and will cease to use the sensible and hitherto widely used device of an interest in possession trust. To leave the Bill as it stands would be pointlessly damaging and entirely unnecessary. I have tabled, with the benefit of highly professional advice, amendments that would restore the status of interest in possession trusts without opening up any risk of a new type of tax abuse. I hope therefore that the Treasury will accept my amendments.

Mr. Brooke: My hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) has returned to the specific subject of trusts which we discussed in Committee. It was good of him to welcome the main thrust of the Government's provisions in this sector. Amendments Nos. 115, 116, 117 and 120 seek to exempt lifetime transfers into and out of interest in possession trusts from an immediate tax charge—that is, to make them potentially exempt transfers in the same way as transfers between individuals. Thus, they cover much the same ground as more detailed amendments on the same topic that were discussed in Committee, when I explained in some detail why the Government were unable to accept the amendments.

We believe that an effective trust regime must be retained as protection for the death charge. Without it, inheritance tax would become a voluntary tax and we do not intend to allow that to happen. As I explained, we have decided to retain the existing trust regime for that purpose. It was introduced in 1982 after extensive consultation and has become widely accepted as a proper method of changing trusts. We believe that it must be kept intact if it is to remain effective.

In particular, we believe that we must retain the charges that affect interests in possession. Trust interests can easily be altered, and if we exempted transfers involving interests in possession without substantial new anti-avoidance provisions we should greatly assist those who already regard the trust regime as a major factor in their tax planning. Although my hon. Friend expressed disbelief in the man of straw, there is no doubt that that is a potential device for circumventing the death charge and the intent that lies behind the Government's present legislation.

Our decision has been criticised as a departure from the capital transfer tax concept of giving interests in possession parity of treatment with outright ownership. That was a conscious decision and I make no apology for it. Capital transfer tax has now gone. The Government's purpose in changing to inheritance tax is to remove obstacles to unfettered lifetime giving while protecting the death charge. My hon. Friend was good enough to praise the basic intent.

Trust giving may now be more expensive than unfettered outright giving. But trusts are no worse off than they were under capital transfer tax; indeed, they may do rather better, because absolute gifts outside the period of seven years before the donor's death will not now influence the trust tax rates. If we had proceeded differently so as to keep slavishly to the old concept of parity, we would have needed to create a new trust regime with a complicated network of anti-avoidance measures. We believe that that would have been unwelcome, not least because it might well have made trust giving more expensive.

My hon. Friend then referred to amendment No. 203 and indicated that it would provide a device to respond to the Government's misgivings about providing relief to the trust regime in this area. Amendment No. 203 attempts to counter the trust-based avoidance that could occur if interests in possession were treated in the same way as outright interests. It seeks to provide that if property passes through an interest in possession trust into a discretionary trust, the rate of tax payable when the discretionary trust comes into existence will be that which would have been applicable to the original CTT law. In principle, obviously this is a sound approach if one accepts that the old capital transfer tax parity should be retained, but, as I explained, Ministers do not accept that.

Even on its own merits, amendment No. 203 is not sufficiently refined. It fails to deal with the routeing of property through a temporary interest in possession for a spouse or with any other case where the original transfer into trust exploits an inheritance tax exempt transfer provision. It expires illogically after seven years. It creates anomalies and it fails to address such issues as the effect on cumulations. It may have been unintentional, but it even starts a day too late—after 18 March instead of on 18 March.

I mention these things to illustrate the point that I made both in Standing Committee and a moment ago that a panoply of legislation would be needed to prevent avoidance if we were to adopt the approach proposed by the amendments. My hon. Friend is an example to the whole House in the manner in which he goes into these things. He may care to consider the detailed supportive provisions that apply when conditional exemption of heritage property is clawed back. They are in sections 33 and 34 of the Capital Transfer Tax Act 1984 which are amended by schedule 19.

A simple provision drafted on to existing legislation would not do. It would be necessary to undertake a major review and revision of all the trust provisions in the inheritance tax legislation and to construct a fresh code, complete with appropriate anti-avoidance provisions. Even if my hon. Friend were able to consider sections 33 and 34, I do not promise him that all the complications would be dealt with. That road would be complicated. We have decided not to go down it. For that reason, I ask my hon. Friends to reject the amendment.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: This short debate has served a useful purpose, because it has elicited from the

[Sir Brandon Rhys Williams]

Treasury a more specific argument than that which we had in the Standing Committee in support of the Government's intention. We should all be grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the trouble that he has taken to analyse the reasons as precisely as he has. As he is aware, he has left himself open to the extensive correspondence that will inevitably follow when people have had time to consider all that he has said. For the time being, I thank him for taking the matter so seriously. In view of his remarks, especially those concerning my amendment No. 203, I will not press the matter. However, I hope that, in due course, the House will consider it again. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

GIFTS WITH RESERVATION

Amendments made: No. 136A, in page 219, line 22, leave out 'under the principal section'.

No. 202, in page 219, line 45, at end insert—

'Agricultural property and business property

8.—(1) Where there is a disposal by way of gift of property which, in relation to the donor, is at that time—

(a) relevant business property within the meaning of Chapter I of Part V of the 1984 Act, or

(b) agricultural property, within the meaning of Chapter II of that Part, to which section 116 of that Act applies, or

(c) shares or securities to which section 122(1) of that Act applies (agricultural property of companies), and that property is property subject to a reservation, then, subject to the following provisions of this paragraph, any question whether, on the material transfer of value, relief is available by virtue of Chapter I or Chapter II of Part V of the 1984 Act and, if so, what is the appropriate percentage for the relief shall be determined as if, so far as it is attributable to the property comprised in the gift, that transfer were a transfer of value by the donee.

(2) For the purpose only of determining whether, on the transfer of value which, by virtue of sub-paragraph (1) above, the donee is assumed to make, the requirement of section 106 or, as the case may be, section 117 of the 1984 Act (minimum period of ownership or occupation) is fulfilled,—

(a) ownership by the donor prior to the disposal by way of gift shall be treated as ownership by the donee; and

[Sir Brandon Rhys Williams]

(b) occupation by the donor prior to the disposal and any occupation by him after that disposal shall be treated as occupation by the donee.

(3) Where the property disposed of by the gift consists of shares or securities falling within paragraph (c) of sub-paragraph (1) above, that sub-paragraph shall not apply unless—

(a) section 116 of the 1984 Act applied in relation to the value transferred by the disposal, and

(b) throughout the period beginning with the disposal and ending on the material date, the shares or securities are owned by the donee, and for the purpose only of determining whether, on the transfer of value which, by virtue of sub-paragraph (1) above, the donee is assumed to make, the requirements of subsection (1) of section 123 of the 1984 Act are fulfilled, it shall be assumed that the requirement in paragraph (b) of that subsection (as to the ownership of the shares or securities) is fulfilled.

(4) In this paragraph, "the material transfer of value" means, as the case may require,—

(a) the transfer of value under section 4 of the 1984 Act on the death of the donor; or

(b) the transfer of value under subsection (4) of the principal section on the property concerned ceasing to be subject to a reservation.

(5) If the donee dies before the material transfer of value, then, as respects any time after his death, any reference in the preceding provisions of this paragraph to the donee shall be construed as a reference to his personal representatives or, as the case may require, the person (if any) by whom the property, shares or securities concerned were taken under a testamentary disposition made by the donee or under his intestacy (or partial intestacy).'.—[Mr. MacGregor.]

10.51 pm

Mr. MacGregor: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Mr. Terry Davis: It is interesting that the Chief Secretary to the Treasury should move the Third Reading so briefly. I was prepared for him to make a longer speech. However, it was not necessary, because there is so little in the Bill. I am glad that, at long last, he has conceded that the Budget is irrelevant and that the Bill is uninteresting. There has been a tacit admission that we were right.

However, some things have changed since the Budget and, therefore, the Bill—not least of which is the fall in the price of oil. We were told that the Budget and the Bill were based on the assumption that oil would be $15 a barrel for the rest of the year. It is now $9 a barrel. There has been a change in unemployment. Unemployment has risen by 60,000 since the Budget.

Everywhere we look we see that the Government's strategy is in tatters. I am not surprised that the Chief Secretary did not wish to draw attention to that by seeking to make a speech when he moved the Third Reading of the Bill.

Mr. MacGregor: It was not my intention not to make a speech, because I am proud of the Bill. I thought that the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) wanted to make progress. As I said at the start of our Second Reading debate over two months ago, the Bill continues the Government's progress in reducing the burden of taxation and reforming the tax system, despite the constraint of an unprecedented fall in oil revenues. That achievement demonstrates the underlying resilience of the economy, the limited extent to which we now need to rely on the North Sea sector, and the value of the prudent financial and economic policies that we have pursued.

The main tax reduction in the Bill is the cut in the basic rate to 29p—the first such reduction since 1979. This improves incentives for over 20 million people of working age, and is a further step towards the long-term objective of a basic rate of no more than 25 per cent., to which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor referred in his Budget speech. The higher rate threshold changes have been structured in such a way that the benefit of this year's basic rate cut is concentrated around the middle of the income distribution.

The Bill incorporates a number of other important tax measures—the introduction of personal equity plans; the restructuring of stamp duty; and the introduction of a generous package of reliefs to encourage charitable giving. Those measures have been widely welcomed in the charity field. The change from capital transfer tax to inheritance tax, with the abolition of the immediate tax change on lifetime gifts between individuals, will be of particular benefit to family firms and family farms.

We had a very constructive and worthwhile Committee stage. During our scrutiny of the Bill, we made helpful technical changes and also a number of changes that went wider than that. Most hon. Members will be aware of those changes, and I shall not elaborate upon them. The House has considered a large number of technical and other amendments in response to representations that were made in Committee and it now wishes to make progress. The Bill reflects the Government's taxation objectives. It was thoroughly worth while in its original form, and it has benefited from careful and constructive consideration. Therefore, I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Channel Tunnel Bill

10.55 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Transport (Mr. David Mitchell): I beg to move,

That it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Channel Tunnel Bill that it has power to consider alternatives to the provision which is now made in the Bill regarding the access to and egress from the terminal area by road, and that with respect to the access and egress from the terminal area by road it has power to make Amendments to the Bill if it thinks fit; and that any Petitions against such Amendments to the Bill presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office not later than 26th September, in which the Petitioners pray to be heard by themselves, their Counsel or Agents, be referred to the Committee.

I am happy to say that I shall not need to take up too much of the time of hon. Members in explaining the background to the somewhat narrow point that gives rise to tonight's debate. As with so many aspects of the Channel Tunnel proposals as they affect Folkestone, hon. Members will recognise the hand of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in terms of the matters that we are debating. Indeed, some will be familiar with that biblical quotation

"The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau."

In this case I have to admit that the voice is the voice of transport, but the hand is the hand of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe, who has pressed so strongly that the means of access to and egress from the Cheriton terminal should be altered in ways which find favour with his constituents.

As the House knows, the Channel Tunnel Bill was given a Second Reading on 5 June. In the early hours of 6 June, being a hybrid Bill it was committed for consideration to a Select Committee of Members of this House. The Select Committee was duly appointed, and on 24 June began to hear petitions from affected groups and individuals seeking amendments to the Bill, or assurances about their rights or interests.

Under the Bill's proposals, vehicular access to and from the M20 would take the form of a three-lane, dual carriageway road, approximately 1·7 km long, to the north-western corner of the terminal site. The villages of Frogholt and Newington would then lie between the terminal approach road and the motorway. The approach road would also pass between Newington and its sister village of Peene, although at this point, for a short length it would be constructed in cut and cover. This road to the terminal would also pass very close to Asholt wood, a wet wood, which is designated as a site of special scientific interest.

The construction of the approach roads would necessitate the acquisition of about 45 acres of agricultural land. A number of bodies and individuals petitioned the Select Committee in favour of certain changes to these arrangements for access to and egress from the terminal. These petitioners included Shepway district council, the authority within whose area the terminal site lies, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe, taking a special interest. The Kent county council and three other district councils in east Kent were also petitioners in this matter.

In seeking these changes, the petitioners have several objectives, including a reduction in the amount of open land required for the terminal, a reduction in the noise and disturbance in the villages of Newington, Peene and Frogholt and the provision of a means of encouraging visitors arriving at the terminal to visit Folkestone, Dover and east Kent instead of joining the M20 directly and heading for London and beyond.

I say in parenthesis that those who, like me, have had the good fortune to spend a number of days visiting this part of Kent have been impressed not only by the beauty and attractiveness of the constituency represented by my hon. and learned Friend but also by the number of fascinating things that there are in Folkestone and Dover to hold tourists there.

The hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape), who speaks for the Labour party tonight, chuckles. I am not sure whether he has spent the time that I have in Dover and appreciates the Crabble Mill, the Napoleonic staircase, the old Roman quay, which is unfortunately still covered by sand but which can be brought alive for tourists to see, as well as the Roman look-out point on the castle. There is a host of great attractions there.

In pursuit of their objectives, petitioners lodged suggested amendments to the terminal layout that would have enabled provision to be made in respect of the road exit at the eastern end of the site, that is, adjacent to Folkestone. These options became known as the eastern egress options.

To assist the Select Committee in its consideration of these and other proposals, a working group was set up to examine possible alternatives to the arrangements in the Bill. The group included representatives of the local authorities concerned, Eurotunnel and the Department of Transport, and it has now reported. Its conclusions are that none of the eastern egress proposals are feasible but that further alternatives suggested by the Shepway district council and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe is worthy of further examination.

The further alternatives would involve short entrance and exit roads on the south western edge of the site and would meet many, but not all, of the objections put forward by the petitioners. I should at this point reassure some hon. Members who may have been somewhat alarmed by a report in The Guardian on Wednesday 16 July. It suggested that a "motorway challenge may go to Europe".

It said that

"more than 400 residents in Cheriton, Kent, are threatening to take the Government to the European Court of Human Rights over a last-minute attempt to shift the motorway link for the Channel Tunnel."

I have to say that that is the proposal that was examined by the group and found to be defective and abandoned. It is not connected in any way by the proposition that would be considered if the House sees fit to allow the motion tonight.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): During the journeys that my hon. Friend the Minister has made through the county of Kent to which he has just referred, to an enthralled House, was he accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath)?

Mr. Mitchell: On a number of occasions——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The House is anxious to make progress with this matter. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman's intervention is very relevant or helpful, and I hope that the Minister will disregard it.

Mr. Gow: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Does not my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup represent part of the county of Kent, and did he not live in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken)? Is it not most relevant whether Members of this House should accompany Ministers when they make very important journeys of this kind?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the House will have regard to the motion before the House on an instruction to the Select Committee. I hope that right hon. and hon. Members will not challenge rulings from the Chair.

Mr. Mitchell: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) for having drawn attention to the visits that I have made to Kent. I should say that I have been accompanied on several occasions by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, who has taken a special interest in the environmental implications of the project.

I should say to the House at this stage that it is by no means clear that the compromise alternative proposed is superior to the option in the Bill. Eurotunnel has expressed reservations about the revised option and strongly favours the original layout. Nor have we yet heard from local people, who may well petition against alteration of the Bill's scheme.

Although the revised option would reduce the amount of land taken for the terminal, it would involve the acquisition of certain land not currently included in the Bill. For that reason, it is necessary to serve notice on land owners and tenants and to publish advertisements in the normal way so that those affected can petition against amendments to the Bill.

If the House approves the motion, it would be our intention to advertise the proposals from the beginning of August. The closing date for petitions laid down in the motion would give potential petitioners about eight weeks to present their petitions to the House. In the light of those petitions, the evidence which the Select Committee has already heard and the report of the working group, the Select Committee will be able to determine whether the amendments should be made.

The motion is relatively simple. The procedure was first used in connection with the Park Lane Improvement Bill in 1958, so we are not breaking new ground with House procedure. The motion would enable the Committee to respond positively to the petitions which it has already heard and at the same time ensure that all the facts are available and that local people have a chance to express their opinions. I commend the motion to the House.

11.5 pm

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): Like the Minister of State, I can be brief. The Opposition welcome the opportunity given to the people concerned to petition along the lines outlined by the motion, and give the motion their wholehearted support.

I issue an immediate disclaimer. I did not accompany the Minister on his travels—or perhaps travails would be a better description. For a Member representing Basingstoke, his geographical knowledge was extremely commendable.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): It is closer.

Mr. Snape: It is certainly closer than West Bromwich.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, who has only just started his speech. My hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) might be a little disconcerted, because I represent Hampshire, North-West.

Mr. Snape: Well, I knew that it was a long way from West Bromwich. I do not wish to comment on speeches from any other quarter, especially before they are made.

I hope, bearing in mind your strictures, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the House is not to be lectured by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) about the motion. Those of us who have the privilege of serving on the Select Committee which is examining these proposals—I shall not say anything about the Select Committee's work or I shall be ruled out of order—missed contributions from the Liberal party. They would have been welcome, given, as I understand it, that the minority parties were offered a place on the Committee but could not find the time, or perhaps did not have the inclination to serve on it. Before I arouse your understandable ire, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to say on behalf of the official Opposition, who are diligently represented on the Select Committee, how much we support and applaud the motion. I commend it to those of my hon. Friends who are concerned and interested enough to be present to support it.

11.8 pm

Mr. Keith Speed (Ashford): I start by declaring an interest in that I am a director of the Folkestone and District Water Company which may well be affected by these proposals. I welcome the motion, the instruction to the Select Committee which it contains and the proposals for alternative arrangements for access to and egress from the tunnel terminal which lie at the heart of the motion.

I should like to make it plain that I discused the matter in some detail with my hon. and learned Friend, and near neighbour, the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), who, as a Minister, is not able to speak in this debate. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has already paid a considerable tribute to the true author of the motion. My hon. and learned Friend has always identified the access proposals contained in the Bill as one of the most damaging aspects, and he has made it clear that eliminating the environmental damage associated with that feature of the published scheme is one of his highest priorities. He has worked very closely with the Shepway district council in striving to identify an acceptable alternative. I know that he takes the view that the proposal that has emerged from the joint working group is an acceptable alternative.

That view is shared by the all-party fixed link executive which Shepway district council has set up to consider these matters. But since this alternative has already been the subject of widespread misrepresentation — my hon. Friend the Minister referred to this — my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe has asked me to clarify certain aspects of these alternative proposals. The alternative would achieve the elimination of several specific consequences of the original proposals. It would save about 50 acres of countryside. It would avoid altogether Beachborough park and Asholt wood. It would eliminate the severance of Newington and Frogholt from Peene and the downs, which was a particularly objectionable feature of the original proposals.

But, contrary to some reports, the alternative would not involve the demolition of any property in Pine way or any other part of Cheriton or the Cherry garden area of Folkestone. It would not involve a third lane on the motorway east of the Cheriton roundabout. It would not involve the loss of any playing area attached to Harcourt primary school. It would not involve any work to the east of the Cheriton interchange. It would not bring traffic closer to the area of Cheriton and Cherry garden avenue.

Indeed, those places will continue to benefit from the reduction of traffic on the motorway in the vicinity of those areas, which is expected to be a result of the Channel tunnel proposal. The overall effect of the alternative proposal is clearly beneficial and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe and I commend it to the House. It is a further example of the way in which my hon. and learned Friend has been able to work for his constituents, and of the response from the Minister and the group that he has been chairing, because flexibility has been shown, and people have listened to those holding views.

The motion is a vindication of the Select Committee procedure. It proves that the Channel Tunnel Bill is not writ in stone. It can be and should be altered if a reasoned case is made, and I have every confidence that it will be. The motion also provides for adequate and reasonable time fo those who may be affected by the new proposals to petition and to make their views known to the Select Committee. I commend it to the House.

11.12 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I, too, on behalf of my party, welcome the motion. In response to a point made by the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape), I should say that I have no knowledge of offers made to minority parties collectively or specifically.

Mr. Snape: Perhaps I can assist the hon. Gentleman. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman has a habit of listening to the radio 4 programme "Any Questions", but two weeks ago one of his distinguished colleagues said on the programme that an offer was made and rejected. An alliance candidate from that part of the world was acting as an agent on behalf of many petitioners, and said, I believe, that he would be putting the alliance point of view to the Committee.

Mr. Hughes: I have no knowledge of any offers made. But the hon. Gentleman is correct to say that one of our candidates is participating professionally in the Select Committee's proceedings. However, I do not propose to go into that as we are debating the motion, and the alternatives that it opens up. I have read the minutes of evidence given to the Select Committee, and I understand that the eastern exit proposal which the Minister rightly referred to, upset many people. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) was correct in all that he said—that is more a matter of opinion than of fact. But there was great concern about the eastern exit and the lack of consultation about it. Representations have been made to the Select Committee expressing the opposition of local residents. The motion permits consideration of an alternative route—made as a result of the efforts of the working group, to which the Minister referred — containing a better set of proposals, particularly better in terms of their environmental impact.

Mr. Bob Hayward (Kingswood): The hon. Gentleman described some of the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) as matters of opinion rather than matters of fact. Will he identify those areas which he believes to be opinion rather than fact?

Mr. Hughes: I was dealing, for example, with the effects on housing and the school at Cheriton. A great deal of evidence about the original proposal was presented by local people suggesting not that the housing or school would have to disappear but simply that there would be an environmentally harmful effect because of the nearness of the road alignment. Thus, the assertion that there would be no effect on the people in the area must be a matter of opinion. I was not disagreeing with the hon. Member for Ashford about his contention under the original proposal, but there would be no need to pull down or replace schools or houses.

Mr. Speed: I chose my words with care. I echo the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) in that the hon. Gentleman cannot challenge anything that I said on fact. There will, undeniably, be environmental effects on the area. We believe, as does the hon. Gentleman, that they will be ameliorated by the latest proposals. My remarks about schools and playing areas were matters of fact. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to challenge them, he should do so in detail.

Mr. Hughes: I am not challenging the hon. Gentleman's assertion that there would be no direct effect on housing or schools. The assertions about the original proposals were always about their environmental impact on the sites that the hon. Gentleman described. So whereas there may be no disagreement between us about the direct effect on the housing or schools, there may be some disagreement between us on the environmental impact on the communities concerned.

The major advantage of the motion is that it provides us with an opportunity to adopt a different exit scheme, one to which members of my party and others have contributed. The new scheme is the working group's preferred proposal, for it was clear that the original north-west and the eastern exit plan would have damaged the environment.

The problem is that, despite the motion and any amended instruction to the Select Committee, the original proposal could still be approved. I hope that we shall not find that, despite an apparent degree of flexibility in this matter, there will be an ultimate unwillingness to take into account the environmental concerns that have been expressed about the alternative exit proposals.

Now that alternatives may be considered, I hope that we shall end up with the least environmentally damaging proposal. The recent working party proposal—it is still at an early stage of public knowledge— could have that result. But the Minister will agree that it too has not been fully tested and that it is not clear whether, at the end of the day, it will prove to be the best option. On the evidence and knowledge that I have at present, however, it would appear to be preferable.

The Government's return to the House this evening to amend the instructions to the Committee manifests above all the haste with which the entire operation was conducted from the beginning. The Bill, and the inquiry into it by the Select Committee, was based on a rapidly changing set of proposals that had not been fleshed out. I hope that the Minister will accept that had there been more time, the amendment to the instructions would have been anticipated. There had been little time for the alternative exits to be canvassed and examined. One of the consequences of the speed with which the Government have proceeded — the pace has been their choice and they have heard dissent expressed by my right hon. and hon. Friends, Labour Members and Conservative Back Benchers—is the need to alter the ground rules for the Select Committee at this stage. Had there been more time, the need to alter them could have been anticipated before the Government proceeded and the further instruction would not have been necessary.

Mr. Roger Moate (Faversham): If the hon. Gentleman is complaining about the lack of time for consideration of these matters, why did his party vote against the setting up of a public inquiry? I presume that the hon. Gentleman did so as a representative of his party.

Mr. Hughes: My party did not vote against the setting up of a public inquiry. My hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) argued — there have been several debates on these matters and his speech is recorded in the Official Report—that there should be a short public inquiry. If I recollect correctly, he suggested specifically that the inquiry could be completed in about 20 days. That was his original view.

Mr. David Mitchell: The hon. Gentleman is complaining about the pace with which the Government are proceeding with this measure and yet at the same time he is advocating that there should be a public inquiry into a major project that will be completed within 20 days.

Mr. Hughes: The Minister is mischievously misrepresenting what I said. He might like me to have said that but he knows that I did not. He knows that my party would not have proceeded from the beginning in the way that the Government did. We would have had—this is our policy for all major proposals and projects, such as Sizewell as well as the Channel Tunnel — a public inquiry at the very beginning to determine the matter of principle.

The Government decided that the project should not be the subject of a public inquiry and that it would be governed by the timetable that had been agreed with the French. Having made that decision, the only argument left for the House to enter into—we did so in a debate that continued all through the night and I was present to ensure that the Liberal amendment, which was reached at five o'clock in the morning, was moved and discussed—was the need for maximum public participation in the work of the Select Committee. The Minister served throughout that long night and he will remember that it was my argument that the petitioners should have an opportunity to put their case as fully as possible. Tonight's proposals widen that opportunity, but they are none the less evidence of the haste with which the Government moved generally. It has been necessary for the Government to return to the House, because they failed to anticipate everything at the beginning.

Mr. Hayward: Does the hon. Gentleman recall the occasion when the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross), the official spokesman —

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that what the hon. Gentleman is about to say will be relevant to the motion, otherwise he should not make his remarks. We are getting away from the motion and I hope that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) will get closer to the terms of the motion. Mr. Simon Hughes.

Mr. Hughes: I am trying to complete my remarks, but there have been several diverting interventions.

I hope that, as a result of this extension of the powers of the Select Committee, there will be consideration not just of the land needed for access to and egress from the tunnel entrance but also a revision of the total land requirements. There is some dissent about the amount of land required for the whole proposal. There is also a belief that Eurotunnel may not require all the land currently available to it. I hope that the flexibility that will be given —which, in principle, is a good thing—will also allow the Committee and in due course the House to ensure that we are not handing over more land to the project than is needed. We are worried that the Bill provides for too much land to be affected by the proposal. Obviously, the harmful envirommental impact must be reduced as far as possible.

After studying the wording of the instruction, one remaining question must be asked. As I understand it, the second clause states in relation to the Committee

"with respect to the access to and the egress from the terminal area by road it has power to make Amendments to the Bill if it thinks fit;"

I would be grateful if the Minister would confirm that that gives the Committee considerably wider powers than those required to incorporate any of the material amendments now being considered before the Committee, for example the Working Group proposal, and that the Committee now has a completely wide and open brief with regard to the amendments. As well as giving the Committee flexibility to examine the alternative proposals for exit and entrance, which are the products of the joint working group, the instruction gives the Committee an open book in considering all other possible entrances and exits and all other amendments. The instruction allows a wide opportunity for amendment to the Bill.

On a matter of precedence and of information, I should be grateful if the Minister could explain whether the consequence of the instruction—if it is passed—is that any and every amendment made by the Committee within the terms of the instruction will be acceptable if the Committee so wish it. That would permit a much wider scope for the Bill than the number and specific content of the clauses in the Bill presently before the House.

I repeat that the motion is welcome. It appears to have all party support and I hope that it will assist the Committee in its deliberations. Above all, I hope that it will produce an opportunity for the least environmental damage in Kent, which is a beautiful county, as the Minister well knows. I hope that the instruction will allow the Committee to consider more effectively the best and newest proposal to come before it, as to the place for best access and egress to the tunnel contained in the proposals in the Bill.

11.28 pm

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I will be brief because I know that some of my hon. Friends have journeys to make home to Kent tonight along roads which are far from good.

Before I proceed, I think it is appropriate for a Tory Member to comment briefly on the contribution made by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). On the Conservative Benches it seems that the alliance parties are trying to have their cake and eat it. They voted to a man but one — the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) — who represents a channel port in favour of the project while the "candidate" — as the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey referred to him, is trying to make considerable political capital in Folkestone at the expense of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Rees), by purporting to be against the proposals. It appears that the alliance cannot have it both ways at once. As my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) has said, that might explain the alliance's absence from the Select Committee. This is a serious matter for Kent and the Conservative party and the Labour party are taking the matter very seriously. I hope that we shall hear no more from the hon. Gentleman. The House will have registered the fact that the candidacy has been declared, and we assume that the Liberal representative will from now on record his election expenses properly.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will allow me to correct myself. Although I may have said "candidate", clearly I meant the prospective candidate. The hon. Gentleman asked me to say this on a previous occasion, and I gladly repeat it now: the Liberal party and the SDP have always believed — the hon. Gentleman must not misrepresent that — that there should be a Channel tunnel. That has always been our position. It is the method of arriving at decisions that has always been the matter of contention.

Mr. Gale: I am extremely grateful to the hon. Gentleman, because there was some equivocation from the alliance on that matter.

In a spirit of complete conciliation, may I welcome the motion, especially its breadth and scope. We hope that the words,

"that it be an instruction to the Committee on the Channel Tunnel Bill that it has power to consider alternatives to the provision which is now made in the Bill regarding the access to and egress from the terminal area by road", will include not only the immediate access but the access from the Thanet towns. We look forward to welcoming with an open mind my hon. Friend the Minister of State to Thanet, and I know that he received a good welcome in Folkestone and Dover. We also look forward to welcoming the Select Committee to the Thanet towns. We have no doubt that its members will go away suitably enlightened and that there will be further amendments to the Bill.

11.32 pm

Mr. Roger Moate (Faversham): I join those hon. Members who congratulated my hon. Friend the Minister of State on his lyrical exposition of his travels round Kent. May I say how much we genuinely appreciate the work that he has done. We know the efforts that he has made to understand local worries, and we look forward to the publication of "Mitchell's Rural Rides" with great interest. The motion is an attempt to introduce flexibility into the procedures and to deal with alternatives. I welcome the motion, but I hope that my hon. Friend can elaborate on one or two points.

May I take up some points that were made earlier in the debate—since they were made, they were presumably in order — by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). Some of us view with considerable — one uses one's language carefully — abhorrence — [Interruption.] I cannot use the word "humbug" because it is unparliamentary, is it not, Mr. Deputy Speaker? Perhaps I could call it the ambivalent attitude of the Liberal party——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No; "humbug" is all right.

Mr. Moate: I am pleased about that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because no word is more appropriate to describe the attitude of the alliance on this issue. The parties play one tune locally and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey plays a completely different tune here. Yet when he speaks in such debates he tries to pretend that it is the same tune. He and his Liberal colleagues voted against a public inquiry. On Second Reading, the Labour party tabled an amendment which declined to give the Bill a Second Reading on the ground that there had been no public inquiry, and the hon. Gentleman—assuming that he was here — voted against it. Yet now he complains that the options have not been sufficiently considered.

Mr. Snape: Unusually for the hon. Gentleman, he is not being quite fair to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), who has been entirely consistent. As that hon. Gentleman said tonight, the alliance is wholeheartedly in favour of this project, except where there are votes to be garnered locally by opposing it.

Mr. Moate: I am glad to receive that correction. We must all try to be fair to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey. He is passionately in favour of a Channel tunnel so long as it has no ingress and no exit, does no environmental damage and loses no vote in any street in the Folkestone area. The hon. Gentleman is laughing, but it is not funny because it is—I am glad to have free use of the word—utter humbug. Many people garner votes at every opportunity locally, yet the hon. Gentleman does not disown the campaigns mounted by local alliance candidates.

Mr. Simon Hughes: The hon. Gentleman knows perfectly well that a national party can take one view but that there may well be dissenting voices within it which are perfectly entitled to argue their corner. The alliance parties have always been in favour of a rail-only Channel tunnel, but people in Kent are entitled to take a different view and to try to minimise its impact.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order we are moving away from the motion before the House and should return to it.

Mr. Moate: Would it not be helpful if the hon. Gentleman would make absolutely clear that he disagrees with local alliance candidates and that the party disowns their views on the Channel tunnel?

Mr. Hughes: I have just said that the prospective local candidate and local parties are entitled to argue their case. I do not disown them. They are concerned, as we are here, to ensure that there is the least environmentally harmful impact on Kent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps we can return to the instruction to the Committee.

Mr. Moate: Yes, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am most grateful to you for expressing clearly the view that "humbug" is an acceptable phrase, especially in this context.

I cherish greatly the private Bill and hybrid Bill procedures. They are a great defence of the liberties of the individual. I am a little concerned about the terms of this proposition. Most hon. Members have at times served on private Bill Committees of this sort which frequently consider options. As I understand it, the Committee has the power to go beyond the options initially presented to it. As I understand it, the motion is before the House because an alternative has been proposed which affects the property and rights of individuals who would not have had a chance to petition or object under the original proposals. if that is so, we are grateful for the opportunity for those people to receive details of the proposals and to petition against them before 26 September.

However, the motion goes beyond that. It states that the Committee has "power to consider alternatives to the provision which is now made in the Bill."

The motion does not limit the alternative to the one which we are discussing, which my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) wants considered and which my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) described so clearly. It is alternatives generally. What happens if this Committee, now empowered to consider alternatives generally, decides to consider other alternatives which may well be put forward by petitioners? That often happens on such Bills. The Committee is empowered by this motion to consider any alternatives.

The time limit for petitions is 26 September. What happens if the Committee puts forward alternative proposals which may involve compulsory purchase, extra noise on alternative routes and yet the dead-line for petitions is 26 September? On those grounds alone we should have some doubts about the validity of this motion. I do not want to stop the Committee from having this power — I think it is right that it should have such power — but we ought to be jealous of the scope of Committees of this kind.

I am a little puzzled because 26 September falls during the parliamentary recess and I wonder whether Parliament is empowered to receive petitions during the recess. I realise that the Committee is empowered to sit whenever it chooses—it can sit during August or September—but surely the petition is to Parliament and not to the Committee. It is up to Parliament to decide whether a petition should go before the Committee. If one of the proposers of the Bill should object to the vires of a petitioner, the Court of Referees has to decide the matter. These are matters for Parliament and not for the Committee, but Parliament will be in recess.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman should be careful on the vires point and the Court of Referees. As this is a hybrid Bill, the vires of a petitioner is decided by the Committee and not by the Court of Referees.

Mr. Moate: I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for your correction on that point. I did not understand the procedure. However, I am puzzled that a Committee has such powers under the procedures of a hybrid Bill. Nevertheless, is not a petition a petition to Parliament and not to the Committee? If Parliament is not sitting in September, how can it receive petitions? In principle, these options should be considered, but I have a feeling that we are broadening the options too much.

I appreciate that the access/egress to the tunnel will be of immense importance to the local inhabitants, but in the context of the whole project I understand they are of relatively minor importance. My main concern is on environmental matters, an aspect which has not been widely echoed.

Essentially this is a rail-only tunnel, but it can also be described as a rolling motorway and it will generate an immense amount of traffic. All the traffic of the south-east and further afield will go down a funnel as it approaches the Channel tunnel. The heavy lorries will do the most environmental damage to the rural areas, the rural roads and the rural rides mentioned my hon. Friend the Minister. If we accept this proposition which allows an opportunity for consideration of a variation of the access/egress of traffic into the tunnel, I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to ensure that it does not alter the fundamental proposition that the main route should be the M20 and not the M2.

If traffic is diverted to the north-east Kent coast, it may attract some people looking for jobs, but I am worried about the way in which it would divert heavy lorry traffic en masse up to the north and on to the M2. That would increase the pressure on the rural roads in my constituency which are already heavily burdened with unsuitable traffic. I would welcome the Minister's assurances on that point.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken (Thanet, South): I, too, welcome the motion, although my welcome is accompanied by one or two doubts, anxieties and questions to which I shall refer in a moment, but not at any great length, so as not to detain the House.

I do not want to begin as though I want to damn the motion with faint praise, as praise is indeed due, especially and in large measure to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard). He is a pillar of the Government and works from within it. There is no doubt that, once again, he has done stirling work in defending the interests of his constituents by getting the instruction tabled.

There is no doubt that the Committee should be considering alternative plans to the original and what I regard as somewhat cockeyed scheme drawn up by Eurotunnel in its first view of what was needed for access to the terminal. I am glad that my hon. and learned Friend has pointed the House quickly and forcefully, and I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has responded sensitively and swiftly. So far, so good.

[Mr. Jonathan Aitken]

However fine the Government's intentions, if we examine the motion closely to find out what it really means, or if we stand back and take the broad view and see it in the widest possible context of the Channel tunnel project as a whole, certain doubts start to arise and multiply. The motion begins:

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Channel Tunnel Bill that it has power to consider alternatives" to the Bill and to make amendments. Some of us thought that such powers existed all along. Some 4,700 petitioners thought the same, because their petitions often began, "Please amend the Bill" and "Will the Committee please consider alternative proposals?". Why on earth does the Committee need some special instruction when it comes to access and egress roads around the terminal? Are there some sensational difficulties about them that are cast in stone so that the House of Commons has to be detained late at night just to pass a Government instruction to get the Committee to consider alternatives? That can hardly be so.

If we examine what has so far been said about access and egress roads around the terminal, we find that the Committee has considered the matter for some time. It would have been a most extraordinary Committee if it had not decided, at least in its mind, to recommend alternatives. As for what the current plans would do, I can do no better than quote Shepway district council, which said:

"In practical terms, Newington Village Hall would have to be demolished in order to allow the works to proceed."

It is clear from evidence given to the Committee that rugby and cricket clubs would be destroyed, and that the whole focus of village life would be destroyed if the original plans succeeded. That was typical of Eurotunnel's rushed and cockeyed plan—demolish a village hall here, knock out a cricket club there, ruin a site of special scientific interest somewhere else, a few woodlands should go, all for the greater glory of Eurotunnel, and all to be done as cheaply as possible for the shareholders. That is an unacceptable attitude, and I do not understand why the Committee needs a special instruction from the Government to insist that Eurotunnel does not have the right to demolish a much-loved village hall and must put its wretched access road somewhere else.

What is the role of the Select Committee, and what should its style be? There were some prophetic words—modesty compels me to admit that they came from me—in the debate in the small hours of the morning on 5 June. I said:

"It is essential for the people of Kent to feel that they can have considerable public confidence in whatever structure is created to hear their grievances and to propose amendments to the Bill.

If it was thought that a substantial number of placemen had been appointed to the Committee, that would be a great mistake. As my hon. Friend said, in a way it will be a judicial committee. I think it was Bacon who once criticised 15th century judges, saying that they were lions but lions under the throne. It would be a great pity to see a Committee of lions but lions under the Whips' Office. This must be an independent-minded Committee."—[Official Report, 5 June 1986; Vol. 98, c. 1238.]

Even if I had my tongue in my cheek somewhat when I was making all those jungle-type references to lions, at least I thought that we would get a Committee independent minded enough to be able to stop a village hall from being demolished in order to build a road, without a special instruction from the Secretary of State.

I think that the Committee's reputation is in danger of getting a little tarnished, not just because it is not always obviously demonstrating independence—after all, that is a quality capable of many definitions—but because it is not necessarily listening fairly to all the evidence on these issues that might lead to amendments being tabled contrary to Eurotunnel's interest.

There was an episode today that is directly relevant to what we are discussing. It concerned Kent rugby club, and a witness came before the Committee complaining that he wished to give evidence in chief, as lawyers call it, that playing fields would be destroyed by the present scheme, but he was stopped from doing so and was instructed that the evidence could not be given and that he would have to submit to cross-examination. The Chairman wielded a very strong crack of the whip. From descriptions that I have received of this somewhat ill-tempered episode—we will, of course, read the report of the proceedings tomorrow with great interest—I have no doubt that the Chairman's handling of that witness was absolutely wrong.

We are inviting the petitioners to come forward and petition against the scheme. If not just me, or the witness, or his agent, but the lawyers who were present today are saying that it is monstrously unfair that someone should not be able to come forward and give his evidence in chief without being halted by a ruling from the Chair, I say that we do not want to see the Committee engulfed in a firestorm of criticism, but a few more steps down that road and it would be.

Mr. Snape: I hope that I shall not transgress the rules of order by what I am about to say. I think that the hon. Gentleman is making a grossly unfair attack on the Chairman of the Committee. He was not present when what the hon. Gentleman has described took place. A few minutes ago he was seeking information about an incident that had been relayed to him involving a member of the Committee who had never been present during the day's proceedings. I urge the hon. Gentleman, therefore, on this issue to get his facts right for once.

Mr. Aitken: I do not think that there is any danger of the facts being wrong, because tomorrow it will all be in the report of the proceedings. I am saying that any witness must be able to come before the Committee, give his evidence and get a fair hearing.

Let me remind the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) and, indeed, all hon. Members, that the passage that was much quoted in the debates running up to the installation and establishment of the Committee was from the Select Committee on Transport's recommendations on how the hybrid procedure should work. Paragraph 27 of the report said:

"The Committee recommends that . . . the fullest possible latitude again be allowed to petitioners, and that all those whose petitions conform to the basic requirement of relevancy be allowed to be heard."

I am simply sending down a warning signal that, if petitioners are denied the right to give their basic evidence, this controversy will rage again and again. All that observers of the Committee from the Back Benchers want is for no one to be able to say that people are not being heard fairly. Most of the time, I must say, that complaint has not been raised, but it has been raised on several occasions. It is the Committee's own fault, because the Committee is giving the impression that what it cares most about is getting ahead and getting things done.

Indeed, the Chairman of the Committee, on 25 June, when he gave a ruling, rather bravely, forbidding lawyers to make opening speeches, said:

"We are required also by the very nature of our constitution as a Committee of Parliament to take into account the parliamentary timetable."

The House knows perfectly well that there is no such thing as a parliamentary timetable. The Government may have a timetable in their mind, but it is the Committee's duty, I submit, to hear the evidence, and by all means get on with it as fast as is reasonably possible, but to be fair.

Mr. Moate: Does my hon. Friend agree, as confirmation of the point that he is making, that there is a fundamental difference between a Government timetable and what he referred to, quoting the Chairman, as a parliamentary timetable? The enormous privilege available to Bills going through the hybrid or private Bill procedure is that they are not subject to a timetable, because of the carry-over provision that allows them to go over the year and beyond, indefinitely if the House so wishes. This privilege is not available to Government Bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are going very wide of the motion. I hope that hon. Members will stick to it.

Mr. Aitken: Out of respect for your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and because we have said enough about the timetable, which is not affected by parliamentary time, I shall move on. The Government may have pressures, but the Committee does not. My hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) is right.

The terms of the motion are extremely vague, although it is well intentioned. The main fear of the east Kent towns of Dover, Folkestone, Ramsgate and Margate is that not only will their hotels and shops lose business as a result of the Channel tunnel, but that they will not have much hope of regaining any new business from the tunnel if the exit roads sweep all traffic straight back to London without an opportunity for travellers to get into the depressed towns of east Kent. Therefore, the motion which tells the Committee to investigate alternatives, will give motorists a chance to turn right into east Kent, to meander through the towns and to spend their tourist dollars. That is a justified item in the public interest, although it might be an expensive item for Eurotunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: As I understand the proposal, it is that the motorist should turn left to enjoy the benefits of visiting Folkestone, Dover and my hon. Friend's constituency.

Mr. Aitken: I have never been able to tell my left from my right, which is no doubt why I have never become a Minister in the Department of Transport.

A vital topic is; who will pay for the costs that may flow from this instruction—the costs of the new terminal and of any new access or egress roads?

Another important point is policing costs. It has been said that new access and egress roads will need extra policing. Here I ask a question, to which there has so far been a deafening silence, to try to clarify the contradiction between what is in the Bill about policing costs and what is in the concession agreement.

The Kent police say that, to police the Channel tunnel and the roads immediately surrounding it, they will need a completely new sub-division of approximately 200 police officers and all the buildings that go with such a proposal. In the Bill it is clear that all policing costs should be paid for by Eurotunnel. In the concession agreement there is a sign that the concessionaires will not have to pay any extra costs over and above those that ferry operators have to pay for policing costs for ferries. In other words, the concession agreement can be interpreted one way, so that the Eurotunnel consortium might have to pay for only 20 or 30 police officers, while the police say that getting on for seven or eight times that number of police officers are required. The Bill says that all the policing costs should be paid by the Eurotunnel consortium. This is a contradiction that has not been clarified. It is of great interest to the people of Kent, because a police officer costs about £25,000 a year by the time his salary and operating costs have been paid.

All this talk about money and who will pay means that we might be entering the world of make-believe. The Eurotunnel consortium has failed miserably to raise the first £200 million of equity for the £6 billion project. Its excuses for not doing so are extraordinary, ranging from the fact that it is the summer holiday to, as my hon. Friend the Minister suggested, new issues for international banks. The real reason, which has sneaked out, is problems with the construction contracts, which are relevant to access and egress roads, particularly with regard to the bill for them. Next week the Committee will hear explosive evidence about the finances of the Channel tunnel. It will demonstrate yet again how much credibility has been lost and how unlikely the projeect is to go ahead, for sheer reasons of money alone.

The text for this short debate should be the opening lines of one of Shakespeare's great soliloquys from "As You Like it":

"All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances".

This debate is not just about exits and entrances, slipped of course into the Euro jargon of ingresses and egresses. To debate the motion we have had to enter three make-believe plays in advance. We have had to make believe that the Committee needs an instruction to do this work. We have had to make believe that the Committee is doing an absolutely fair job in hearing every witness impartially. Above all, we have had to make believe that we are debating something that is real, which it is not until the money is there. As long as the money is missing, it is a fantasy and a nonsense. July is a mad month for Parliament. We are debating a non-necessary instruction about what I think will be a complete non-event.

12.1 am

Mr. David Mitchell: As I said earlier, the need for this debate has arisen because a number of petitioners have suggested that alternative access arrangements for the proposed Cheriton terminal would be preferable. This is a practical demonstration that both the Select Committee and the Government take local views seriously. Equally, serious account will need to be taken of the interests of any people who are liable to be detrimentally affected by the alternative access arrangements. The Government propose that they should have eight weeks to present petitions.

[Mr. David Mitchell]

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) sought to make an interesting assertion on behalf of the Liberal party that he knew not of the opportunity for his minority party to serve on the Select Committee. I find that extraordinary, because hon. Members will recollect that we spent considerable time during the night of 5 June, well into the morning of 6 June, discussing the composition of the Committee. The hon. Gentleman was in the Chamber. I know that he dozed off at one point. We teased him about it, but I do not wish to be unfair to him because it was late. During the time that I took it that the hon. Gentleman was alert and interested in the debate we were discussing whether there should be eight or nine members on the Committee. The main point that was made was that having a ninth member would ensure that minority parties would be represented. Therefore, there was the astonishment that hon. Members have referred to when the Liberal party did not seek to take up the opportunity offered on that occasion. However, the hon. Gentleman accepted that there is a case for consideration of a change of route, so there is no difference between the Liberals and the Government on the motion before the House.

The hon. Gentleman asked how extensive are the variations to access and egress that can be considered by the Select Committee. The answer is, as wide as the variation in the advertisements that the Department of Transport will place. I shall come back to that in a moment because it is relevant to the points raised by other hon. Members.

My hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) asked whether the Select Committee had power to go beyond the powers contained in the Bill. The Standing Orders require the deposit of further plans and the issue of notices to landowners affected by this limited scope of alteration. The Committee may then consider the petitions against the specific amendments advertised. I make it quite clear to my hon. Friend that that does not affect north Kent. He mentioned the balance of traffic between the M2 and the M20. This is only concerned with access from the M20 to the terminal and immediately within the adjacent area of the terminal.

My hon. Friend inquired about the closing date of 26 September. He drew attention to the fact that that was in the parliamentary recess. He asked whether petitions will be valid if they are made when Parliament is not sitting. The answer is, yes; they will be perfectly valid. The motion ensures that that is so.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) asked why a special instruction was thought necessary. He thought that the Committee already had the necessary power. I understand his point. The whole purpose of the Select Committee is to consider alterations and alternatives. The Select Committee can reduce the powers contained in the Bill in respect of land acquisition, but it cannot increase them. We are changing a proposition in the Bill that takes the road round the side of the villages at the foothills of the escarpment and moves it nearer to the M20. While that would result in the reduction of one piece of land, it would result in the addition of a smaller piece of land at another site.

The Select Committee could recommend that there be a reduction. It does not have the power to add the additional piece of land. We seek to enable the Department to advertise the identification of the precise piece of additional land so that those who would be affected if that land-take took place have the opportunity to petition the Committee in a counter-petition to those who seek that it should be incorporated. The Committee can then consider the pros and cons. The Committee must consider the pros and cons of the two alternatives. Many things can be said in favour of the alternative that we shall be advertising in due course, but there are arguments the other way. Eurotunnel may wish to draw the Committee's attention to certain arguments the other way.

My hon. Friend also asked who will pay the cost of revised access. That will form part of Eurotunnel's costs in exactly the same way as the initial access. He asked me about the police and the costs. The concession provides for Eurotunnel to contribute as for airports.

My hon. Friend asserted that Eurotunnel was having difficulty in raising the necessary funds. I believe that my hon. Friend enjoys a certain mischievousness in such matters. He has allowed his imagination full reign on this occasion. Eurotunnel has had no difficulties in raising the necessary finance. All that has happened is that it formed the judgment, on the basis of professional advice, that it would be more appropriate to raise the money after the holiday season. We must bear in mind that this is a joint funding with the French. The French holiday season falls somewhat earlier than ours. It is for that reasonable reason that Eurotunnel's professional advisers have suggested an alternative date for the funding.

Mr. Aitken: My hon. Friend seems to have assumed, rather rashly, the role of financial spokesman for Eurotunnel. I am interested to draw him out on that point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry that I allowed the matter to go so far. It is clearly outside the motion before the House. Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. Mitchell: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I strayed outside the bounds of order. I was merely seeking to redress the balance in an area where there might have been misunderstanding. I should not wish my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South to be in the position, which I am sure he would not relish, where people took seriously the mischievous remarks that he has enjoyed making during these debates.

The purpose of the motion is to follow through the Government's frequently expressed intention that the Select Committee should be no mere cipher in the democratic process. It should be able, in the light of representations made to it, to take real decisions and to make real improvements to the principle of the Bill, decided on Second Reading. We do not know whether the alternative access arrangements which have been studied will, on balance, be perceived locally as an improvement. That will be for the Select Committee to judge. This debate is about giving the Select Committee the powers to take that decision, if it so chooses.

The motion should offend no one and could result in a better project. For that reason, I hope that the House will give it full support.

Question put and agreed to.

Ordered,

That it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Channel Tunnel Bill that it has power to consider alternatives to the provision which is now made in the Bill regarding the access to and egress from the terminal area by road, and that with respect to the access to and egress from the terminal area by road it has power to make Amendments to the Bill if it thinks fit; and that any Petitions against such Amendments to the Bill presented by being deposited in the Private Bill Office not later than 26th September, in which the Petitioners pray to be heard by themselves, their Counsel or Agents, be referred to the Committee.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 79(5) (Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments; etc.).

CIVIL AVIATION

That the draft Air Navigation (Noise Certification) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 7th July, be approved.

BURIAL

That the Local Authorities' Cemeteries (Amendment) Order 1986, a copy of which was laid before this House on 2nd July, be approved.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

Question agreed to.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): May I ask you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whether time is to be allowed to debate the Air Navigation (Noise Certification) Order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): The Question was put forthwith. The hon. Gentleman should consult the Order Paper.

East Surrey District Health Authority

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

12.16 am

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I rose on both occasions to speak on the Air Navigation (Noise Certification) Order, but I was not given the opportunity——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I heard the hon. Gentleman the first time and drew his attention to what is written on the Order Paper. In both cases he will read that these matters are "To be decided forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 79(5)."

That means that they cannot be debated and that the hon. Gentleman cannot speak.

Mr. George Gardiner (Reigate): I am most grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for this opportunity to raise the question of resources for the east Surrey district health authority on the Adjournment of this House. In doing so my purpose is twofold. First, I wish to voice the concern of my constituents about the fact that, despite all the Government's increased expenditure on the National Health Service—by no less than 24 per cent. in real terms since 1979—the actual service available to them over the coming months is likely to diminish; and, second, I shall suggest that some conclusions might be drawn from east Surrey's experience that are of more general relevance to the Health Service, explaining in part why there is such a wide gap between the Government's knowledge of the increased resources being poured into the Health Service and the public's perception of the quality of the end product available to them.

The east Surrey health authority covers the major part of my Reigate constituency, the major part of the Mole Valley constituency to the west and all of the east Surrey constituency. It serves a total population of 180,000 and it has a management record of which we can be proud. By reorganising patient services and selling surplus property, it has made possible the construction of a new district hospital of the highest standard, which was opened by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister nearly two years ago. In some instances there was public opposition to the closure of small local hospitals, but there can be no doubt that the quality of medical care provided by the new east Surrey hospital is of a far higher order, one example being in ophthalmology.

Since that hospital was completed, the authority has raised nearly £5 million from the disposal of surplus properties, and planning consents have been obtained on further land and buildings. That should yield an additional £6 million. These capital receipts open the way to a number of exciting new developments. Construction of phase two of the east Surrey district hospital, effectively doubling it size, is scheduled to start next year. Work has already begun on a residential unit for the young severely disabled at Harrowlands, in Dorking, which will be the first of its kind in Surrey, sharing its facilities with patients from the neighbouring mid Surrey health district.

There is already a new day unit at Caterham Dene, and new day hospital facility for the elderly at Oxted. In Redhill, facilities for elderly long-stay patients have been upgraded. I cite these simply as examples of significant improvements in Health Service provision that have been and are being made possible through skilled management of the district authority's capital resources. Meanwhile, in an older hospital building at Dorking, we have a regionally funded orthopaedic unit that has won international acclaim for its hip replacement work, and where one surgeon performs 25 per cent. of the hip replacements in the 13 health districts of the south-west Thames region.

I turn next to the authority's management of its current resources, with particular reference to acute hospital services. For some years it has been evident that the east Surrey district was, and would continue to be, a loser under the RAWP system for securing re-allocation of Health Service resources throughout the United Kingdom. I shall return to that matter in greater detail in a moment. The obvious conclusion to be drawn form this was that, if an acceptable service was to be maintained, much more efficient use would have to be made of the modern hospital facilities to which I have just referred. That greater efficiency has undoubtedly been achieved.

Over the four years from 1981 to 1985, the number of beds in our acute unit hospitals decreased by 20 per cent. and the number of staff serving them decreased by 13 per cent. Yet the number of in-patients treated increased by nearly 10 per cent. while the number of out-patients treated increased by 8 per cent. Thus, over these four years the east Surrey authority can point to a productivity gain approaching 33 per cent. This faster throughput of patients and more efficient use of available beds has had its effect on the authority's in-patient waiting lists.

On 31 March last year the Secretary of State published the numbers on the waiting lists for every district health authority, which revealed that east Surrey's lists were among the shortest in the country. Today that total on its waiting list is easily the lowest in the entire south-west Thames region, while all our major surgical specialties achieve throughput levels above the regional and national averages. Thus in the efficient management of acute hospital resources the story from east Surrey is one of success. Yet, as I shall show shortly, for that success we are having to pay a bitter price.

This brings us face to face with the RAWP system, which is intended to secure a fairer distribution of Health Service resources between the different regions of the United Kingdom, ending the former concentration on London and the south east. This in itself is not an unworthy objective, and it is apparent, even within the south east, that many of the cases which at one time would have been referred by GPs to consultants at the London teaching hospitals are now treated within their own districts.

In view of the political capital that some seek to make from the consequent cuts in hospital provision in the south east, it is worth reminding ourselves that the RAWP system was introduced in 1976 by Mrs. Barbara Castle, when Minister of Health, and that it was advocated enthusiastically by her Parliamentary Secretary, the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), who is now, of course, leader of the Social Democratic party.

The RAWP system has been continued by the present Government, though it is now under review. I can only comment that such a review is long overdue, and I hope that the east Surrey experience that I now describe will be taken on board by those conducting the review. The evidence is that the operation of RAWP, while increasing the health resources in many regions, is at the same time penalising increased efficiency in the "loser" districts.

Until early this year the authority was working to a planned £450,000 per annum reduction in its revenue allocation under RAWP — which, as I have already indicated, represented a very considerable constraint. However, in May it was informed that this saving or "cut" was being increased to £700,000 per annum — a horrendous additional burden to be imposed on what was already a decreasing expenditure programme. In the acute unit alone, £442,000 had already been trimmed from the budgets over the past year, and this sum withdrawn from the allocation available for this year. Yet, unless services were curtailed further, there would still be a substantial overspend by the end of the current year. Immediate further economies had to be effected while consideration was given to more radical long-term options.

Accordingly, on 4 July, a letter was sent to all GPs in the district detailing a rolling programme of overlapping acute unit ward closures for a month at a time during the summer. At the East Surrey hospital, three wards handling cases of general surgery, urology, orthopaedics, general medicine and rheumatology are each closing for one month; at Redhill hospital, two wards providing gynaecology and ophthalmology; at Dorking, one ward handling general medicine; while at Oxted surgical specialties are being withdrawn for a month while the operating theatre is upgraded. Throughout the summer, cases coming under these headings will be able to be treated elsewhere in wards that are open, but the inevitable result of these temporary closures will be to increase waiting lists and postpone for many patients the day when they had expected to get the treatment or surgery they require. Meanwhile, at Netherne psychiatric hospital a ward closure has been brought forward. All these, of course, are short-term measures, while the authority investigates what more severe economies will have to be made.

Thus, the east Surrey authority is paying a high price for its own success; for the fact is that the RAWP system makes no allowance for the increased total of per patient costs that accrue from achieving a faster throughput of patients and making more efficient use of the system. Yes, of course, with faster throughput the bed costs and nursing costs per patient are lower, but the total cost of what we might call the fixed overheads per patient rise—the costs of X-rays, pathology, drugs, blood and so on. The sad conclusion facing the east Surrey administrators is that their authority would be in a better financial position today if they had not increased efficiency in the way that they have, but simply allowed the waiting lists to grow. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to consider also the effect that this must have on staff morale.

In our case, it is already difficult enough to recruit staff, especially those with professional qualifications, on the same nationally approved salary scales as apply in other parts of the country with significantly lower housing costs than we encounter in Surrey. In east Surrey's case, there has been until now the stimulus of joining a team that is improving performance in patient care and making a significant impact on waiting lists. But when that goes, what is left? What incentive is there for a young person trained in medicine to join an authority in which his or her scope for securing improvement must continually be curtailed?

I submit that all this points to a major defect of the RAWP system—that it gives no incentive to increasing efficiency within those health districts that are "losers". Ministers say a lot about getting value for money within the NHS—an objective that I entirely support—yet the manner in which RAWP operates has precisely the opposite effect. I must in all honesty relay to my hon. Friend the Minister a theory put to me by one hospital administrator in the course of my inquiries—that the most prudent way to proceed was to avoid glaring inefficiency on the one hand, while eschewing notable efficiency on the other. As he put it, somewhat sadly:

"The best way to survive in the Health Service today is through mediocrity."

I therefore ask my hon. Friend the Minister to ensure that the current review of the operation of RAWP takes this serious flaw into account; and that it considers the merits of a system whereby "the money follows the patient", wherever he or she happens to be treated. Furthermore, I ask my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, through him, to ensure that significant changes are made soon, before many more of the achievements of health districts such as east Surrey's are destroyed.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Ray Whitney): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) for raising this matter. I should like to offer some general remarks, but if, on studying his comments, I find that I should provide more details, I shall write to him. I shall carefully study his points about the RAWP formula.

Nationally, regional targets are set which aim to give a fairer distribution of the available resources between regional health authorities, based on such factors as age, morbidity and patients' movement across health authority boundaries for treatment. At regional and district level, the emphasis of the redistribution of resources is to provide equality of access to services. In essence, this means enabling those parts of the country which have inadequate facilities to look after the health care needs of their population to build these up. On the other side of the coin, some districts which have until now enjoyed a much more favourable level of provision are asked to take part in a fairer sharing out of the cake. I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that as a general principle, albeit taking cognisance of the problems of the policy to which he referred.

The Government have a duty to make sure that the way public money is divided up in the NHS works as well as it possibly can. Although we firmly believed in the RAWP process, we recognised the feeling that the methodology used in the calculations was ripe for a critical review. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services therefore announced last December that he was setting up a review of RAWP which would include an examination of the appropriate factors to be considered. Requests have been made that a report of the review should be with Ministers before the end of the year.

The effect of resource redistribution at the district level means that some districts have to face the fact of lower expectations. East Surrey is indeed one of South-West Thames' "losers". I hope that my hon. Friend agrees that, put in context, the picture may not be as bad as it appears.

When the South-West Thames regional health authority produced its 10-year resource assumptions for its 13 districts in 1985, East Surrey was considered to be over target and expected to take a drop of £4·5 million in annual revenue relative to other districts by 1993-94. So far, the district's rate of movement towards its long-term revenue target has been as originally planned. It is no worse off than it expected and has an additional £2·25 million pay an price uplift this year—no more than other districts in the region got, but certainly no less. The recent recalculations look at first sight to make East Surrey worse off, but the fact is that some corrections which were done to the calculations of the district's long-term commitment for providing care for old long-stay patients from outside its boundaries showed that it would have fewer patients than had earlier been thought. An appropriate amount was therefore deducted from its revenue target, but this was fully compensated for by a real reduction in the amount of care it would need to plan for. In fact, I understand that the district will be slightly better off in real terms.

East Surrey has not missed out on new developments. As my hon. Friend said, only two years ago the Prime Minister opened a new district hospital in Redhill, built at a cost of £17 million, and I was glad to hear my hon. Friend's remarks about the high quality of service being provided in that hospital. A further phase of development is now under consideration, costing about £12 million, and the regional health authority has agreed to try to bring forward a start on this block to allow the district to achieve more savings through rationlisation. All this is helped by Government injections of capital resources and our policy on land sales, which gives districts the benefit of proceeds from sales to develop their services in the best way for the local population.

South-West Thames regional health authority has calculated that the East Surrey district is over-targeted in revenue terms, and will give it a slightly decreasing share of the region's resources over the next seven or eight years. This, in turn, will allow those parts of the region which are under-provided and below target to build up services for their local populations. We acknowledge that this causes problems in districts such as East Surrey, and we understand the pressures, especially where the district is already efficient, and my hon. Friend gave examples of the district's efficiency.

Improvements in activity rates in recent years are clear, and I acknowledge them. The staff involved deserve recognition of their hard work and dedication. A few striking examples are patient throughput rates in trauma and orthopaedics, which are in the top 10 per cent. nationally; they have high levels of district nurses to attend the elderly and a high rate of contact with these patients; they are doing well in providing mental handicap community unit beds and community mental handicap nurses; and the ratio of direct care staff—those involved in treating and caring for patients—to indirect care staff is well above average.

But East Surrey is not the only health district in South-West Thames—let alone in the country—which is making improvements and achieving higher levels of performance. Every district has been asked to review its efficiency levels and to use the available resources in the most cost-effective way it can. They are using performance indicators to show up areas where improvements can be made, and their cost improvement programmes are helping to release cash to pay for service developments.

Whether a region or district is set to gain or lose, it is vital for the health authority to make every penny count. The purpose of the NHS is to treat and care for patients. The more economy and efficiency measures that can be introduced, the more money will be available and the more patients can be treated.

While I congratulate my hon. Friend's local health authority on its fine achievements, I must stress that there are fields where there is room for improvement, such as savings from competitive tendering for house-keeping services, where as yet less than half of the services have been put out to tender. Progress has been made, but it has some way to go with its laundry services and it must make a start on the catering. There is need to look at the use of day care treatment, which seems lower than elsewhere. In some specialties, day case rates are less than one-fifth of the national average. The length of stay of elderly patients also seems high, and that, too, could be looked into.

I wish to place the situation in east Surrey against the background of what this Government are doing for the NHS nationally, efforts to which my hon. Friend paid tribute. The Government have recently added an extra £50 million to health authority cash limits in England, following decisions on this year's pay awards. Of that money, more than £16 million will go to the Thames authorities and to the special health authorities in London; £7 million will go to the north western and Mersey regions; £5 million to the west Midlands; and over £3 million to the Yorkshire and Northern regions. Those are substantial additions.

That has been achieved in a year in which we have already allocated about £650 million more to hospital and community health services in England. That represents a 6·7 per cent. increase nationally on revenue to the NHS. With the extra £50 million, we are talking about growth in real terms of well over 3 per cent., the highest figure since 1980-81.

Health authorities throughout the country plan to release a further £150 million this year, with more planned increases in activity and productivity within existing resources. Health authorities are benefiting also from the fall in general inlation that has been brought about by the Government's policies. There will be a real increase in spending of 24 per cent. after allowing for inflation. That is the Government's proud record since coming to office. I know that my hon. Friend recognises that, and I hope that he will accept that the public's perception is that there have been improvements in the service. My hon. Friend —who better than he?—will understand the difficulty of putting across the achievements of the Health Service. I remind him of a recent study that was carried out independently of the Government which showed that about 87 per cent. of those polled were very satisfied or fairly satisfied with the treatment that they had received within the NHS. It is important to remind ourselves that those who have experience of the Health Service, as opposed to relying for their knowledge of it on the media, understand that significant improvements have been achieved since 1979.

Capital spending programmes and improvements in hospitals continue to be undertaken, and it is right that we should claim credit for using the public's resources wisely and effectively. We recognise, however, that the policy of redistribution causes strains, especially for RAWP losers such as East Surrey. I hope that my hon. Friend will recognise that East Surrey has enjoyed a higher level of provision than some of its neighbours. It has shown already that it is capable of rising to the challenge and finding ways of saving money which do not reduce patient care. I hope that it will be encouraged to believe that still more can be done in that direction on the lines that I have suggested. There is still scope for cost improvements within virtually every health authority and I am sure that all authorities will want to exploit them to the full. I do not believe that East Surrey is an exception and I hope that the authority, with the co-operation of the staff, to which I pay full tribute, will be able to continue to use the resources which are being made available to ensure that the health care that is delivered to my hon. Friend's constituents will continue to improve and not deteriorate.

Question put and agreed to.

House of Commons

Friday 18 July 1986

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

Clinic (Amott Road), Camberwell

9.35 am

Mr. Gerald Bowden (Dulwich): I beg to ask leave to present a petition on behalf of 250 to 300 of my constituents who are concerned about the future of the clinic in Amott road which looks after well women and young children. The clinic is under threat of closure by Camberwell health authority because the fabric of the building is in a rather unsatisfactory state. The petitioners urge that Camberwell health authority should consider carefully before making any changes and that a clinic should be retained in that location.

To lie upon the Table.

New Towns

9.36 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Richard Tracey): I beg to move,

That the draft New Towns (Extinguishment of Libilities) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 1st July, be approved.

The draft order gives effect to the financial reconstruction of four new town development corporations — Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Telford and Warrington and Runcorn. Powers to carry out the financial reconstruction of the new town corporations were included in the New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Act 1985, which contained two distinct powers to effect financial reconstruction of the new towns — by the extinguishment of corporations' liabilities to repay loans made by the Secretary of State, and to provide for the suspension of repayments on such loans. The power to extinguish corporations' liabilities under which this order is being made lapses on 30 September 1986.

As I have said, the Order deals with four new town development corporations, but we also propose to implement a financial reconstruction of other new town bodies—the development corporations for Aycliffe and Peterlee and for Washington and the Commission for the New Towns. The financial reconstruction of these bodies will be effected under the power to suspend payments of loans and we expect to bring forward the necessary orders in due course.

In the debates on the 1985 Act there was, I believe, general recognition in all parts of the House of the need to place the corporations on a sound financial footing. The original financial regime of the new towns was established by a Labour Government in 1946 and continued more or less unchanged until the 1985 legislation. Apart from housing, which was subject to the same subsidy arrangements as for local authorities, development corporations' main source of finance for all their activities was long-term fixed interest borrowing from the Secretary of State, who in turn drew loans from the National Loans Fund. This applied both to new investment and to deficits on revenue account which were also capitalised and met by borrowing.

The sum of the liabilities being extinguished in this order is approximately £1,688 million and is thus within the £1,750 million ceiling set in the 1985 Act.

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): I may be wrong, and I apologise if my hon. Friend will come to this point later in his important speech, but I assume that some assets of the new towns are housing assets. If the debts are to be extinguished, and if, as we all hope, some of the houses will later be purchased by the sitting tenants, what will happen to the money that is so released? Will it come back to the Exchequer to make up the debt from which we are releasing the new towns?

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend raises a good point on which I can reassure him.

The sum that I have mentioned is admittedly large, and it could well be asked why it is necessary to write that off. However, it was always envisaged that the corporations' revenue deficits would continue for the early years of development, but that in due course they would be able to achieve break-even and be in a position to redeem the borrowing.

Most of the first generation of new towns achieved that. They were Basildon, Harlow in Essex, Bracknell in Berkshire, Crawley in West Sussex, Hatfield, Hemel Hempstead, Stevenage and Welwyn Garden City. There were also the new towns at Corby, Aycliffe and Peterlee.

Whereas those corporations benefited from the boom of the 1950s and early 1960s, the second and third generation new towns developed against a background of growing economic difficulties in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Mr. Anthony Steen (South Hams): Was the money that the Government now want to write off spent primarily on infrastructure by the new towns in years gone by?

Mr. Tracey: That was an important part of the construction of the new towns but, as I have explained, under the legislation of 1946, this was the major method of financing the new towns. I covered that point earlier and I am now explaining the further developments and why we now believe that we must extinguish the liabilities.

The second generation towns were Runcorn in Cheshire, Skelmersdale in Yorkshire, Washington in Tyne and Wear, and Redditch and Dawley, which is now called Telford, in Shropshire. The third generation new towns are perhaps better known — Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Northampton, Warrington in Cheshire, and the central Lancashire new town.

Mr. Marlow: My hon. Friend mentioned Northampton which woke me up as I was dozing off.

This is a complex and important subject and, as the debate unwinds, there is a lot of information that some of us would be interested to have. It would be wrong to expect my hon. Friend to have the information at the moment, but perhaps it could be provided for him before the debate is concluded. One thing that would be of interest to myself and to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) is the amount of money that we are writing off that is attributable to housing assets and the interest arising from the establishment of those housing assets in the first place, and I hope that that information can be found.

Mr. Tracey: I take good note of what my hon. Friend says. No doubt he will be developing that point and posing further questions as the debate goes on. We shall seek to give him the answers that he wants.

The task facing the second and third generation towns was in many respects fairly onerous. For example, at Telford more than a quarter of the designated areas was derelict at the beginning of the operation. There was also a substantial reclamation task at Warrington, while at Milton Keynes the scale of infrastructure required was larger than anything which had previously been undertaken because of the nature of the site on which Milton Keynes is being constructed.

High rates of interest and low economic growth over the period contributed to a situation in which the deficits of the second and third generation towns spiralled inevitably upwards. Thus a number of factors worsened the financial position of the new town corporations.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): I happen to be a member of the Ironbridge Gorge Museum Trust which has done a great deal to improve and enhance Telford's environment. I live near to Telford and I would not want any impression to be gained—I hope that my hon. Friend is not giving the impression — that there is a state of dereliction in that area. In fact, it is quite the opposite. Many would regard that area as one of the most outstandingly beautiful parts of this great British isle.

Mr. Tracey: I proceed quickly to deny that I am in any way suggesting that the state of dereliction which may have been there at the beginning has remained. Indeed, I pay tribute to the work that has been done in the Telford area were there have been great environmental benefits. My hon. Friend has noted, in an articulate way, some of them. I certainly do not want to say that there is a problem at present as great as there was when the work on the new town began.

In November 1982 the then Minister for Housing and Construction, my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley), explained that legislation would be needed to deal with the problem. As an interim measure, the Finance Act 1983 introduced a power to suspend repayments on some new town debts until 30 September this year. The order, under the powers taken in the 1985 Act, provides a long-term solution which will give the four corporations a realistic debt structure so that they are able to service and repay their debts in due course.

The financial reconstruction proposals embodied in the order have been formulated by reference to projections of income and expenditure over the next 20 years. This exercise has been carried out with the co-operation of the corporations and the results have been analysed by consultants commissioned by the Department of the Environment.

In parallel with the financial reconstruction, we are introducing other measures which should improve the financial regime which the new towns operate. New towns' capital investment in the provision of roads, which is the major item of expenditure on which there is no direct return to them will in future be eligible for grant under a provision introduced in the 1985 Act. We are also in the process of introducing an improved system of corporate planning which will provide the focus for discussion of the corporations' activities and resource allocation. Some changes will be introduced to the form of the corporations' published accounts to make them more informative and these will include a requirement for the corporations to report on their progress towards achieving cumulative break-even. Taken together, these measures will provide a sound financial basis for the corporations during the remaining period of their lives as they complete their development programmes. An essential element of this is the financial reconstruction of the corporations to establish a capital structure which they will be capable of servicing. If the house approves this order today, this will be achieved.

Mr. Marlow: My hon. Friend appears to be coming to the end of his speech. I apologise for interrupting again. I accept that we are writing off certain debts, but the new towns will still own assets. As the years unfold, how much do the Government expect to get back? How much will the taxpayer get back from the new towns?

Mr. Tracey: The aim is to conduct the exercise in the most efficient way. I cannot give my hon. Friend a figure, but we believe that by the extinguishment of liabilities and by building from a sound base we shall achieve a sound financial basis.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): Before my hon. Friend leaves that point and moves on to the second part of his speech, will he kindly tell the House to what extent he has studied reports produced by the development corporations for the year ended 31 March 1985? These are the most recent reports available in the Vote Office. My hon. Friend knows that.

I refer my hon. Friend to the pictures on page 210. I am grateful to the Opposition for following what I am saying with such care. I wonder whether my hon. Friend has before him a copy of the report. The assiduous spokesman for the Opposition, the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) has a copy. Perhaps I should allow my hon. Friend time to obtain a copy of the pictures. Perhaps his private secretary, or one of my hon. Friends, can assist him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. I hope that the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) is not making a speech. This is supposed to be an intervention.

Mr. Gow: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was referring my hon. Friend and the official Opposition spokesman to some pictures. I do not know whether you have a copy, but they appear on page 210. One picture is of Milton Keynes' Texas Homecare store. Is that store and the loan that applied to it included in the order?

Mr. Tracey: I cannot answer that question at the moment, but if my hon. Friend will bear with me I shall seek the information.

I was about to conclude my speech. We believe that the essential element is the financial reconstruction to establish a capital structure which the corporations will be capable of servicing. If the House approves the order, this will be achieved.

I commend the order to the House.

9.55 am

Mr. Warren Hawksley (The Wrekin): I welcome the order, but I am slightly disappointed at the way in which it was introduced. I had hoped for more detail in my hon. Friend's explanation. My concern is about Telford in my constituency. About £440 million of the capital given to that new town over the years is to be extinguished. I am shocked and surprised at the complete lack of details about the loans involved in the statutory instrument.

New town corporations should be more receptive to people's wishes and to the views of our constituents. They should tell people exactly what is happening. New towns should open their board room doors so that the public can see what is happening. It would be possible to deal with the commercial confidentiality problems which apply to new town corporations as they do to local authorities. New towns such as Telford are happy to provide publicity on matter about which they want the public to know, but that does not reveal the whole picture.

I am unable to find out what the Telford new town corporation is debating, but I believe that the board papers were available to my Labour predecessor. The Labour-controlled local district and county council chief executives are furnished with the information, so they know exactly what is happening and according to Lord Northfield, the new town corporation chairman, they are able to brief their members. It is extraordinary that a new town corporation should keep a Member of Parliament in the dark but advise officers of the local councils. After all, new town corporations are Government-supported bodies.

I hope that the Government will persuade the corporations to be more forthcoming in the advice and information that they pass on to Members of Parliament. Board members have asked for me to be furnished with papers, but that request has been refused by the chairman of the corporation.

Mr. Cash: Were any reasons given for the information not being disclosed? My constituency is next to my hon. Friend's constituency, and I have an interst since many of my constituents work in Telford.

Mr. Hawksley: I have not been given a satisfactory explanation. Lord Northfield told me that he had taken advice from the Department before refusing my request for the papers.

Mr. Gow: I am sure that my hon. Friend will accept that it is not necessary to have a constituency which abuts his own to take a keen interest in this matter. He will find if he studies the order that the powers exist as a result of the New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Act 1985, and some of the members of the Committee which considered that measure did not have new towns in their constituencies.

Mr. Hawksley: I thank my hon. Friend for reminding me of that fact, which I admit had slipped my mind.

I turned to the draft statutory instrument with hopes that I would be able to ascertain exactly what the Telford development corporation had been doing with the large sum that we shall write off today. Unfortunately, the order provided no clues. We are asked in respect of all four new towns to accept the writing-off of nearly £1,750 million without one word about what the money has been spent on. I was so worried that last week I tabled a question to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I asked him whether he would give details of each of the advances from T1 to T409, which appear in the order. I thought that that would provide helpful information for the House to have when debating this important issue. I received a reply on Wednesday 16 July 1986. The written answer stated:

"Long-term loans from the Secretary of State have been the principal source of finance for the new towns programme. Individual loans cannot be linked to specific activities or items of expenditure."—[Official Report, 16 July 1986.]

That is an extraordinary answer.

Mr. Cash: Does my hon. Friend think it possible that some of the money to which he has referred went into the fine new public house that is known as Quenchers, or the sophisticated night club and disco complex that is called Cascades? We are told the Cascades has lost no time in becoming the local "Talk of the Town".

Mr. Hawksley: I should declare an interest because I was involved in the opening of one of those premises. There are good facilities within my constituency. The town centre is currently owned by the development corporation and we may well find that some of the money has gone that way. It is frightening that an answer to a parliamentary question fails to list the items of expenditure. The House will be aware that T399 is one item of expenditure of £27 million, and presumably the Department passed that sum over Telford development corporation. I find it frightening that the answer to my question does not tell us what the items of expenditure were.

I must assume that the items that we are debating, which are listed in the order, cover all the expenditures of the Telford development corporation. They seem to appear as half-year expenditure groups, and we must assume that the expenditure in the new town has come from these funds. I hope that I shall be in order when I try to deal with some items of the expenditure which I believe need discussion.

When I was elected the hon. Member of Parliament for The Wrekin in 1979 I said in my maiden speech that I believed that the new town corporation should be supported by the Government. I said also that I believed that the Government could and would give the help that was needed. I never dreamt that the Government would give so much help and do so much for the area. The opposition in this place and at local level in the district council is The Wrekin deride on many occasions the Government's expenditure plans, but I believe that this instrument puts to rest the charge that the Government are not spending the money that should be expended in the area.

When my hon. Friend the Minister introduced the order he talked about the state of Telford when the corporation was set up. There were old quarries and old collieries. There was much reclamation to be done. Although it has not been finished yet, much has been done. I welcome the expenditure that has allowed that to happen.

It should be remembered that in 1979 Telford had no hospital and no motorway. Telford was in a worse position than previously because of the closure of the Cosford hospital. There was no accident or emergency cover in the east of the county. There were no motorway connections to the M6, which all the industrialists in the area told us were essential. We went into a third inquiry because the previous Labour Government kept changing their mind. We had no development status and there was no station in central Telford.

What is the position now? Thanks, presumably, to some of the money that we are talking about, we shall have a new hospital. That hospital is almost built. I suppose that the roads approaching it have been financed by the new town's money. The M54 is open and it is bringing jobs to the area. The Government have given the area intermediate status, which gives it money from Europe as well as from our Exchequer. We have an enterprise zone and a station has been built and opened. This is all good news.

Jobs are being created in the town. Although we have an unacceptable level of unemployment at 21 per cent., 3,000 jobs have been created in the past year within the new town of Telford, thanks to the Government's help. We have international firms and many of them have come to the area with Government money. These include Maxell, Ricco and Tutung. Local companies such as Brintons and Blockleys have been expanding quickly. This has happened in Telford because of the facilities that have been provided by the new town corporation.

The Government have given every support for which we could possibly ask and I am upset that the creation of 3,000 extra jobs has been hailed by certain Socialist councillors as the 'sham of Telford'. I welcome an additional 3,000 jobs. It reflects great credit on Telford that at this time it has been able to create that number of jobs, even with Government help.

I address myself to a couple of the outstanding issues that will arise if we pass the order. One has been mentioned already by my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow). Housing transfer is an important issue in Telford. The demise of the corporation is envisaged in the early 1990s and we are talking of housing being transferred to housing associations, the district councils or to trusts. I welcome the decision to allow tenants to have their views listened to and I want to know when the Government will ask for their views. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will confirm that housing may be transferred legally to authorities other than district councils. I know that some district councils claim that that cannot happen and that they must have first option. Perhaps my hon. Friend will be able to clarify the position.

To repeat the question my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North asked, what will happen to the proceeds that are received as a result writing off these assets today? I wish to put on record my appreciation of the hard work that the chairman of the corporation, Lord Northfield, carries out on behalf of the new town. He spends money wisely and takes a great personal interest in every housing scheme. I have in mind especially the Admaston scheme. The corporation encouraged and persuaded a developer to design houses that would be appropriate for that area, which is one of outstanding beauty. Lord Northfield was personally and closely involved with the choice of the builder and the way in which a decision was arrived at. The land did not go to the highest bidder. It went instead to the one which, it was thought, would produce the right sort of development.

Mr. Gow: Will my hon. Friend tell the House what discussions he has had with Lord Northfield on this important matter? If Lord Northfield were a Member of this place instead of the other place, would he vote for the order?

Mr. Hawksley: I assume that my hon. Friend is correct. I have not discussed the order with the noble Lord. I believe that he would welcome the proposals. I know of his great interest in housing. The matter that creates, great concern in Telford. As the House knows, the noble Lord is the paid chairman of Consortium Development, which is a consortium of building companies such as Barretts, Wimpey, Tarmac, Brosely and Christian Salvesen. My constituents are worried that there may be a conflict of interest in his chairmanship of the new town corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member must confine his remarks to the order. He must not stray as wide as he is doing at the moment.

Mr. Hawksley: I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for that warning. Respecting your decision, I wonder whether the payment of the chairman and the expenditure and the policies that he implements in the corporation have not something to do with the items of expenditure that we are writing off and about which we have been told so little. The Government should advise us whether they are happy that the chairman of their corporation, which is allocated a large sum of money, has a conflict of interest as chairman of a consortium that has interests in the town. That is the important point, because nearly all those building companies do work in Telford.

I gather that there is a precedent. When the Docklands board was set up, it had a chairman who was involved in housing. It was decided that his companies could not operate in Docklands. Will the same happen in Telford? Is the land sold to private builders to be excluded from companies in the consortium of which the noble Lord is chairman? We want to know the answer to that important point. If we cannot solve this conflict to the satisfaction of my constituents and many builders in the area who are not members of the consortium of which his Lordship is chairman, his Lordship may have to resign, or he may have to be replaced.

Mr. Gow: In a most interesting speech, my hon. Friend has referred to the advances to the Telford development corporation. I have studied the expenditure closely, as I know my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon) has. Will my hon. Friend direct his formidable intellect to the final line of page 9 of the order, which has puzzled my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary as it has puzzled me. What has happened to the sum of £373·26, which is the difference between the sum in the first column and the sum in the second column? Will my hon. Friend address himself to that problem? He has not got round to doing so.

Mr. Hawksley: I thank my hon. Friend for drawing that to my attention. I am sure that the Minister heard the question. I hope that, whith the advice of his civil servants, he will be able to answer that in reply. My hon. Friend has raised an interesting point. It shows the lack of information that we are receiving on this important order.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) spoke of his personal involvement with the Ironbridge Gorge Museum. That museum was set up with finance from the corporation. It was a Museum of Europe a few years ago. It is the leading tourist attraction in Shropshire. It is doing a good job for the area. If we are to write off loans, we should be told what the Government believe should happen to the sites of the museum that are currently owned by the Telford development corporation. We should be interested to know whether the Government intend to give continued support to the museum to ensure that it has the resources it needs and which are now channelled through the new town corporation of Telford. We must support and welcome the museum and its development, because it has an important part to play within the ambit of the Telford development corporation.

I turn to a further item of expenditure in the order. As I do not have the details, I am unable to pinpoint the number of the item. It concerns the purchase, in the late 1960s, of land at Nedge Hill. That involves a scandal of frightening proportions. I believe that the corporation has wasted £500,000 of public money, and that it is hiding that fact. The corporation purchased the land, with vacant possession, with money that was given in the late 1960s for the purchase. The corporation then offered to let the land back to the farmer.

The corporation has found, now that it wants the land back, that instead of giving a 364-day licence, it gave a full agricultural tenancy. The corporation is now having to pay anything up to £500,000 to get its own land back. In view of the fact that the corporation bought the land with vacant possession, I believe the public would view the expenditure of an extra £500,000 ill spent.

I believe that there should be an inquiry by Ministers into the reason why the expenditure is necessary. It may be, as the corporation has implied, that the last Labour Government, as a policy decision, insisted that the land was let back to the former owner. On the other hand, it may be that the officers of the corporation made a mistake when they issued the licence for an agricultural tenancy. In any case it is scandalous that £500,000 could have been wasted.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): Perhaps my hon. Friend would consider the importance of getting the matter that he has raised — the purchase of land for £500,000 — cleared up following the extinguishment of liabilities and the handing over to the corporation and the district council. In Skelmersdale, we found that many projects that needed to be sorted ur were left over. I urge my hon. Friend to consider, when he advises the local development corporation what to do, to ensure that all the loose ends are tied up so that the problems will not continue into the future, as was the case in the north-west.

Mr. Hawksley: I thank my hon. Friend for those words. It is essential that the matter be sorted out quickly. The corporation wants the land for its own use. However, a similar position may apply in respect of other land in the Telford area. The public should be told whether the corporation has put other land that it bought with vacant possession under an agricultural tenancy that it must buy back when it wants to use the site.

Mr. Marlow: I wonder whether it is proper to point out at this stage that, in this important debate about new towns, apart from the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) and the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell)——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member should not intervene. It has nothing to do with the order before us.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Until the last election I represented the Deans and Knightsridge area of the new town of Livingston. As I understand it, I would be ruled out of order if I raised the problems of Livingston in this debate.

Mr. Hind: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. Members know very well that they do not have to represent a new town in order to take part in a debate or be interested in what goes on in the House.

Mr. Hind rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member must not pursue this matter because it is out of order.

Mr. Hind: It is a separate point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There are a number of hon. Members present who do not represent the new towns which are listed in the order but who represent other new towns. Would it be proper to raise the problems that occur in those other new towns that are similar to the problems that will be created in the new towns listed in the order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not for me to give advice to the House. If an hon. Member is out of order, I shall say so. I shall decide when an hon. Member is speaking whether he is in or out of order.

Mr. Hawksley: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I remind the House that I began by praising the Government for their support for Telford. They are not given, locally or nationally, the credit that is deserved for the size of the expenditure on all the new towns, especially on Telford.

The Telford development corporation built an ice skating rink in the Telford town cenre. Many of my constituents welcomed that project. But the corporation gave that rink away—it would probably claim that it was sold—to the Wrekin district council for £1 towards the cost of building the rink. I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will clarify how the budgeting was done in charging for that item. I wonder whether this is one of those items that are being written off.

It is interesting that The Wreckin district council, having taken over the rink for £1 and having said that it would break even on running costs, succeeded in the first year in incurring a loss of amost £200,000. That is not very good. I know that the district council is aware of the problems and is trying to correct them. Credit must be given to the Government, the TDC and Ministers for giving Telford an ice skating rink for £1. My electors appreciate that. Credit should go where it belongs—to the Government for having provided those resources.

Mr. Gow: Will my hon. Friend please direct his mind to the specific problems revealed between pages 7 and 14 of the order? Has he noticed that it is the Telford development corporation, not the development coroporation of any of my hon. Friends, which has the largest number of items—419? Will my hon. Friend explain how we are supposed to know to which item each number relates? In my respectful submission, we cannot debate this matter properly unless we know to which items those numbers relate. Can my hon. Friend tell me one of those 419 items that relates to a specific project?

Mr. Hawksley: I am afraid that my hon. Friend is right. I cannot give one item with a specific expenditure against it.

Mr. Gow: Not even one?

Mr. Hawksley: Not even one. The reason is, to quote from the parliamentary answer to one of my questions,

"Individual loans cannot be linked to specific activities or items of expenditure."—[Official Report, 16 July 1986.]

It is frightening that in this document there is a large number of items, which my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) rightly highlights, which are attributable to Telford, yet we do not know what any of them are. I hope that we shall be enlightened before the end of the debate as to the exact purpose of the loans that we are asked to write off.

Mr. Gow: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. You will have been listening carefully to my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley). There are 419 items before the House which relate to my hon. Friend's new town, but he cannot identify one project that is related to an individual loan. Do you not think that a Treasury Minister or possibly my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General should be present to help us in these serious matters?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member has been a Member for a long time and he knows very well that the presence of Ministers is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Hawksley: Thank you for your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am slightly disappointed because I had hoped that the proposals of my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne would help the House in our proceedings on the order. I hope that we shall be advised of the details of these items of expenditure. Because we are talking of such large sums, I hope that it is possible for my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to find out what at least some of the items are. I assume that the items to which I have referred in the corporation's expenditure are hidden away somewhere in those figures. I assume that I am right, because you have not yet ruled me out of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for dealing with the expenditure on these items.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member must not tempt me.

Mr. Hawksley: Thank you for that second warning, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I shall draw my remarks to a conclusion to allow my hon. Friends who represent other new towns to speak of the experiences of their corporations. It is important that we put on the record the amounts that the Government have put in to the new town corporations. I hope that the questions of vacant land, of Lord Northfield's chairmanship of the Telford development corporation and of the items of expenditure listed in the order will be clarified. Provided we are given clarification that I consider to be satisfactory I shall be only too happy to support the order.

Mr. Roland Boyes (Houghton and Washington): It may be helpful if I say a few words at this time.

When my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) asked me whether the order should be discussed upstairs or on the Floor of the House, I advised my hon. Friend, who with others made the final decision, that it should be taken on the Floor of the House to give those hon. Members who live in, represent or are interested in the new towns an opportunity to take part in this debate in public and, as the Under-Secretary of State has done, to make constructive criticism and offer helpful suggestions and even praise.

In future I shall hesitate long before making such a recommendation if Conservative Members abuse it by talking at great length with the single objective of preventing a second Adjournment debate.

Mr. Christopher Murphy (Welwyn Hatfield): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for an hon. Member to criticise other hon. Members before they have even spoken, especially those who represent new towns and therefore have a particular interest in the order? I beg you to make a ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am listening carefully to the preamble of the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) I am grateful for hon. Members' great interest in what is in order and what is not, but that is really a matter for the Chair to decide.

Mr. Boyes: I have not as yet made any criticism of any individual Conservative Member. I am saying merely that I hope that my recommendation is not abused by Conservative Members speaking at great length with the objective, which is now well known to the House, of preventing a second Adjournment debate.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire) rose——

Mr. Boyes: As hon. Members know full well, I am one of the great "givers away" in debates, whether I am on the Back Bench or at the Dispatch Box, but I intend to give no assistance to those who want unnecessarily to prolong the debate.

Mr. Marlow: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) to make dire allegations about hon. Members without giving way and responding to the legitimate points that they might wish to make? This is Parliament at its worst.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman knows that whether an hon. Member gives way or not is a matter for him.

Mr. Boyes: The hon. Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) again suggests that I am accusing Tory Members of something. I am merely suggesting that I hope they will not abuse my decision on this occasion.

This is an extremely short order, as is the explanatory note, but I shall argue that it has some important political significance. As the Minister said, the objective of the order is to extinguish, on 1 September 1986, liabilities in respect of certain advances made by the Secretary of State to the development corporations of Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Telford and Warrington and Runcorn. In section 62A of the New Towns Act 1981 there is a limit to which the liability can be extinguished, but the figure of approximately £1·7 billion is well within that limit.

As I have said, this debate is of interest to people regardless of whether they represent or live in a new town. My experience of new towns is extremely wide. I have lived in Peterlee in the north-east of England for 25 years and represented it at local authority level. I now represent the new town of Washington, having represented it from 1979 to 1984 in the European Parliament. Hon. Members on both sides of the House are aware that the new town movement is very important. When a student ccomes to write the history of the new towns, he or she will note the significant contribution that they have made to all aspects of our lives. They are one of the great post-war experiments carried out by many, at great risk. There is no doubt that the risk has been well worth while and that the new town movement is undoubtedly highly successful.

The new town movement is a great tribute to Lewis Silkin, the father of the right hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Mr. Silkin), who was the great architect and innovator of the new town movement. He had the foresight to see that housing, economics and other problems would arise in the future and, most importantly and significantly, he was able to find a solution to those perceived problems. His son, the right hon. Member for Deptford, in a distinguished career in the House, has continued his father's aspirations.

The director of the Town and Country Planning Association agrees with the point that I have made. He wrote in Town and Country Planning in October 1985:

"I believe it amply confirms that the new towns' programme represents one of the greatest achievements of post-war planning."

It is because of the success of the jobs started by many corporations but which have not yet been finished that I am resentful of the Government's policies. The Government are putting their fingers, sticky with the glue of privatisation, into areas where they have no right to go, sometimes less openly than others. Opposition Members and others outside the Chamber have demonstrated on many occasions that sometimes their privatisation plans are carried out overtly and sometimes covertly. I shall make a few remarks about that, because the order is directly related to those privatisation plans. Privatisation of new towns may make sense in the extremely narrow ideoligical thoughts of the Government, but it makes little sense politically, economically, financially or socially for many others.

Conservative Members have already referred in speeches and interventions to economic development. The new towns have played a vital role in the generation of jobs. In the process, they have demanded billions of pounds of public investment in town centres, house building, factory site preparation and job promotion. I do not think that anyone on either side of the House can question the fact that the experiment has proved to be worthwhile and that the investment is important for those who chose to live in the new towns. That investment has also been of great help to people who live in the areas surrounding new towns. In areas of high unemployment, new towns have played a particularly important role. Although the new town that I represent and the one in which I live are not the subject of this debate, they have been essential in promoting, obtaining and protecting jobs.

No one on either side of the House believes that the new towns, run by development corporations, or by quangos with representatives appointed by the Secretary of State, should last for ever. There will come a time when the new towns will be considered to have completed their useful lives and their assets will have to be disposed of. What is of concern is that the Government appear to be hell-bent on winding up the new towns without considering their role within the region in which they exist. In particular, they are ignoring their relationship to industrial decline and the related high unemployment levels. Although those aspects are not the main subject of the debate today, they will have to be the subject of a debate in the near future.

This debate is concerned with the disposal of assets—how, and to whom. I have listened with great interest to the intervention of Conservative Members who have been trying to get more details about what this mass of figures represents. Clearly, judging by the number of hon. Members who wish to take part in the debate, they have found the order extremely interesting — I cannot say enlightening—reading.

The reports of the four new towns under discussion today, Peterborough, Milton Keynes, Warrington and Runcorn and Telford are, as the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) pointed out, referred to in the "Reports of the Development Corporations," dated 31 March 1985 and, as the hon. Gentleman rightly stated, that is the latest available annual report. We expect the next one a little later in the year.

The board of each new town has expressed a desire, in its annual report, to carry on with the work that it is doing. The chairmen especially want to complete the job aspect of the new towns. I shall consider one comment from the remarks of the chairmen of the four boards.

[Mr. Boyes]

Peterborough, which has a population of 128,000, was designated as a new town in 1967. The chairman in his annual report said:

"To enhance the attractions of Peterborough — and underpin this success—more building and infrastructure are required. But for the most part, the need is to keep together, for as long as necessary, the special expertise that an established development corporation provides to promote enterprise and foster further growth."

The chairman of Milton Keynes with a population of 122,000, which was first designated as a new town in 1967, said:

"It is our emphatic view that the city should be completed with the care and attention to balance so necessary for a 'greenfield' site and that the skills of the Corporation are essential to that task. The benefits of Milton Keynes to the region and the nation, as well as to the local inhabitants, must be fully realised."

As hon. Members are well aware, Warrington and Runcorn is a combined development corporation. Warrington development corporation was designated in 1968, and Runcorn in 1964. The population at the latest known figures, was about 210,000. In his annual report, the chairman of the board said:

"A great deal undoubtedly remains to be done, if the continued development of the two New Towns and the satisfactory termination of the Corporation's role in the process are to be accomplished in parallel and with equal success."

The fourth new town under consideration is Telford, to which the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley) addressed his remarks. It has a population of about 109,000. As has been correctly stated, it was originally designated as Dawley new town in 1963. In the 22nd annual report of the Telford development corporation, the chairman said:

"My regret is that the constraints of government policies on the new towns emphasise less what could be achieved than how little time there is to do something worthwhile. It is perhaps even more regrettable that so successful an instrument of national policy should be seen as having no further role in the revival of the economic fortunes of other parts of the United Kingdom."

Whether this is the correct time to be winding up development corporations is an important matter for debate. On the other hand, each of the remarks that I have chosen from the annual reports shows that each development corporation is putting much energy, expertise, money and cash into the promotion and development of jobs. The Government's policy has led to massive unemployment, and each of those corporations sees the continuation of its existence as important in the battle to create jobs throughout the nation.

Although many people would say that the development corporations have been successful to date, there are still many problems to be solved. I note that some hon. Members in the Chamber were present at the meeting with representatives of the Association of District Councils new towns committee earlier this week. Problems were raised which will need to be discussed at great length in the House in future. Some of the problems raised related to housing assets. There was quite a good discussion about whether local authorities should be offered the houses, and whether housing associations or co-operatives should run groups of the houses. The debate was on whether the local authority should have an automatic right, or whether tenants should be consulted as to their desires about the houses in which they live. That is a vital debate, which will have to be concluded. It is of interest to hon. Members on both sides of the House.

One of the aspects of the Government's privatisation programme is to sell off the town centres in the new towns. As a former member of a local authority, I am not suggesting for one moment that the local authorities should take over and run town centres, but I believe, as do many of my collagues in local authorities, that at least the local authority should have some say in how the town centres in the new towns are disposed of.

When assets are sold, what happens to the proceeds? Surely some of the proceeds, especially in areas of high unemployment, should go to the local authorities. Surely it is not unreasonable for the local authority to have a share in something that it has been instrumental in helping to develop. The director of the Town and Country Planning Association shares that view and said in an article in The Guardian by the journalist John Cunningham on 10 April 1985:

"The basic idea is that the enhanced values created by the development corporations on the community's behalf should be ploughed back. It was the initial investment of the taxpayer which set them off."

If those assets went back to the local authority, the product of the assets would stay fairly and squarely in that area, where the development corporation is.

What is the order all about? Many interventions were made by Conservative Members to the Minister about that. The purpose of the order is to extinguish certain liabilities of the development corporations that are under discussion. The power to make the order was provided by section 62A of the New Towns Act 1981, which was inserted by section 8(1) of the New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Act 1985.

The hon. Member for Eastbourne, the then Minister for Housing and Construction, led for the Government when the Bill was going through the House. Some of my colleagues and I asked particularly about what is now section 8, and its consequences. To clarify the point, I shall quote from section 62A of the New Towns Act. It says:

"(1) The Secretary of State may, with the Treasury's consent, by order extinguish to such extent as may be specified in the order any liabilities of a development corporation in respect of advances made by him to the corporation under section 58(1) of the corresponding provisions of the 1946 Act or the 1965 Act.

(2) The aggregate amount of liabilities extinguished by order under this section shall not exceed £1·750."

If Conservative Members have studied the new towns annual reports for the year ending 31 March 1985, as the hon. Member for Eastbourne clearly has, they will have seen the financial statements for each of the development corporations. For those who are following closely, I refer to page 121 dealing with Milton Keynes development corporation's annual report, although a similiar paragraph is inserted in each of the new town's reports. The paragraph is headed, "Suspended Loans" and states:

"The Government has announced that it intends to take measures to produce a permanent solution to the problem of the substantial and growing revenue deficits of certain development corporations."

We are discussing that this morning.

The New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Bill was debated on 20 November 1984. The then Minister for Housing and Construction, the hon. Member for Eastbourne, explained why the provision was necessary. He said:

"clause 8 gives to the Secretary of State power to write off sufficient debt to give a capital structure which is capable of being serviced by the assets which the corporations hold."—[Official Report, 20 November 1984; Vol. 68, c. 165.]

That is to say that the Government wanted to achieve the objective of reaching a financial break-even point. That argument is put forward to justify the writing-off of debts and liabilities of new towns to enable further growth and expansion, and especially to attract industry and jobs as part of the immediate sub-region development.

However, other than ideological dogma—a perpetual drive fuelled by monetarist policies—it is difficult to find a justification for what the Government are doing. When the Labour party forms the next Government it should take a leaf out of the Conservative book and introduce mechanisms to write off some of the massive debts that local authorities face as a consequence of many years of Conservative Government.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Boyes: I shall certainly not give way to that hon. Member.

Mr. Marlow: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Boyes: I am certainly not giving way to the hon. Gentleman.

Local authorities suffer the same long-term debt problem as new towns, because they have had to take out loans over a 60-year period——

Mr. Marlow: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I regret having to raise a point of order, but the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) has said to every Labour local authority in the land, "Spend as much as you like. When we come into power, if we come into power, we will pay"——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not——

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must resume his seat. He knows very well that that is a matter for debate and not a point of order for the Chair. He is certainly not raising a point of order.

Mr. Boyes: The nonsense spoken by the hon. Member for Northampton, North absolutely justifies my not giving way to him. What he said about me was quite incorrect and not worth an intervention. I shall not join in the charade in which some Conservative Members are hoping to play a part later this morning. To save hon. Members rising, I say now that I shall not give way——

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): Will my hon. Friend please stop banging the Dispatch Box, as he might destroy it?

Mr. Boyes: My hon. Friend is worried that I might destroy the Dispatch Box because he wants to speak from it later this morning.

Mr. Sheerman: No, it is being reserved for the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher), who will be on the Opposition Benches in the near future.

Mr. Boyes: I fear that my hon. Friend's interventions are encouraging Conservative Members.

What was the motivation behind section 8? The hon. Member for Eastbourne said in the debate on 20 November 1984:

"If investment is needed, it will be met from receipts. The surplus will be used to redeem debt. In this way, the assets of the new towns will be realised as quickly as practicable for the benefit of the taxpayer."—[Official Report, 20 November 1984; Vol. 68, c. 166.]

There is a contradiction in terms there. It is all part and parcel of the Government's privatisation programme. The new towns are being privatised and the extinguishment of liabilities is an essential and necessary element in the process to make them more attractive to purchasers.

That is a well-known technique. As my hon. Friends know, I have been involved in the anti-water privatisation campaign. There is an interesting comparison here, as the Government are threatening to write-off £5 billion debts of water authorities, forcing them to make price increases to make abnormal profits. The Northumbria water authority has increased its profits sevenfold, and the Thames water authority, on an increased turnover of £46 million, has made an increased profit of £45 million.

Section 8 is part and parcel of the Government's programme to privatise new towns. Hon. Members should be aware that the reason for the liabilities being written-off is to make the new towns more attractive to purchasers.

If I may digress for a moment on the question of water authorities and tell the House what Mr. Watts, the chairman of the Thames water authority, said yesterday——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman really is digressing and he must address himself to the order.

Mr. Boyes: I am trying to establish a point that has not been made by any Conservative Member—the real intention behind the writing-off of new town liabilities.

During the latter stages of the 1970 to 1974 Conservative Government, the third generation new towns faced problems caused by rising interest rates and rising inflation. However, the power in section 8 was introduced for quite different reasons. As my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) said, section 8 was clearly designed "to whet the appetite of the private profit motive."—[Official Report, 20 November 1984; Vol. 68, c. 173.]

The fact that this order is to do with privatisation is echoed in an article by John Cunningham in The Guardian on 10 April 1985 and by Gareth David in The Observer on 13 October 1985. John Cunningham wrote:

"Compared with the furore over the privatisation of the aerospace, oil and telecommunications industries, the Government's disposal of the substantial national assets represented by the new towns is proceeding almost by stealth."

Gareth David wrote:

"one equally far-reaching privatisation exercise has been taking place almost unnoticed. Since 1979 the Commission for the New Towns has been selling off the assets of the 8 towns it inherited when their respective development corporations completed their work. By the end of March 1985, it had raised some £317 million."

On 10 June 1986 the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he would "indicate the main achievements of Her Majesty's Government with respect to urban and new town affairs in the last seven years."

The Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction replied:

"The Government's policy is to bring the programme to a successful conclusion with the maximum possible involvement of the private sector."

He said that an important achievement was

[Mr. Boyes]

"The realisation since 1979 of about £1·25 billion from the sale of assets (approximately £850 million from sales of industrial and commercial property and approximately £450 million from sales of dwellings and housing land)." — [Official Report, 10 June 1986; Vol. 99, c. 115-17.]

That represents a typical Government objective. Irrespective of the needs of the people and the local authorities, cash must be raised by selling assets to the private sector. Assets can be sold only once, and clearly the best parts go first. It is what Lord Macmillan described as selling off the family silver. It has created an imbalance in the economics of the new towns.

In simple terms, this order means that the four new towns — Milton Keynes, Warrington and Runcorn, Telford and Peterborough — will have enough of their debts written-off so that income from assets will balance costs. For the past three years, financially, time has been frozen. However, the premature forced selling of assets to the private sector meant that a break-even point could not be reached, so a calculation was made of how much debt needed to be written-off to balance the books.

If the objective had been financial manipulation to deal with losses related to long-term borrowing agreements with the Treasury, that would have been a logical move with which the Opposition could agree. There is little point in accumulating debt that can never be repaid. However, that was not the reason. The reason for the write-off is to make assets more attractive to private investors but, as more and more assets are sold, servicing the accumulated debts becomes more difficult and eventually impossible. Clearly the most valuable assets, producing the most income, are sold first, and the assets left cannot produce enough income to pay off the interest on the debts. That makes what is left behind less attractive to the private sector and means that fewer liabilities are extinguished.

The Minister may talk about financial reconstruction, but we in the Labour party are well aware that the Government's real objective is to move further down the road towards privatisation. They are making the new towns that have been developed over many years attractive to private investors in order to line the pockets of their friends in the City.

It being Eleven o'clock, MR. SPEAKER interrupted proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 5 (Friday sittings).

College of the Air

The Paymaster General and Minister for Employment (Mr. Kenneth Clarke): With the leave of the House, I should like to make a statement about the establishment of the College of the Air.

In 1981 my right hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior) announced the introduction and the formation of Open Tech. Open Tech was not a new institution but a series of programmes sponsored by the Manpower Services Commission designed to introduce new courses of technician training and to improve the accessibility of these courses by the preparation and the use of distance learning techniques. Distance learning enables people to undertake studies in particular subjects using books, other printed material, sound tape and video in their own homes or offices at their own speed and at a time of their choosing.

Since then we have invested some £45 million in Open Tech, enabling some 50,000 students to obtain new skills and qualifications. These programmes were often prepared in conjunction with private industry. Firms, such as Austin Rover, Lucas and ICI, among others, have taken part in the preparation of training programmes and helped in the accumulation of experience and knowledge in this modern method of training. Today the United Kingdom has taken a leading position in this field.

We now propose to build on these developments by assisting with the creation of an open college, the College of the Air. Our aim is to enlist the full contribution of radio and television to support and deliver open learning courses in all areas of vocational competence. The college will be able to assess needs and arrange, co-ordinate and promote courses. It will work through other organisations to ensure student enrolment, tutor support, work assessment and testing according to the individual requirements of the students.

We plan that the college should be a company limited by guarantee and registered as a charity. The college will be able to seek and obtain the active support and involvement of commerce and industry. It should be able to attract sponsorship consistent with the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1981 and to establish good relations with the educational interests and the broadcasting authorities.

Once established I anticipate that at the heart of the college's relationship with the broadcasters will be an agreement with the Independent Broadcasting Authority. This agreement will as a minumum provide for regular programmes on Channel 4 devoted to college purposes commissioned from a variety of sources by the channel, and for arrangements for promotion of the college. It will set out the participation of the ITV companies in the production and transmission of college programmes and arrange for the involvement of independent local radio. The BBC, too, has expressed a willingness to provide series of programmes and course materials for the college as part of the BBC's continuing education output and there will also be some wider opportunities on daytime television. I would expect the college to pursue those opportunities.

I hope shortly to be able to announce the name of the chairman of the college whose first task will be to conclude detailed plans for the formation of the college after discussions with the Manpower Services Commission, broadcasters, educationists and the many potential sponsors and guarantors who have already indicated their interest. The Government will be prepared to join with others in acting as guarantors of the College and in contributing to its cost until it is fully established. Our aim is to create a self-sustaining institution which will not have to rely indefinitely on the public purse.

I hope that the College of the Air will start broadcasting no later than September 1987. This is an ambitious project and I anticipate that its range of courses could, within the first five years, provide up to 1 million students with the opportunities to progress towards vocational and technical qualifications.

The establishment of the college, following the developments outlined in our recent White Paper, "Working Together—Education and Training" will offer further radical developments in our training and education systems. It will help with the introduction of courses for the technical and vocational education initiative and be of valuable assistance in the training of teachers in scarce skills. It will also assist in the introduction of enterprise training and give help to careers officers in the field. It will also build on the national vocational qualification to be introduced by the new national council for vocational qualifications. I commend the initiative to the House.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): The idea of a College of the Air is a good one, and in principle hon. Members on both sides of the House will welcome it. Unfortunately, when one looks closer at the proposals, one sees some sinister motives behind its creation.

Is the Paymaster General aware that his proposals involved the privatisation of the non-advanced sector of further education? Is it not the case that the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Paymaster General will go cap in hand to British industry, asking for sponsorship for training? That is bizarre. Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware of the complete collapse of industrial training since the Government came to power in 1979? We need a much bolder initiative than this. Is he further aware that the level of training has decreased from 5·9 per cent. of those working in manufacturing 10 years ago to 2 per cent. now, and that only 112,000 men, women and youngsters are in training in the whole of industry?

A College of the Air based on a voluntary system will not work. How can it be a working proposition when in the past industry has refused to pay for training? Does the Paymaster General believe that industry will suddenly come forward to sponsor the College of the Air? We in the Labour party know that the only way to train our people is to make industry pay and to levy industry.

There is a further exceedingly worrying aspect. It is all very well having television programmes on various channels, but is the Paymaster General aware that the real task of vocational training is done on the ground, face to face, by qualified tutors and teachers? Are we right in thinking that all the contracts for delivery on the ground will be open to tender from any source, whether private contractors or Johnny-come-latelys into training? Is it the case that our further education colleges, their leaders and unions have not been consulted about the College of the Air? Is the Paymaster General aware that, given the widespread despondency in the education and training world, if there has not been consultation on the document and if the Government are to create a private sector of non-advanced further education, it will be resisted throughout the teaching and training profession?

The idea of a College of the Air is a good one. Unfortunately, it will be based on private sponsorship and on the privatisation of the non-advanced further education sector. If that is the case, as we believe it to be, it will not be a success. The spectacle of the Paymaster General trying to sell this as a bold new initiative does no credit to the Government or to the House.

Mr. Clarke: Obviously I am glad that the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) began by saying that the idea was good and that he welcomed it in principle. I found most of the rest of his comments a most curiously political reaction, and his desperate attempt to find sinister motives behind the idea particularly curious. There is no question of this being part of any privatisation programme. The college will enter into arrangements with existing colleges of advanced and non-advanced further education and with private training agencies and training organisations set up by companies for their work forces to provide contact with students and to enable them to have access to new material. The College of the Air will have a small central unit and will enter into arrangements with all these groups, including the colleges, for the use of the material by the students.

The hon. Gentleman objects to sponsorship. The companies which have so far expressed support in principle and interest in becoming involved include the Mirror Group, ICI, Prudential Assurance, Lucas, the Burton Group, Unilever and the Bank of England. The motives of these companies are not sinister. They are showing their concern about training, and their support for an idea which will have a substantial impact in opening opportunities to people presently in employment and to the unemployed to add to their skills and improve their position in the labour market.

That should have had an unqualified welcome from the hon. Gentleman. I am sorry that, having accepted that there is a need for such a scheme and that it is a good idea, he went on to produce such extremely tortuous attempts to find something to object to.

Mr. Robert Rhodes James (Cambridge): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that, as a strong supporter of distance learning in principle, I welcome the proposal, but it is difficult enough to get industry and business to invest in and support universities and polytechnics? This will clearly be an extremely expensive project. Will he bear in mind that, if it is carrried out at the expense of other institutions of higher education, I shall have to look at it very carefully?

Mr. Clarke: I note my hon. Friend's comments, and I appreciate that he has a strong interest and involvement in higher and further education. I assure him that the cost will not be as heavy as he expects. We are looking for guarantors for the company to support the central unit. We must ensure that the scheme does not lead to competition for funds among instituions of education. The amount of sponsorship and support that we want will be forthcoming without causing damage to other institutions. Among the main users of the College of the Air will be companies which wish to train their work forces. It will become part of their ordinary industrial costs.

Mr. Michael Meadowcroft (Leeds, West): On behalf of the Liberal party, I warmly welcome the idea and regret the somewhat mean spirit in which it was received by the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on behalf of the Labour party. However, there are those in education and broadcasting who have already expressed their concern on professional grounds about some of the strategic proposals. I hope that the Paymaster General will note the constructive suggestions from the professionals.

On funding, does the right hon. and learned Gentleman accept that the best solution to such projects is a partnership of funding between public and private bodies? Will he encourage the public education authorities and other education bodies to play a proper part, through their own funding, in the College of the Air?

On a personal note, as one who missed out completely on further and higher education at the age of 16 and who had the benefit of second-chance education later, I welcome any chance to broaden the opportunities and widen the horizons of British people. I hope that the idea works and I wish it every success.

Mr. Clarke: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's support for the idea and for the fact that he offered himself as an example of what can be achieved if people take advantage of such opportunities. In the discussions which have taken place so far, we have been very much involved with educationists, and we shall continue those discussions. Plainly, it is essential to have the support of those interested in education and training and to have the co-operation and support of professional bodies. Those who are engaged professionally in the colleges and in training organisations will enter into arrangements with the College of the Air to enable students to have access to the programme.

Mr. William Benyon (Milton Keynes): What role will the Open University play in this scheme? I refer especially to the spare capacity in its modern television and radio studios and to the expertise that it has in distance learning.

Mr. Clarke: I realise that the Open University has been extremely successful in developing its programmes and that it has some spare capacity. We are discussing with the broadcasting authorities access to the main television channels, promotional activity during the day, and the potential for broadcasting training videos. There is not necessarily a conflict or competition with the Open University. If we can build on the experience of the Open University where it is relevant to the project, we shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton (Fife, Central): What will be achieved by the new college that cannot be achieved by existing educational institutions such as the universities, the Open University and the polytechnics, given adequate resources? In view of the Government's mean and shortsighted handling of the universities, does it not augur ill for any new proposition? How much additional new public money will be involved as a direct consequence of the proposal?

Mr. Clarke: The hon. Gentleman does not fully appreciate the difference between distance learning, to use the jargon, and the traditional position of students in colleges and universities that he described. Distance learning, which involves the use of material made available through video tapes, audio tapes, books and other material by students such as we describe, enables people to improve their training while they are at work. They can learn during working hours if the firm enters into the right arrangements. It enables people to acquire more training and education without having to enrol as full-time students at polytechnics, universities or colleges of education. Many people can learn only in that way. It is impossible for them to take one or two years out of their lives to become full-time students.

The proposal is not in any way a challenge to the education institutions or to the professions. It is an addition and a new facility which will support the growth of distance learning and give more opportunities to more people.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): As one who has an honours degree in the university of life, is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that I am delighted to welcome the College of the Air? Will he take on board the warm welcome expressed by the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft)? Those who missed out on higher education will have an opportunity to expand their skills and learning through the scheme. Does he agree that there will be no difficulty in finding sponsorship as companies will flock to the idea? It is very much to their advantage to support the scheme. I warmly congratulate my right hon. and learned Friend on the scheme.

Mr. Clarke: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. No doubt he has a first-class degree in the university of life, which he demonstrates in his lifestyle. He also acknowledges that sometimes more tangible qualifications are required in many walks of life. The scheme will provide an opportunity for many people to acquire skills.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Can the Minister explain what the sponsors will get out of this? Since big business will be involved in one form or another, and since it is involved in making profit at the expense of everyone else, what will it get out of the scheme? Will Imperial tobacco plc be a sponsor? Will any of the companies that are heavily involved in South Africa take part in sponsorship? Can he give me a guarantee that the College of the Air will not be the 18th occasion on which the Government have fiddled the dole figures?

Mr. Clarke: Big and small companies are interested in improving their competitiveness and performance and, therefore, guaranteeing their continued existence and giving added security to their work forces. What a company will get out of this scheme is the ability to give extra training to its work force, to raise the level of skill and, therefore, improve competitiveness and the job security of the workers. Big companies have expressed a general interest in the scheme and have supported it in principle. Small companies will receive assistance, if necessary, through the Manpower Services Commission's training programmes to participate in the scheme. The effect can only be beneficial, both for industry and for employment.

I shall treat the hon. Gentleman's comment about tobacco companies as a serious one and tell him that they will be governed by the usual rules that apply to sponsorship and advertising by those companies, particularly in broadcast material. Therefore, the ability of tobacco companies to participate in sponsorship would be limited. Cigarette manufacturers would be barred from being involved in broadcast material. There would be no such sponsorship on the air; that has been banned for many years.

The hon. Gentleman's persistence in trying to find a connection with other political issues, such as South Africa and the calculation of the unemployment figures, is about as pathetic as the attempts of the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) to link my statement with the usual political debate. The new college will be beneficial for companies and their employees and for the unemployed. It ought to be welcomed.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to bear in mind the fact that Friday provides a greater opportunity for Back Benchers to take part in debates. I will allow questions on the statement to go on for another 10 minutes and I hope that in that time everyone who wishes to be called will be called.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): May I press the right hon. and learned Gentleman about the open learning courses? Would one such course be a study in depth of Select Committee recommendations in relation to the behaviour of most senior civil servants who are as close to the Prime Minister as Haldeman and Ehrlichman were to Richard Nixon? The description is "improper".

Mr. Clarke: As one who frequently has to study Select Committee reports as part of his job, I am sure that I am being educated and trained every time that I turn to one from the Select Committee on Employment or elsewhere, just as I am always educated by the hon. Gentleman's ability to make his point in the most ingenious way on what are otherwise irrelevant matters.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams (Kensington): I congratulate my right hon. and learned Friend extremely warmly on this timely, important and imaginative initiative. May I point out, as I have sought to do in the House on previous occasions, that the value of a service of this kind is enormously enhanced if it is not confined to an English language service? We should aim to produce a world service, on the model of the English language services of the BBC.

There would be a new source of funds to finance the project if we worked with the European Community to make the project part of our contribution to the Lomé convention.

Mr. Clarke: As we must have further discussions with the broadcasting authorities, I shall bear in mind the points made by my hon. Friend. Certainly the Open University and the Open Tech have gained substantial export earnings and found substantial interest abroad in the learning material that they produce.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Will the Minister tell us what significant feature is found in the new scheme, other than commercial sponsorship, that is not actually or potentially within the present structure, including the Open University and the public system of education?

Secondly, what proportion of public and private sponsorship money does the Minister expect to find for the scheme? Thirdly, when people have done their distance learning, who will provide the money for centres where machinery, plant and experienced skilled persons will top it up?

Mr. Clarke: The Open University is providing extremely good quality academic education. The Open Tech is a procurer of programmes, largely aimed at training technicians — quite a narrow field — and also achieving good quality programmes. The College of the Air will be much broader and is aimed at a wide range of education or training for skills. It will aim to provide a much wider range of qualifications and steps towards qualifications in each course. It will fill a gap and invite collaboration with a much wider range of organisations than is the case with existing institutions.

It is not intended that the College of the Air will be sustained by public funds except in the early stages, because there is no doubt that it will be of such value to industry that it will have no difficulty in attracting sponsorship. Obviously there is a political divide between us. I cannot understand why the Labour party is instinctively hostile to a scheme the moment it discovers that it is not dependent on the taxpayer for its financing.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): I join in the general welcome that my right hon. and learned Friend's statement deserves and I hope that the College of the Air will succeed, but I draw attention to the fact that the statement raises again the question whether we need a Department of education and training. After all, the very name of the new institution suggests that the Department of Education and Science should be closely interested in it. The point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Rhodes James) illustrates the great need for co-ordination.

We are promoting an exciting new enterprise in education and training, and some public funds will be necessary, but under the existing policy we are depriving Birkbeck college of London university of funds. Birkbeck does a useful job in a related field to that about which my right hon. and learned Friend has been speaking. May we have some co-ordination to ensure that Birkbeck has a part to play in the new institution?

Mr. Clarke: Questions about the structure of Government ought to be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, but I am sure that she would agree with me and my hon. Friend that concentrating on the structure of Government and the shape of Government Departments is less important than concentrating on what they do. I assure my hon. Friend that there are close relationships between myself and my rght hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Employment and that we work closely in all these areas. I shall draw my hon. Friend's comments about Birkbeck college to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): We were saddened to hear about the academic shortcomings of the Eton education enjoyed by the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), but we recognise that in his case perhaps Eton is not entirely to blame.

May I return to the important matter of funding? We do not want any fudging. May we have a simple answer? What proportion of the funding of the new service will be provided by the Government? Is it true that the proportion will probably be less than 5 per cent.?

Mr. Clarke: Knowing my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) as I do, I can vouch for the fact that his mind is as formidable as his physique.

[Mr. Clarke]

The Government will be one of the guarantors of the company when it is set up. We expect that the college will require pump-priming funding, which will be derived from the budget of the Manpower Services Commission, but we expect that the college will be self-financing. If we can start with as little as 5 per cent. public funding, I shall regard that as a virtue. We cannot be specific at this stage, because one of the first tasks of the chairman and the college will be to work out proposals in more detail, to get the costs specified, and to begin to attract sponsorship. We shall put in the public money required to get it under way. It is intended that it will become wholly self-financing within a short period.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): I congratulate my right hon. and learned Friend on the initiative. Does he agree that the concern expressed by industry about the need for employees to be trained for vocational jobs will be met by the initiative, because employers will be able to say to the College of the Air, "These are the sort of training programmes that we want and these are the skills and employees that we want you to produce"?

Mr. Clarke: My hon. Friend makes an excellent point. It is essential that training is geared closely to the needs of employers and what is required in employment. It is a positive advantage of the scheme that it will attract private sponsorship, because that will enable it to meet that essential requirement.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I welcome my right hon. and learned Friend's statement. Many will be surprised at the carping tone of the Opposition, coming as it does from the party of Lord Wilson of Rievaulx who created the Open University; although one recalls that it was my right hon. Friend the leader of the Conservative party who, as Secretary of State for Education and Science, gave new life to it. My right hon. and learned Friend will be aware of my interest in the TVEI scheme, especially as it was pioneered in Gainsborough, as well as my interest in vocational training. How does he expect schools to benefit from the new scheme and how will the scheme be sponsored by industry as regards the perhaps 40 per cent. of children who do not receive an adequate technical training under the present comprehensive system?

Mr. Clarke: I agree with my hon. Friend's first comment, despite the barracking from Labour Members insisting that they provided the cash. The Opposition apparently welcome our proposal as a good idea in principle but insist that the taxpayer must pay for it despite the willingness of many large firms to sponsor it a most curious reaction.

I am grateful for my hon. Friend's continued support for TVEI which, to some extent, was pioneered in Lincolnshire. The College of the Air will encourage the production of programmes which could be used directly by post-16-year-old students in schools involved in TVEI. The material that we have in mind is aimed at anyone in education from 16-plus and schools may well participate in the arrangements.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. As we are approaching the summer holiday, I will call the three hon. Members who have been seeking to catch my eye, but I ask them to be brief.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): When the scheme achieves the success that it deserves, will my right hon. and learned Friend consider re-examining the basis on which some existing facilities such as the Open University are funded and moving them in the directon of this scheme rather than vice versa?

Mr. Clarke: I note my hon. Friend's comments. The Open University has already taken great steps to market its material and to raise a considerable proportion of its own resources to supplement the public funding and the other universities are also making great efforts to involve industry much more and to have access to the type of funding that American universities have enjoyed for years. I entirely share my hon. Friend's approach to this.

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): What an excellent idea that is! As my right hon. and learned Friend will no doubt be looking for somewhere to locate the headquarters of this exciting scheme — somewhere central, growing, expanding, positive and energetic, with above average intelligence and possibly quite close to Milton Keynes — will he consider placing it in Northampton?

Mr. Clarke: My hon. Friend is right in saying that one of the first things to be discussed when the chairman is appointed will be the location of the central unit to start the college's work. I shall certainly note that my hon. Friend has made the first bid for the location of the unit in suggesting his own constituency.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): I congratulate my right hon. and learned Friend on this superb initiative. With regard to the carping remarks of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and other Opposition Members, does he agree that Oxford, Cambridge and many of our other universities were endowed by the people who had the money at that time—great merchants and others—and that without that kind of sponsorship there would be no universities of the sort now being created through my right hon. and learned Friend's brilliant initiative?

Mr. Clarke: I entirely agree. Had we announced that the scheme would be wholly financed from public funds, when Labour Members discovered the huge commercial advantage to companies in the upgrading of the skills of their work force the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and other Labour Members would doubtless have criticised the extent to which we were subsidising capitalism out of taxpayers' money. I think that they have merely latched on to the argument mentioned by my hon. Friend today for lack of any other argument to latch on to.

Mr. Sheerman: Is the Minister aware that the Opposition greet his announcement with some suspicion because it comes after seven years of dismantling education and training in this country? Like UK2000, it is yet again something that will cost the Government very little. A scheme with a large element of privatisation which will not be financed by the Government will look to most people like another example of the gimmick a day that the Government hope will keep the electorate at bay. Scheme after scheme is being announced by the Government because they know that they are deeply unpopular in all these spheres, and the election is coming.

Mr. Clarke: I reassure the hon. Gentleman that his suspicions are groundless and I trust that they will be allayed as the details are worked out. I advise him to stick to his original comment that the scheme is a good idea which he welcomes in principle.

Royal Assent

Mr. Speaker: I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified Her Royal Assent to the following Acts and measure:

1. Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986
2. Latent Damage Act 1986
3. Outer Space Act 1986
4. Patents, Designs and Marks Act 1986
5. Education Act 1986
6. Patronage (Benefices) Measure 1986

New Towns

Question again proposed.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: I call Mr. Christopher Murphy.

Mr. W. Benyon (Milton Keynes): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Four towns are mentioned in the order. Apart from my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley), I am the only Member present representing one of those towns. Why have I been banished to outer darkness?

Mr. Speaker: That is most unlike the hon. Gentleman. It is only 11.30 and he has certainly not been banished. Indeed, if he remains in the Chamber he may well catch the eye of the Chair, but I now call Mr. Christopher Murphy.

11.35 am

Mr. Christopher Murphy (Welwyn, Hatfield): The order marks another signpost on the route towards the fulfilment of the Government's welcome commitment to bring about a successful conclusion to the new towns programme. The Department's policy has rightly concentrated on the maximum possible involvement of the private sector and a disengagement which leaves self-sufficient communities able to generate their own growth without special assistance from the public sector. The new towns specifically mentioned in the order are taken further towards the achievement of those goals, but the measure arouses concern in terms of both the present and the future situation. The word "accountability" perhaps sums up that concern.

This extinguishment of liabilities gives no indication of how public money has been spent by the quango development corporations and whether it has been spent wisely. In due course, presumably, the new towns will find themselves under yet another quango authority, as the two that I represent in mid-Hertfordshire have found themselves, the corporations being transmuted into one New Towns Commission with a modus operandi that is equally hard to scrutinise.

The extinguishment of liabilities — this time to the taxpayer — will be taken on by the New Towns Commission in terms of realising the assets of the towns in its care. The success or otherwise of that operation is highly relevant to today's debate. Questions of wisdom again might well be raised, as current actions show marked contrasts; for example, Welwyn Garden City and Hatfield had only £6·5 million and £2 million of their assets sold in the last 12 months, compared with £20 million for Hemel Hempstead, a town of similar size in the same county.

With the passing of this order, the need for legislation enabling the New Towns Commission and the development corporations to be the subject of inquiries by the ombudsman becomes the more acute. At present, constituents experiencing difficulties related to the management or purchase of remaining assets are denied recourse to the ombudsman. The Government's intentions in this regard are welcome, but the necessary legislation would be even more welcome

It is to be hoped that the order, despite the problems of accountability that it raises, will assist in bringing the remaining new towns closer to the normality of being simply towns, as the winding up of the New Town Commission legislation correctly envisages. The

[Mr. Christopher Murphy]

Government can then concentrate their efforts on inner city regeneration rather then greenfield development, with the success of the London Docklands Development Corporation as the new waymark.

11.39 am

Mr. W. Benyon (Milton Keynes): I am glad to follow my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley), with one interruption from the Conservative Benches, because the figures that are involved in his new town are almost precisely the same as in mine.

I shall endeavour to put to the House a rather different appreciation of how we see matters in Milton Keynes. However, I sincerely welcome the order. It is long overdue. We were forced to borrow long when we should have been borrowing short, and the order puts us back on the right financial footing. I hope to be able to show that the Government have achieved fantastic value for their investment.

I was adopted as a candidate for the then constituency of Buckingham in 1967, the year that Milton Keynes was designated. It started building in earnest in 1973, some 13 years ago. In those days, we were a music hall joke. We were the place to which one sent one's mother-in-law, and that attitude gathered weight when we had our concrete cows.

Now, 13 years later, we have 128,000—not 122,000—inhabitants, 60,000 new jobs and a first-class infrastructure which is the envy of many other part of the country — a very good communications service with a new railway station, new roads, and all the rest of the infrastructure that is needed for a modern city. We have a flourishing commercial and retail centre, and recreational and cultural activities to go with it. We also have an energy park, which is just about to open its first development.

We have been innovative in housing design and tenure. There is more shared ownership in Milton Keynes than anywhere else in the country. We have 3,000 houses in shared ownership. In short, it is the most successful, the fastest growing community in the United Kingdom.

How has that been achieved with the money that we are now proposing to write off in the order? First and foremost, it has been achieved by a development corporation, well backed by local authorities which have put the needs of industry and commerce above everything else. As a result, over £1 billion of private investment has been attracted since Milton Keynes started. That has resulted in the success of this city. Without the jobs and the wealth creation that goes with them, that sort of growth would have been impossible.

The important thing, however, is the gearing between public expenditure on the one hand, which is what we are talking about with this order, and private investment. In Milton Keynes it is 1:4.

Mr. Gow: Does my hon. Friend recall the occasion when he kindly accompanied me on a visit to Milton Keynes? Has he not omitted one remarkable feature of Milton Keynes? Will he tell the House of the nearly 1,250,000 trees and shrubs that have been planted?

Mr. Benyon: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for reminding me of that additional investment. That is all part of the same picture. It makes the place more attractive. It makes firms want to go there, and it creates the sort of environment in which people want to live.

Mr. Gow: And birds.

Mr. Benyon: Indeed.

People sometimes complain to me that some of the investment that has been made has resulted in too few directly employed people, but they fail to realise the enormous spin-off in the service industries that comes from these investments. That is often forgotten.

The process which culminates in this order has coloured my view of the role of the state in a modern capitalist society. I see that as a pump-priming and innovative role, where the state starts things moving and then gets out. I was one of those who attended the meeting referred to by the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) of representatives of local authorities in whose areas new towns are situated. I was horrified that they seemed to be interested only in retaining assets in their own control and ownership. That is not the way forward for the future.

What we have managed to do in Milton Keynes and other new towns is an example that must be followed elsewhere.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): My hon. Friend says that that example must be followed elsewhere, but, I recall that when I was a member of the Greater London council we were in the process of reversing our policy of encouraging London overspill and the movement of industry out of London to the new towns on the ground that it was denuding central London of resources which London needed to survive. Therefore, does my hon. Friend, with his great experience of these matters, feel that the process should be continued?

Mr. Benyon: I have obviously not explained myself well enough. I was going on to say that the example of Milton Keynes should be followed in urban centres. It has already been followed by the urban development corporation—very successfully in the docklands and fairly successfully in Merseyside, although, obviously, the difficulties there are far greater. That example needs to be followed far more widely than by just the urban development corporations.

This sort of operation should cover the depressed urban areas of England. I suppose that what I am really asking for is an English Development Board, on the lines of the Scottish and Welsh equivalents. The order shows the way forward. I am suggesting an organisation with a finite life of, say, 20 years, with the planning powers that exist at present in urban development corporations and new town corporations and — this is essential in urban areas — it should be the only source of housing finance in those areas. Therefore, it should be able to override, if necessary, the programmes of local authorities.

How should that be funded? It should be funded initially, as were these four new towns, by the Government — the taxpayer. That is an essential characteristic. I noticed from the speech of the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) that the Opposition have missed the point that the Government provide all the finance for the new towns. Therefore, they are the sole shareholder in a substantial property investment.

I am suggesting that the Government should be the shareholder in this new development agency and should also take over the assets of the new towns commission and be the repository of assets on the winding-up of new towns, so that there is a roll-over of finance. That is what I have always wanted for Britain's housing regeneration. I want an organisation which will roll over funds and will not go anywhere near the Treasury. The proceeds of what is sold should not go to the Treasury, but should be rolled over into further development in these depressed urban areas and improve them.

Local authorities are not fitted to undertake that task, and most of them admit it. Over the past year or so we have been faced with the difficulty of the winding up date for the Milton Keynes corporation. We have now been given a date of 1992. I make no secret of the fact that I should have preferred it to be later, and a future Government when it comes to consider the matter again in the 1990s will probably have to decide to go on a bit longer.

The point is that from every political party, local authority, business, trade union, and so on, the message to the Government was the same—"Look, this is a good thing. This is not something that the local authorities can take on. They do not want to do it, they do not have the resources and they want the development corporation to continue."

We are talking about a commercial operation. That is the key to the success of the new towns. It requires special skills. Most new towns are nearing completion and have a great reserve of staff with the necessary expertise. We should draw on that expertise and add to it from industry and the property world. It is a most exciting prospect. We should draw on experience in the United States of America, where enormous strides in urban renovation have been taken. The United States has been particularly successful in dealing with the problems in ethnic minority communities.

If such investment could be coupled with a new look at housing finance on the lines of the report by the Duke of Edinburgh's committee which inquired into British housing, we would be on the verge of a major breakthrough in the inner cities. The regeneration of our inner cities is by far the greatest challenge that faces the country. We should meet that challenge with all the vigour and expertise at our command.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): It is a sign of the enormous importance of this debate that the Minister responsible for sport is seated on the Treasury Bench and not watching a game of cricket. It is a matter of never-ending debate whether my hon. Friend the Minister is better seated on the Treasury Bench or employed encouraging our sportsmen. There is little doubt that our sportsmen are in need of encouragement. At a time of the one-day test matches against New Zealand — which has not yet withdrawn from the Commonwealth games—I wish to pay a particular tribute to the Minister responsible for sport, even though I do not wish to judge whether he might be better employed giving instruction to the English cricket team.

You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, have had the good fortune, as I have, to listen to the whole debate. It is a matter of misfortune for Mr. speaker that he did not have the opportuniy to listen to my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for sport. However, mercifully, due to the Official Report, Mr. Speaker will be able to read, study and even commit to memory the Minister's introductory speech.

I must remind you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, even though you were in the Chair at the time, that the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) criticised my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley). That is within the recollection of all hon. Members. It was suggested that my hon. Friend was trying to prolong the debate. But what do I find? I find that my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for sport, tearing himself away from the test match, addressed the House for 19 minutes. I find that my hon. Friend the Member for Wrekin, even though he gave way with his customary courtesy to those of his hon. Friends who sought to intervene — however relevant or irrelevant those interventions were—spoke for 31 minutes. For how long did the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington delay the House? He detained the House for 34 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are all thankful for small mercies, but we really must get on to the order.

Mr. Gow: Since it was in order for the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington to comment on the length of the speeches by two of my hon. Friends, it is surely in order for me, so that Mr. Speaker can read my response in the Official Report, to say that the official Opposition spokesman addressed the House for three minutes longer than my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin.

Mr. Forth: Does my hon. Friend recall that the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) was unable to give way to interventions? Does my hon. Friend agree that, if any of my hon. Friends catch Mr. Deputy Speaker's eye, we may have to make our remarks more elaborate to provide the answers which the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington did not give us.

Mr. Gow: I agree. Although the official Opposition spokesman addressed the House for 15 minutes longer than the Minister, he said in that lengthy speech a great deal less than my hon. Friend.

In the second part of my preamble I want to address myself to an issue raised by my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin. He referred to the chairman of the Telford development corporation who appropriately, is known not only as the noble Lord Lord Northfield but as the noble Lord Lord Northfield of Telford. I am sure that my hon. Friend did not wish to give the wrong impression. I am sure that he did not wish to give the impression that he had anything other than total confidence in the noble Lord who is the chairman of the development corporation. I hope that my hon. Friend can confirm that assumption.

I turn from those preliminary points to the order. All my hon. Friends will share my deep regret that no Treasury Minister is seated on the Treasury Bench. My hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert), who is listening attentively to the debate, is not yet a Lords Commissioner, but perhaps I am wrong.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must say that this is a very long preamble. The hon. Gentleman must discuss the order before the House.

Mr. Gow: I was asking my hon. Friend the Member for Romford, from whom we do not hear sufficiently frequently——

Mr. Tracey: I feel that it is my duty to confirm that my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) is, indeed, a Lords Commissioner.

Mr. Gow: I apologise. I asked the question because I was not certain. We do not ask questions to which we know the answers. I am, of course, pleased that a Lords Commissioner is sitting on the Treasury Bench. He is not alone because, mercifully, sitting beside him is the Treasurer to Her Majesty's Household, my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Mr. Cope).

Mr. Dalyell: While the hon. Gentleman is on about Treasurers, what about the International Monetary Fund and Mr. Witteveen, about whom the hon. Gentleman used to talk in the early 1970s? Where has he gone?

Mr. Gow: I shall certainly not disappoint the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), who I understand has one of the Adjournment debates, because I shall be coming to Mr. Witteveen. The hon. Gentleman will recall the famour letter of 15 December 1976 when the present Shadow Foreign Secretary——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. I say seriously to the hon. Gentleman that I do not want to have to ask him to resume his seat. He must come to the matter that is before the House. The discussion so far has been wide of the order which is before the House.

Mr. Gow: It was not I, Mr. Deputy Speaker, who referred to Dr. Johannes Witteveen. It was the hon. Member for Linlithgow who was addressing the House on that subject.

I wish to comment upon the order, which was presented by the Minister with responsibility for sport. He commended the order to the House. In my opinion, there should have been present on the Government Front Bench a Treasury Minister. My hon. Friend the Member for Romford, though a Lords Commissioner, was not upon the Treasury Bench when my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport was moving the order.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): Would my right hon. Friend——

Mr. Gow: I am not a right hon. Member.

Mr. Soames: That was an accident, and an unfortunate one. I am sorry that I was wrong in the first place. Does my hon. Friend agree with me that it is entirely appropriate that our hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport should be present? One of the great shames of the new towns has been experienced recently in my constituency, and I am sure that my hon. Friend will have a great deal of sympathy with it. Land formerly owned by the Commission for the New Towns that was used to provide playing fields has been sold for development, thereby taking away land on which competitive games could be played. The use of the land for that purpose has ended and instead it will be used for the provision of supermarkets. Surely it is not inappropriate that my hon. Friend the Minister is here to take account of the punishment that we shall have to give him later on for that.

Mr. Gow: I have already paid tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport. I was trying to pay him an eloquent tribute, and it was certainly intended to be so. My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) — his constituency used to be Horsham and Crawley — has made quite an important point because within some of the development corporation areas we have both playing fields and houses. It is interesting that my hon. Friend the Minister — we hope that he will have responsibility for sport for many, many years to come — is a member of the ministerial team of the Department of the Environment, which has responsibility for some aspects of housing, which you may think, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am qualified to judge.

Mr. Leigh: Surely my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) was making an extremely interesting intervention with regard to my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport. He talked about competitive spirit. Local Labour parties are in a controlling position in some of the new towns and I fear that they may soon be adopting the position of the Labour group on ILEA. I do not know whether my hon. Friend read the interesting letter that appeared in The Times from a master at the Oratory school. Apparently that school, which once excelled at cricket——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) pursues that line, he will be entirely out of order.

Mr. Gow: I shall not be led astray, Mr. Deputy Speaker, by any of my hon. Friends. I wish now——

Mr. Marlow: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I regret having to raise another point of order. This debate involves a considerable sum of public money. It is being spent on new towns. Much of it has been spent on the establishment of schools at taxpayers' expense, at the people's expense. How these schools are operated within new towns is surely germane to the expenditure of this public money. I should be grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if you would reconsider your ruling in response to the intervention of my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope that the hon. Gentleman is not challenging the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. Gow: I was confirming to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I am sure to your significant relief, that I shall not be led astray by any of my hon. Friends.

I wish to direct your attention, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to page 19 of the order, the order having been moved by my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport. The notes to the order do not form part of the order. I want to make that clear to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon). I am referring to an explanatory note, and I think that the learned Clerk will confirm that we are able to refer to the explanatory note in the debate. This matter was not mentioned even in the excellent speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes. Apparently, he could not make time enough to refer to it and so I want to put right his omission. I do not want to criticise my hon. Friend's speech, but I think that he is guilty of an omission.

We are invited in the order, with the presence of only my hon. Friend the Member for Romford, a Lords Commissioner, and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, to agree to "extinguish" — you may think that that is an interesting word, Mr. Deputy Speaker — £1,687,686,405·98. Some of my hon. Friends who are chartered accountants may wonder how 98p found its way into a sum that is close to the limit that was laid down in the New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Act 1985.

It so happens that in an earlier incarnation I was responsible for putting what was then the Bill upon the statute book. We note the serried ranks of the Liberal party, which has taken such a keen interest in our affairs. We find that in the order we are almost up to the limit which is laid down in the Act. It is that which is causing such deep concern to my hon. Friends. It is something that I expected would excite the interest of my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes. I want to refer to my hon. Friends—I cannot refer the Opposition Front Bench to this because it is empty—and especially my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley, who I see is leaving his place —I hope that he is not going too far, but if he leaves the Chamber perhaps he will find out what the cricket score is in the test match and come back to tell my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, who may be interested—to section 8(2), which refers to the "aggregate amount of liabilities extinguished by order under this section shall not exceed £1,750 million."

But what do we find? We find that in the first order to be made under the Act, which reached the statute book only last year, on 11 March—it is now 18 July, so barely a year has passed — the Minister with responsibility for sport, not the the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, the Economic Secretary to the Treasury or even my hon. Friend the Minster of State, Treasury, has invited the House to write off nearly the full amount that is set out in the order. It is my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport who has done that. I mean no discourtesy to my hon. Friend—how can I?—when I say that we need not only my hon. Friend the Member for Romford, the Lords Commissioner, who was not present at the start of the debate, but my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Boscawen).

Mr. Leigh: The Vice-Chamberlain.

Mr. Gow: My hon. Friend is right. He is clearly well informed on these matters.

I can confirm that my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome is the Vice-Chamberlain to Her Majesty's Household, and that he does not have specific responsibilities for Treasury matters, however. I am glad to see that my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) has entered the Chamber. He told me that he had a particular interest in new town development corporations, but it is not only that interest which is so pertinent to these proceedings. I see also that my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Ryder) is in his place. My hon. Friend used to be the PPS to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Sir John Biggs-Davison (Epping Forest): I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way. He has referred to my interest in new towns. It so happens that the constituency of Epping Forest abuts upon Harlow, the centre of a new town of great beauty. I wish I could say that all of the inhabitants live up to the beauty of that environment. There is a serious matter between Epping Forest and Harlow, and the House may be aware that Harlow is endeavouring to extend its boundaries and to build houses in the green belt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The issue that is between Harlow and the constituency of the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) is nothing to do with the order. The extension of boundaries is not mentioned in the order.

Mr. Gow: I do not want to be led astray by any of my hon. Friends, however eminent they may be. It is difficult to think of a Member of greater eminence than my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest, with the possible exception of my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Gow: I shall not give way, even to my hon. Friend. I shall do so later. I want to make progress. We do not wish the debate to be protracted because the Minister wants to watch the test match. He is not the only one. I would much rather be watching it than making a speech.

It is only just over a year since the New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Act 1985—perhaps I can call it the parent Act — reached the statute book. Yet the Minister with responsibility for sport has used up almost all the authority contained in the parent Act. We are allowed to extinguish only £1,750 million worth of debt. I was surprised that my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes did not address that issue. We have almost exhausted the total authority conferred in the parent Act.

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Gow: I wish to make progress. I mean no discourtesy to my hon. Friend.

I invite my hon. Friends to study the order. I have been a Member only for a short time — possibly an even shorter time than my hon. Friend the Minister. I find it impossible to relate the many figures in the order to specific items. The figures must relate to specific items, otherwise they would not be listed separately. If they do not relate to individual items, why not keep them all together and total them up?

My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley has an acute financial brain. I have just seen him studying the order with great care. He has studied with particular care the advances made to the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation. I refer my hon. Friend to page 18 of the order. I shall try to take my hon. Friends through it I invite them to turn to page 18 of the order for my seminar. You might like to join in, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The penultimate line relates to No. WA397. Can my hon. Friend see the figure of £1 million?

Mr. Soames: Yes, I can see that.

Mr. Gow: I wonder whether my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) can see it. the figure in the next column is £999,899.38. I ask the Minister what has happened to the £100.62. Am I right in saying that the difference between the two figures is £100.62? If I have got that wrong, I shall give way to any of my hon. Friends who wishes to put me right.

Mr. Cash: I refer to the debate on 20 November 1984. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), the then Minister for Housing and Construction, moved the Second Reading of the Bill. He referred to clause 8 — it is now section 8 — under which the powers are obtained. He said that the clause gave power to his right hon. Friend, his then senior Minister,

[Mr. Cash]

"to suspend sufficient of their debt to enable them to break even."—[Official Report, 20 November 1984; Vol.68, col. 166.]

I fail to understand how he, as the person who created the Bill, can say that there are discrepancies on the figures.

Mr. Gow: I think that the surname of my hon. Friend shows why he is able so readily to comment on the two figures. I am responsible for the debate only in the sense that I was in charge of the Bill before it was enacted. I cannot assume the responsibility, which rests on the broad shoulders of the Minister with responsibility with sport, for the order. I am happy to take criticisms from any of my hon. Friends. I shall plead guilty to almost every charge levelled at me, but I shall not plead guilty to drawing up the order because I did not do so.

Mr. K. Harvey Proctor (Billericay) rose——

Mr. Gow: I shall not give way. I wish to make progress. I ask the Minister what happened to that £100·62? That is the difference between the amount of the advance and the principal outstanding on 31 August 1986. The Minister is not saying that that is the amount outstanding on 18 July. He is saying something quite different. He is saying that on 31 August the amount outstanding will be £999,899·38. I find it difficult to see how the amount under WA297 could have been £1 million precisely when the advance was made. By 31 August all the test matches will have been completed and the Minister will be able to direct more of his time to important financial matters. How does he hit on that figure? I have studied the matter with the same keen interest as my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Ryder). I refer the Minister to page 7 of the order. I shall take my hon. Friends through it again. Is my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley with me?

Mr. Soames: Yes, all the way.

Mr. Gow: No. T57——

Mr. Soames: It is a frigate.

Mr. Gow: It is not a frigate. My hon. Friend is the vice-chairman of the Conservative defence committee. We are discussing new towns, not frigates. It is quite difficult to distinguish between the two. The numbers chosen by my hon. Friend may have been chosen to confuse my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest. That is why we are happy to have the chance to explain the matters. No. T57 shows a figure of £70,000. The next column shows that the principal outstanding on 31 August 1986 is £69,423·15. I ask the Minister what has happened to the £576·85. I am doing the figures in my head. Is that the difference?

Mr. Murphy: It is £476.

Mr. Gow: I think that I was right. The figure is £576·85. I pose a question to the Minster with responsibility for sport not a Treasury Minister. My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes——

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Gow: I am trying to make progress.

What has happened to that £576·85? On which date was it repaid? What rate of interest was charged between the date when the advance was made and when it was repaid? What happened to the public sector borrowing requirement between those dates? Those are all questions to which the House will require answers from my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport.

Mr. Soames: Before my hon. Friend leaves this important matter and seeks the answers which the House must have, will he look at T8 and the advance of £13,886·21 and the principal outstanding of £12,887·77? What has happened to that £999? Will the House be given an answer to that?

Mr. Gow: That will be a matter of great hope for all of my hon. Friends. My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley may catch your eye later, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have no doubt that, if my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, who is one of the most courteous, well-informed and diligent of Ministers, cannot deal with all the points raised, he will write to each of my hon. Friends whose questions remain unanswered.

I wish to move from the relevant point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley. One is often tempted to refer to his constituency as Horsham and Crawley, but that temptation must be resisted, as others should be. I shall now consider the principle of this matter. The speech by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State — which you were lucky enough to hear, Mr. Deputy Speaker—did not show that he had discharged the duty which each of us has to our constituents when we are discussing public funds. The words "public funds" should never be used in the House because we are not talking about public money. We are talking about other people's money of which we are trustees. Each of us had a duty, which was not discharged by my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, to ensure that we take much greater care of other people's money than of our own.

The motion was not moved in a manner that led me to believe that my hon. Friend the Minister is totally committed at all times in all circumstances to taking greater care of other people's money than of our own. The order asks us to write off a debt by development corporations to the Treasury. It is not really a debt to the Treasury; it is a debt owed to the British people. Hon. Members are invited not by a Treasury Minister but by a sports Minister to write off the debt owed to the British people.

Perhaps, to my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, a sum of just under £1·75 billion is not significant, but it is a large sum to his hon. Friends. The "extinguishment", to use the words of the order, of a sum of that magnitude required a speech by a Minister other than the Minister with responsibility for sport. I mean no discourtesy to my hon. Friend. It is just a question whether the House has its priorities right and whether it should insist that, in considering so large a sum, a Treasury Minister who can explain these grave matters should be present.

My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes who is on earlier incomation represented Buckingham, made on excellent and important speech. No hon. Member is better informed about new towns than my hon. Friend. From the gestation of planning to growth of his town, my hon. Friend has watched one of the most remarkable success stories of this century. When I was responsible for these maters, I had the privilege of being taken by my hon.

Friend around his new town. I endorse everything that he has said. I believe that my hon. Friend is a member of the Centre Forward group.—Is that what it is called?

Mr. Benyon: That is correct.

Mr. Gow: I think that my hon. Friend is a member—I do not know whether you are a member, Mr. Deputy Speaker—of what is called the Centre Forward group. It is well known that I have received no invitation to join that group, although I criticise no one for that.

The point which I am making to——

Mr. Boyes: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I realise that, as a distinguished Deputy Speaker, you are in some difficulty with the speech of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow). We all find it sad when a distinguished former Minister has to perform in the way he has today, but that reflects what is perhaps happening to the Conservative party. The hon. Gentleman is abusing the privileges of the House. I should like you to rule whether his remarks about political grouping—revealing the splits in the Conservative party—are relevant to the order and are in order. I rise with great reluctance to raise this point of order.

Mr. Proctor: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is not the intervention by the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) intolerable in view of the lack of support on the Labour Benches and the fact that there is no representative of the Social Democratic party or of the Liberal party present?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am listening carefully to the debate. I shall judge when comments are out of order.

Mr. Gow: My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes is not always regarded as occupying precisely the same place in the political spectrum as me; yet I have found myself in warm and enthusiastic agreement with every word he uttered. I pay tribute to his knowldege, deep understanding and concern on this issue. I hope that it will not be too long before my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes is sitting, not on the fourth Bench below the Gangway but on the Treasury Bench. Before long, we will be invited to vote on this order. There may not be a vote——

Mr. Soames: There will be a vote.

Mr. Gow: Well, it would not surprise me if there is a vote because the duty of protecting the public purse, the money of the people, is one of the highest duties conferred upon hon. Members. If my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley should decide to vote against this order—I will not be in the Lobby with him because, despite the reservations I have expressed, I intend to support it—I would find it perfectly in accordance with the honour and reputation for financial probity enjoyed by my hon. Friend. Therefore, I will understand if he decides to lead some of my hon. Friends into the Opposition Lobby, but I am sure that my hon. Friends would understand that I would regret it. In so far as I may have any influence with my hon. Friends, and in so far as my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley may value my advice, my advice is that they should support the Government, despite the reservations I have expressed.

12.30 pm

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): There can be few of us present this morning who have not been much seized by what my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) has had to say on this important matter. I am sure that all those who have listened to what he has had to say will have to reconsider their position on this matter. It is unfortunate that my hon. Friend was not allowed to pursue the line that he used to take with Dr. Johannes Witteveen in the early 1970s. When I was not a member of the House, I remember reading avidly in Hansard and in the newspapers about the many opportunities that my hon. Friend had to use that correspondence in the House to devastating effect and to the great encouragement of those of us outside the House. It is a shame that we did not have a chance to develop that argument. I shall not develop it, because I want to make some serious points about the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne.

The spending of public funds, of other people's money, as my hon. Friend rightly said, is like marriage. It is not something to be entered into lightly or wantonly. My hon. Friend the Minister, without meaning to do so, but because of his many responsibilities over an enormous area in the Department of the Environment, which my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne knows well, was almost obliged to discuss this matter in a light and wanton way. We are talking about vast sums of taxpayers' money being written off under this order. There is a lack of equity in this order and I should like my hon. Friend the Minister to address himself to that.

My constituency was one of the first generation of new towns. It profited and grew enormously in the 1950s and 1960s. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne wishes to see the second generation new towns repaying their debt to the British people. My constituency, I am proud to say, is repaying its debt in a major way. In some respects, it is being asked to do too much. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minster will consider the almost rapacious attitude of the Commission for the New Towns when disposing of these properties, which it is rightly charged to do by Her Majesty's Treasury.

There is an obligation laid upon the commission by the House to discharge its duties in what is called the rationalisation of these properties. I do not quarrel with the way that it does that, because it does it very efficiently, but one of the side effects in my constituency is that the small trader—an important part of the economy, the backbone of the recreation of the enormous number of new jobs for which the Government have been responsible—is being driven from his property by the Commission for the New Towns because of the enormous values being placed on these properties in the open market. I do not quarrel with that. Dr. Witteveen would not have quarrelled with that. The fact is that Crawley is repaying its debt in a significant way.

Mr. Gow: The principles, which were laid down by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, now the shadow Foreign Secretary, are being put at risk, because it was the International Monetary Fund which insisted on the Labour party pursuing a policy of relative financial rectitude. What we are concerned about is whether in the order we may be slightly slipping from the path of total financial rectitude. I am glad that my hon. Friend mentioned Dr. Witteveen. I think that he is still alive, and I hope that he will have a very long life.

Mr. Soames: We in the House owe a great debt to Dr. Witteveen. Indeed, the Conservative Opposition in the late 1970s owed a particular debt to him. I have no doubt that he would have been grateful and proud of the fact that the mouthpiece of his opinion in the Chamber should have been my hon. Friend.

I return to the order. My hon. Friend is right to drag us relentlessly back to the grind of argument and the rapier thrust in the debate, which is how we are to deal with the extinguishment of these liabilities. You were not here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for the earlier part of the debate, which has not been marred in any way by the clash of alternative views on the Conservative Benches as to the best way to handle the matter.

The order gives effect to a financial reconstruction of four new town development corporations — Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Telford and Warrington and Runcorn. I should like to say a word about Milton Keynes and my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon). I represent a new town seat. It has been my privilege to learn a great deal about the new towns movement from my hon. Friend, to whom a warm and right tribute was paid by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne.

My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes knows a great deal about these matters and I would be guided in the debate to a great extent by the points that he makes, but there is some inequity, with which I hope my hon. Friend the Minister will deal. I wonder why my constituency should be penalised in the most extraordinary way in the disposal of the assets imposed on it by the present shadow Foreign Secretary in his terrible and desperate attempts to pull this country's economy round after he had half bankrupted it. Why should my constituents be penalised to pay for Telford, Warrington and Runcorn and Peterborough?

That is an important point. My constituents will not easily understand why a town such as Milton Keynes, where I know an enormous amount of money had to be spent on the infrastructure, the development of the roads, and so on, and which is a successful town, should be able to have its liabilities discharged on an enormous scale, when many of them are paying hand over fist to try to secure commercial properties. Extraordinary sums of money are involved.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne will know the reason for that, because he is a learned and distinguished man. He knows my constituency and my part of the world. He will know that my constituency has the lowest unemployment rate in the United Kingdom. I discussed it only the other day with the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes). I grieve with him over the problems that he has compared with the benefits of full employment that I have in my constituency. I wish that he could have the same in his constituency.

One of the penalties of success for my constituency has been the extraordinary value that has been attached to commercial properties. I come back to the lack of equity in the order. I wonder why these millions of pounds should be written off overnight when my constituents are carrying the can for Warrington and Runcorn, Telford, Peterborough and Milton Keynes.

I come to the burden of what I have to say. We are told that the financial reconstruction proposals embodied in the order have been formulated by reference to projections of income and expenditure over the next 20 years. What expressions of confidence will My hon. Friend the Minister make to the House today about the reliability of those forecasts? What expressions of confidence were made in the House 20 years ago about the forecasts for Warrington and Runcorn, Telford and Peterborough?

Mr. Gow: Is my hon. Friend aware that responsibility for weather forecasting rests partly with the Ministry of Defence and partly with the Department of the Environment? I say that only because the Department of the Environment has responsibility for the water industry——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. That clearly has nothing to do with the business before the House.

Mr. Gow: I was about to make the point about forecasting because my hon. Friend——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is clearly raising matters that are irrelevant. I hope that he will not disregard my ruling again.

Mr. Soames: With the greatest respect to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker — and of course my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne will abide by your judgment — forecasting is crucial. I remind you that you were in the Chair on one occasion when I had a difficult debate with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport about the forecasting of traffic on the M25 and where that had got us——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that the business before us concerns the financing and liabilities of the new towns named in the order. I hope that he will return to that matter.

Mr. Hawksley: It might help my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) if I inform the House that the figures forecast for Telford 20 years ago were double the current figures. The estimation was out by more than 100 per cent.

Mr. Soames: My hon. Friend, as always, shows a perspicacity and sagacity for which he is well known in the House. It is a matter of regret to many of my hon. Friends that Government forecasting is so lamentably bad.

Mr. Leigh: They cannot even get the weather right.

Mr. Soames: That is true. Government forecasting is a matter of some concern.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to settle the mind of the House on this matter. I hope that he can say that his confidence reposes in the figures for financial reconstruction embodied in the order, formulated by projection of income and expenditure over the next 20 years.

We are now told that this exercise has been carried out with the co-operation of the corporations and that the results have been analysed by consultants commissioned by the Department of the Environment. I have to say, with great regret, that it was consultants commissioned by the Department of Transport who made such an awful mess of the figures for the M25. What confidence can my hon. Friend the Minister have in figures for the new towns put forward by consultants? Is he satisfied that there will not be another order in the House in 20 years' time — I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne is concerned about this — asking for another huge sum of money to write off these forecasts, especially when, as my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley) said, previously they have been 100 per cent. wrong?

It is alleged that these measures will provide a sound financial basis for the corporations during their remaining lives. How often have we heard the expression "sound financial basis" in this House? How many industries, enterprises and businesses controlled or administered by the state or its organisations have we been told would provide a sound financial basis? We were told that about De Lorean, Rolls-Royce in the bad old days, British Shipbuilders and British Leyland. Yet who but the taxpayers living in our constituencies has had to keep shelling out money time after time?

Mr. Jack Straw (Blackburn): You can afford it.

Mr. Soames: The hon. Gentleman glibly suggests that we can afford it — we cannot afford it. It was Opposition Members who recently tabled a motion to give a 52 per cent. increase in secretarial allowances——

Mr. Straw: When I said "you", I was in the second person singular. I was referring directly to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Soames: I am sure, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that you did not hear that. The hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw), who is also my friend, might like to discuss that with me later. Indeed, I know that he is a beady-eyed steward keeping a careful watch on every penny of public money that is spent. He is responsible for the scrutiny of that money in this House. I am sure he will agree that it has been said many times in this House, and claimed by Ministers of all Governments, that certain organisations and enterprises provided a sound financial basis for the corporations during their remaining lives.

Mr. Gow: Does my hon. Friend remember that when his distinguished father was an hon. Member of this House rather than of another place there was another scheme which, I think was conceived by the Labour party and called the groundnuts scheme——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not persist in this irresponsible way in making irrelevant observations. Let us return to the order.

Mr. Boyes: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In my opening preamble I said that I had asked for the debate to be taken on the Floor of the House and hoped that Conservative Members would not abuse that decision. It is now absolutely clear that my request is being wholly ignored and that the debate is being reduced to an unacceptable level. Conservative Members for reasons only known to themselves——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman need not persist. I have got the measure of the position. He can leave the chairing of the House this afternoon to me.

Mr. Soames: I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. To tell you the truth, I had rather forgotten the thread of my argument. I was in the middle of a major disquisition on the stewardship of public funds when suddenly there jumped up from the Opposition Front Bench an objector. I do not regard lightly the writing off of £1,750 billion of taxpayers' money. The hon. Gentleman rightly insisted that the matter should be debated on the Floor of the House because it is important. If he thinks that it is being treated with levity, he is wanting both in judgment and in the quality of his observations.

It was always envisaged that the corporations' revenue deficits would continue for the early years of development, but that in due course they could achieve break even and be able to redeem their borrowing. As my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin rightly pointed out in the case of Telford, those forecasts were more than 100 per cent. inaccurate. What confidence does my hon. Friend the Minister repose in the figures implied in the order? The House will demand a proper answer. By the time the order returns, my hon. Friend will be in the Cabinet, but I hope that whoever fills his job in 10 years' time will not have to stand at the Dispatch Box and take the same stick on this matter from, God willing, my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne, myself and other hon. Friends here assembled this morning.

Other hon. Members wish to participate. The new towns and the Commission for the New Towns have been a remarkable success. Nothing that we say about the financial side of the order should in any way alter the debt of gratitude that the country owes to those who with vision set up the new towns, bringing immense prosperity and a force for good into the United Kingdom. In these islands there are many towns which could greatly benefit from the Commission for the New Towns coming with overarching authority to sweep aside all the useless objections raised by reactionary, revisionist local authorities against any form of development or expansion and to build, develop and expand — with all the verve and vigour of youth; and with enthusiasm and desire — a bright new Jerusalem in our inner cities. There could be no finer body to do that than the new towns movement, but it is not for the House, the steward and guardian of public funds, to allow the write-off of £1,750 billion in the flicker of an eyelid or with a snap of the fingers. The taxpayer will be done out of more than £1 billion.

I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for giving me this opportunity, as a Member of Parliament for a new town, to speak in the debate. My constituency is very fortunate, and we are grateful for the benefits that were conferred upon us. However, my constituents will not be pleased if today we approve an order which means that they will have to pay heavy debts for the hard work, enterprise and drive that they have put into developing Crawley, while Warrington and Runcorn, Peterborough, Telford and Milton Keynes will have their liabilities written off. What would Dr. Johannes Witteveen have said had he been here?

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): It is appropriate that I should follow in the footsteps of my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), because I wish to echo some of the points that he made and expand on some of his thoughts. We are all aware — especially those of us who have the honour to represent constituencies with new towns — of the enormous contribution made by the new towns since the war. I hesitate to use the term used earlier by the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) when he spoke about the new town movement. There is a tendency to attribute the word "movement" to anything, certainly on the Left of politics. One might say, "If it moves, call it a movement."

[Mr. Eric Forth]

The development of new towns since the war has been remarkable. They have made a remarkable contribution to the social and economic life and to the development of a new form of social existence. When my hon. Friend the Minister opened the debate, he mentioned the financial reconstruction that the order involves. That has rightly caused much anxiety among my hon. Friends as to the aim and purpose of the reconstruction and what might lie behind it.

I do not propose to go too far down that road, but I shall illustrate by reference to Redditch in Worcestershire the fact that we are somewhat uneasy about the development of new towns in the future. Some of us wish to know whether the new towns will continue indefinitely, or whether it may be more realistic—my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley was moving in this direction in his eloquent remarks—to say that the new towns have fulfilled their purpose and that it is time for a rapid end to them.

Mr. Soames: If I had the power to sustain a speech for as long as and in such depth I know that my hon. Friend can, I would have developed my argument along his lines. We must develop a hybrid between the Commission for the New Towns, the new towns corporations and the London Docklands development corporation, which has proved so outstandingly successful. These attitudes and skills——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think that the London Docklands development corporation comes within the framework of the order. I hope that the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) will not respond to that suggestion.

Mr. Forth Indeed not, Mr. Deputy Speaker. However, my hon. Friend has, as usual, put his finger on a key point.

Redditch represents the transition from development corporation to the role of the commission. We want to know what the Minister has in mind for the development of new towns. Although the development corporations have played a magnificent role in the past, and made a wonderful contribution, the transition to the rule of the commission may not bring the sort of development that we want, because it does not contain the commercial element which my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley implied in the remarks which I shall not repeat.

Redditch is a classic case. Like all the new towns referred to in the order, it started with the kernel of an established community. One can trace back the origins of Redditch many centuries, and the town has a worldwide reputation for its needle industry. After being set up in the 1960s, the new town moved rapidly from being a sleepy midlands town with a population of 20,000 to a centre with a population of 75,000. There was a remarkable development of housing, landscaping and infrastructure and the new town is a fine example of the genre.

Mr. Leigh: Is it still in debt?

Mr. Forth: That issue is not strictly relevant, as I shall explain. The relevant point is the transition of the new town and whether it should go into the hands of the Commission for the New Towns or, as some of us would prefer, move to full privatisation. I use that term without blushing. The Opposition have said many times today that there is a deep, dark secret and a sinister plot to privatise new towns. There is nothing of the sort. I hope that the Minister will confirm that privatisation is precisely what we have in mind. Surely that would be the culmination of the development of the new towns.

Mr. Gow: I know of my hon. Friend's keen interest in the European Commission and I wonder whether he will answer the point which was in the mind of my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames). Do we need the consent of Lord Cockfield before the order can be approved?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) is doing again what I have already warned him about. I hope that he will not persist.

Mr. Forth: Far be it from me to attempt to advise such a constitutional expert as my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), but I suggest that it is unlikely that the European Commission will have to be involved. I hope that recent constitutional developments will not lead us down that path, and I am fairly confident that what has happened in this House will not take us in that direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Gentleman's speech will not take us in that direction either.

Mr. Forth: Indeed not, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have many other points to make and you will be glad to hear that none of them relates to the EEC.

We should pause to consider why the new towns have been so successful. There has been much speculation, but I believe that, based on the experience of Redditch, I can give the House the answer. The first reason was referred to by my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley, who covered so many points in his eloquent contribution, though, as he said, he was forced, in the interests of brevity,, to curtail his remarks and was not able to explore some matters as fully as he wished.

I pick up a theme that my hon. Friend initiated and suggest that one reason for the success of the new towns was the powers vested in them from the outset. They were able to proceed with great speed in developing housing, infrastructures and roads, without resort to the usual planning procedures.

Mr. Soames: In considering the order and the winding up of liabilities, does my hon. Friend agree that the spirit of enterprise that the new towns brought could and should be applied with ease to other parts of the United Kingdom?

Mr. Forth: Yes, but I must sound a note of caution as my hon. Friend's enthusiasm that all should share the benefits conferred by the new towns involves an underlying danger. It is relevant to the debate because in moving towards the winding up of the new towns and considering the future we must examine the balance to be struck between the democratic accountability of our current planning regulations and the way in which the new towns have been allowed to develop without strict democratic accountability. The benefits in terms of speedy decision making and determination by those with a vision of what they want to develop are achieved at the cost of a lack of the accountability and democratic control that we expect in our normal planning procedures.

Mr. Cash: Does my hon. Friend recall that not long ago Redditch development corporation, in his constituency, attempted to sell 20 per cent. of its total area — to Tarmac, I believe — but the proposal was turned down by the Department of the Environment? Has my hon. Friend any comment to make about that in relation to the extinguishment of debt covered by the order?

Mr. Forth: My hon. Friend has a remarkable grasp and knowledge of these matters even when they are in my constituency rather than his. He has raised a relevant point. I regretted the Department's decision because the development corporation seemed to me to be seeking at one leap to achieve a remarkable development in the privatisation of the new town but was frustrated by the Department of the Environment. I shall not go further into that as it would embarrass the Government as well as my hon. Friend and myself to say too much about it in public, but I agree with the sense of my hon. Friend's question.

The second reason for the remarkable success of the new towns has been the amount of funding available. Members have expressed understandable concern at the amounts involved and the opaqueness of the order. I hope that when my hon. Friend the Minister winds up the debate he will be able to throw much more light on what lies behind the very large sums contained but not explained in the proposal. The key to the success of the new towns has been that large sums of public money have been made available without the accountability that we would normally expect from public bodies dispensing public funds, and I am grateful for the benefits that this has brought to Redditch.

I welcome any hon. Member who wishes to come and see the town. It is beautifully laid out, the roads are well planned and landscaping has been carried out at no expense — 2 million trees have been planted since the town began to develop — not to mention the infrastructure implications, to which I shall return. It is easy to achieve developments of that kind if there is no direct accountability for the expenditure of large sums of public money. The new towns have shown the facility to channel enormous sums of public money without accountability or visibility to produce a desired result, but whether we wish to go that way in the future is a much bigger question and germane to today's debate. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will tell the House what the Government have in mind for the future of the new towns.

The third element in identifying the reasons for the success of the new towns is what I would call representation without democracy. I will explain what I mean by that. On all the development corporations of the new towns we have appointed representatives, boards with paid or part-time members, and appointed representatives from the local community in the time-honoured way to which we in Britain are all accumstomed. But one thing that those people were not, excellent though they were and excellent though their record of public service was, and representative in a sense though they may have been, were democratically elected members.

That immediately draws a distinction between the role of the new towns and their commissions and corporations, on the one hand, and local government and local authorities, as we have understood them for many centuries, on the other. Again, one must draw the paradoxical distinction between the effectiveness and efficiency of undemocratic but representative bodies and democratically accountable local authorities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is straying a long way from the substance of the order. We are discussing not the political structure of local government but the liabilities of certain new towns.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for reminding me that in my enthusiasn I must not get carried too far from the point. However, I was making my point in the context of the future that lies beyond the order when it is approved by the House. We are all hoping that my hon. Friend the Minister will give us guidance on that matter when he replies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope that the Minister will do what I am asking the hon. Gentleman to do, and that is to address himself to what is in the order and not the future political or financial structure of new towns.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shall not be further tempted.

We have seen the remarkable record of success of the new towns. My hon. Friend the Minister has today asked us for a financial reconstruction so that the new towns named in the order may proceed with their development. We are willing to give him our support today, but he must understand from what I and many of my hon. Friends have said that there is some reservation in our support for the measure. We wish to be satisfied about the direction in which the Government wish to take the new towns and the extent to which they are aware of the need for strict accountability in the use of public money in the further development of the new towns.

It is on that thought and that issue that I wish to conclude my remarks in the hope that we shall be given all the assurances that we require from my hon. Friend today with regard to what he intends for the future, the extent to which he believes there will be accountability in the future and in the strictness with which I hope he and his Department will be looking at the matter as it unfolds and develops.

1.7 pm

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): My constituency of Stafford is close to Telford, which is the subject of one of the provisions in the order. As a member of the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments I had the responsibility to consider this statutory instrument a short time ago. I was somewhat surprised to see the liabilities which were being extinguished, amounting, as we know, to £1,687 million in round figures.

The problem is simply that a huge new town with an enterprise zone attached to it, with an accumulated debt on the scale that has developed over the years since the incorporation of the new town, has areas adjacent to it that are, as it were, in a vacuum and they feel a significant draught if the financing of the new town is in any way artificial.

If liabilities, on the scale that is set out in the order, are extinguished, as they will be, I ask the Minister to bear in mind that those of us who live in towns which are more self-financing than, for example, towns which have not significantly increased their rates — other then the precept from the county council, another and very sad tale — should be given all the protection that the Department of the Environment can give so that the order does not bear heavily on a place such as Stafford. The problems in new towns are well documented. Some of my constituents work in Telford. I praise the staff and the chairman of the development corporation although some criticisms have been voiced today. They have conducted themselves in the interests of the local people.

I am deeply suspicious of social engineering. Many of the people in Telford come from Birmingham. Large sums were required to support the movement of the population from Birmingham to Telford. That expenditure and movement was necessary because of the deep-rooted inner urban problems caused by degeneration and decay. Those problems could be sorted out only by the visionary arrangements activated in the 1940s which enabled people to have a decent standard of living. The idea was to make available homes near jobs. That is directly related to the sums that are now to be written off and it is one of the crucial factors that underpins the new towns. We must be responsible in the way in which we debate the subject.

Some serious questions arise from the order. The allegation is that there is a conspiracy by the wicked Tories to pull the rug from under the feet of the new towns, to dismantle and to throw to the winds the good work that has been done. The extinguishment of the liabilities in the order, remembering the reservations I have expressed, provides an opportunity for people who are moving into a new enterprise era to take a stake in the new town.

The opportunity should be taken, when a new town is reaching fulfilment, to disengage from social engineering, which might have had a valid beginning. I recognise the social needs that made social engineering necessary. Bournville is a good example. It has created a mixture of enterprise and philanthropy, the hallmark of the Quaker tradition which I have mentioned in other speeches. It was one of the great developments of the 19th century.

I am vice-chairman of the Conservative Small Business Bureau so I take an interest in the development of enterprise and small businesses. We must try to provide people with jobs and small businesses, with homes nearby. We should now be able to disengage from social engineering and enable people to buy their own homes and to set up small businesses. If the extinguishment of the debts will enable the Telford development corporation to balance the books so that those twin objectives can be achieved the spirit of enterprise will be enhanced and there will be more opportunities for job creation, particularly jobs for young people in the Telford area.

I should refer briefly to the Ironbridge Gorge Musuem trust. The issue of debt and liability impinges upon the trust, which is a national museum. I hope that the Minister will pay some tribute to it and give some sign of his Department's thinking on the subject. I happen to be a member for the board of the charity, and I had been in that position for many years before I became a Member for this place. It has a status that requires recognition.

Many of the discussions that have been taking place relate directly to the provisions that are set out in the order. I do not know which T item it refers to, but I am convinced that there are aspects of the Ironbridge museum that are related directly to one of the enumerated Ts in the order.

A coincidence that has just occurred to me is that Abraham Darby and the Quakers did not rely on public funds. Instead, they relied upon their own endeavours and enterprise. They created the industrial revolution, which the museum represents. The extinguishment of the public debts which is represented by the order is related directly and historically to the beginnings of private enterprise in that vicinity. As we disengage from and wind up the new towns, especially Telford, I hope that we shall have regard to the origins of the area itself. If we wish to develop new jobs, small businesses and a sense of enterprise with people able to live in the countryside reasonably near to their place of work, the extinguishment of the debt will, without doubt, enable these objectives to be achieved.

I hope, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that you will allow me to refer to my visit to Naples yesterday as a member of the Select Committee on European legislation. This is not part of a filibuster or anything of that sort. The evidence that we have of the extinguishment of liability in Italy provides something from which we can learn in relation to the order.

The reason for the disengagement from and extinguishing of the liabilities is related directly to the fact that in the 1950s and 1960s we had peculiar boom conditions. They were boom conditions of a rather artificial kind because much of the money involved was borrowed from abroad. Money was made available, however, on a significant scale and a significant amount of debt was accumulated. The first and second generations of new towns were able to be more or less self-financing and were wound up without accumulated liabilities which they could not repay. That is not the position of the third generation, of which Telford happens to be one.

I said earlier when my hon. Friend the Minister was speaking that it would be misleading to say that the whole of the Telford area is one of dereliction. I am sure that my hon. Friend did not intend to give that impression. The opposite is true and Telford is a beautiful part of the country. The problems with which it was faced in the Dawley area were significant. They were underestimated by a number of people, including, I regret to say, a book that I would recommend to those interested in new towns. The book by Meryl Aldridge, is entitled, "The British New Towns—A programme without a policy". It stated that Mr. Richard Crossman said of Dawley, in his diaries:

"Money could have been no object in mind"—

he quoted Evelyn Sharp's mind—

"since it will cost a fortune to turn this into a modern urban area".

"an observation which has particular piquancy in view of Lady Sharp's own insistence that new towns should be chosen in the light of their potential for economic success".

Richard Crossman identified, no doubt accurately, the fact that when the new towns were developed serious problems were inherent in Dawley and Telford which are intrinsic to the order. He predicted, quite accurately, which apparently Evelyn Sharp did not, that a vast amount of money was tied up in the proposal and that it would cause no end of difficulty. As a result, we must extinguish debts that were accumulated on a massive scale.

Mr. Dalyell: Evelyn Sharp was extremely concerned about the use of money in a number of new towns. She had a rather motherly attitude towards them. I have the greatest admiration for Evelyn Sharp as an extremely distinguished civil servant. She cared deeply about new towns. I was PPS to Dick Crossman. He cared very much about democracy in new towns. That was a real problem.

Mr. Cash: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I understand that he did not make the point in a critical way but wished to put it on the record. I agree entirely with what he said. It is difficult to calculate the amount of money needed for what I believe was an important objective and to ensure that the money was properly funded from the beginning.

I think that the accountancy arrangements, the investigation by the Comptroller and Auditor General's Department and the provisions of the 1985 Act on accountancy will be critical when the new towns are wound up. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) was the Minister—I regret that he is not in the House to take note of the point—who introduced the Bill. I see a serious problem in the present Act regarding the final accountancy arrangements for winding up the new towns. A wide discretion is given as to the manner in which the calculations will be made and the auditing will be done when the towns wind up their financial arrangements. If the towns get that wrong—there have been many criticisms of the order and the lack of information available—it will be deeply regretted. We must operate our public expenditure on the basis of sound financial expenditure.

1.23 pm

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): This has been a long debate. As at least one of my hon. Friends wishes to speak, I shall confine my remarks and make them shorter than I had intended. I listened with great interest to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon). He has great experience in such matters. He spoke in glowing terms about the achievements of Milton Keynes. He seemed to welcome the order. I wish to take issue with his speech and the tenor of his remarks.

The new town concept is the product of the "brave new world" vision of the original Fabians, but they could never have foreseen some of the debt problems which would arise and which we are debating. As my hon. Friends the Members for Crawley (Mr. Soames) and for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) reminded the House, we are talking about a serious issue. Although this is a Friday and the House is thinly attended, we are talking about the extinguishment of £1·7 billion of public money.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley, who represents a first generation new town, rightly said that his constituents were being disadvantaged by the order. Although they had repaid their debt on time, the second generation of new towns had not. He spoke movingly of the problems that would arise for his constituents.

The explanatory notes with the order told us of the difficulties that the second generation of new towns have met, which explains the need for the order. My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley), who represents Telford is in his seat. He told us of some of the problems caused because the population projections had proved inaccurate. The explanatory notes told us also that, although the first generation of new towns grew up in the boom years of the 1960s, the second generation faced many more problems in the depression years of the 1970s and, therefore, the task facing second and third generation new towns was in many respects much more onerous. I accept all that and the reasons why the order is before us, but that experience of Milton Keynes and the second generation new towns should be a bitter warning and should guide Ministers, especially my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport, in directing public policies.

Because of the lessons of the 1960s, when we perhaps did not take adequate steps to guard against unforeseen events, the Government have to provide a realistic debt structure for the new towns. The order will enable the Government to give a coherent, measured corporate planning structure.

My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes talked in glowing terms of what Milton Keynes had achieved. He seemed to think that the order would give the Government and the nation an opportunity to think in terms of widening the spirit of the new towns away from the Fabian concept of moving the population from the overcrowded inner cities to greenfield sites. My hon. Friend felt that the order could be a precursor to setting up development boards along the lines of the London Docklands Development Corporation, to regenerate our inner cities.

Of course, this is an attractive prospect. There are large derelict areas in many regions, especially in the north in our industrial cities. When I was a member of the Greater London council, I was involved in London overspill schemes. I now represent a town—Gainsborough—which was a London overspill town. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, we had to pick up the pieces from the planning policies of the late 1940s and early 1950s. We had to pick up the pieces of a great city like London which, to a certain extent, had been denuded of resources in terms of people and industry. Industry had gone to the new towns of, for example, Harlow, Welwyn Garden City and Milton Keynes. There is no doubt that that is why the new town concept has gone out of fashion. In looking carefully at the order and to the future and in considering the extinguishment of £1·7 billion of public money, we should pause to draw breath. We should remember the lesson of the past.

Mr. Timothy Wood (Stevenage) rose——

Mr. Leigh: I must get on. Rather than talking glibly of the taxpayer coming to the rescue of the new towns we should be looking at ways in which, in directing our policy for the future, we can think not in terms of financing the towns with rented housing but, as my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) said, looking ahead at privatisation and using private money so that, in 10 or 15 years, we are not left with the problem we are debating today.

1.30 pm

Dr. Ian Twinn (Edmonton): I am grateful to the Opposition for giving us the opportunity to have this debate. It has been an instructive morning listening to my hon. Friends seeking answers from our own Front Bench. I will not say as much as I had hoped because I want to ensure that my hon. Friend the Minister has sufficient time to answer the questions that have been put.

Last night I took the draft statutory instrument home with me so that I could look at it. I thought that it would make interesting reading before bedtime. As is my custom, I went to bed with my reading and I put aside my new Jeffrey Archer book and read the order instead. I was bitterly disappointed. It was not the good read that I had hoped. However, it does have some similarities with the novels of Jeffrey Archer. The figures involved are as astronomical. In fact, the figures involved are almost as large as those Mr. Archer earns from his books. It is important that we get some answers today about what the figures represent.

If these figures represent paying for public infrastructure—roads, hospitals and schools—it is reasonable that they should be met from public funds and that we should be able to write them off. It could be argued that the taxpayer would have received good value for money. However, if the figures represent money for building shopping centres and housing which will be sold or transferred to the local authority, we should know about it. If that is the case, the money should be going back to the Treasury and not being written off. It is important for the good name of the new towns movement in this country.

The new towns movement is the envy of the world. I speak as someone who, before I came here, taught town planning, for my sins. Visitors from around the world are singularly impressed by Britain's achievement in moving the population, en masse, from what were slums at the end of the second world war into good, new housing with all the social facilities that went with it.

Mr. Wood: Representing Stevenage as I do and having been involved with Bracknell in the past, I should like to draw my hon. Friend's attention to the fact that there are some new towns that have been able to generate a substantial return for the Government. Therefore, in financial terms, some new towns have done very well. Not only has one had the social advantage of the new towns and the employment prospects, but there has been a financial return from some new towns.

Dr. Twinn: My hon. Friend is quite right. The first generation of new towns worked very well. In fact, what we call the first generation, which were built from public funds after the second world war, are really the second generation. The first generation rose from private enterprise. I am glad that my hon. Friend the Minister will be tempting us to go down that line in the future with more private enterprise. The Ebenezer Howard idea of private capital being invested in new towns is a masterly idea. The idea of pouring vast sums of public money into new towns was a good idea in the post-war years because we had to reconstruct. We also had low interest rates, which helped the first generation of new towns make a return on their capital.

The third generation of new towns came along after the oil crisis and it was then that the problems really started. They had to borrow over long periods at high interest rates and they got into a terrible muddle, not knowing whether they were starting to get a return. They carried on borrowing. In the end, knowing that they were not getting anywhere near breaking even, the Government found it necessary to intervene. Along with other of my hon. Friends, I welcome the Government's action. It is important that we put the finances of the new towns on a firm footing, so that we can go forward. We do not want to stop the progress of the new towns. We want the idea of the new towns and the development corporations to roll on, develop, and to continue meeting the needs of our country. To fossilise it and let them carry on with a debt burden that they are unable to service would have been irresponsible. Therefore, I congratulate the Government on their action.

I have my personal doubts about the success of the new towns, in a sense. I represent an outer London area—Edmonton—which has been the victim of the magnetic attraction of the new towns. They have drawn away the population. They drew away the young, skilled, mobile work force from my constituency, and with it went the jobs. They were tempted, or bribed, to the new towns around London. My constituency has suffered from the new town policy. I do not object to that because it was in the long-term interest of this country as a whole. Of course, that is what we must be concerned with in the House.

Before I sit down and let my hon. Friend answer the points that have been raised in the debate, I should like to make a plea for more openness of information from the new towns. There has been a singular lack of openness from the Government today on the draft statutory instrument. I shall not labour the point; other of my hon. Friends have made it. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will want to reply to the points that have been made.

The new towns have been a byword for secrecy. There is now a movement for local government—we have to include the new towns as a variety of localised government—to throw open its doors and provide information for the citizens in the area. I hope that my hon. Friend, while keeping in order, will talk about openness in the new towns.

I welcome today's debate. It has been a valuable debate, perhaps more valuable and useful than my hon. Friend had intended. Nevertheless, I hope that, on reflection, he will think that this morning has been well worth while. We look forward eagerly to his reply.

1.37 pm

Mr. Boyes rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Does the hon. Gentleman have the leave of the House to speak again?

Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Boyes: I listened with great care to the debate, which has lasted more than four hours. However, I am concerned about the flippancy with which an order with such strong political undertones has been treated by some Conservative Members. Some have abused the privilege of the opportunity to debate the order on the Floor of the House. This morning we have been talking about writing off almost £1·7 billion. The matter deserves the utmost seriousness from all hon. Members. The flippancy of Conservative Members suggests to some Opposition Members that they simply do not care.

I should like to ask some specific questions. If the Minister is unable to answer all of them immediately, I shall be happy to receive answers in writing in due course. Is he aware of any other orders in the pipeline that will extinguish the liabilities of any other new towns? Will he produce more details about the sums of money referred to in the order, as requested in a written question tabled by the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley) earlier this week?

With regard to the winding up of the development corporation and the transfer of housing and community-related assets, previous transfers have taken place with no loss and no gain for either side.

Where surveys have shown that there are undue deficiencies in the condition of the housing, will they be put right before any transfer of assets from the new towns? Will local authorities be given resources so that they can continue to attract tenants to buildings that have been vacated by industrialists when the development corporations are wound up? As the Minister and those of us who live in and represent the new towns are aware, there is a large scale turnover of industrial buildings in many new towns.

Many development corporations run social development offices. Will funds be made available by district councils, county councils or other appropriate local authorities to allow that initiative to continue?

Finally, where local authorities have taken over housing stock from district councils, they are finding that the promised adjustments in HIP allocation have not been made—indeed, some are receiving a lower allocation of HIP. I hope that the Minister will look at that matter. I accept that the Minister may not be able to answer all my points, so I should be grateful if he would reply in writing.

1.40 pm

Mr. Tracey: It is well known that new town measures have a reputation for producing an interesting, wide-ranging debate. Today's debate has certainly been no exception. It has been wide-ranging and some interesting questions have been asked.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), in good spirit, pulled my leg about my better known responsibilities for sport. Of course, as he knows well, I am here today as the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment with responsibility, together with my noble Friend the Minister of State, for new towns. On the sporting angle, today's debate has at times felt a little like an orienteering exercise as it has weaved around. At times I thought I might be taking part in the Fastnet race.

As you have reminded us, Mr. Deputy Speaker, our concern today is somewhat narrowly focused on the financial reconstruction of the four new town development corporations with substantial development tasks ahead of them — Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Telford, and Warrington and Runcorn. Perhaps I should reiterate what I said in my opening remarks—that during the debate on the 1985 Act it was recognised that this sort of restructuring should continue. Hon. Members on both sides of the House thought that an extremely sensible exercise.

During the debate hon. Members have raised a number of points related to the order, and some of my hon. Friends made more general points. I shall try to respond to some of them, but if I cannot do so because of time constraints or because of lack of detailed answers I shall reply in writing.

The current financial regime needs explanation. I thought that I had explained it during my opening remarks, but it appears that some of my hon. Friends did not think so. The new towns' principal source of finance has been borrowing from the Treasury. That has meant that not only the new investment requirements of the development corporations but revenue deficits have had to be financed by borrowing. It is in the nature of this regime, rather than out of any desire to obscure the issues, that I say that it is not possible to identify individual advances as having been made to finance specific activities. That point was raised forcefully by my hon. Friends the Members for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley) and for Eastbourne. On reflection, they probably know that the development corporations' borrowing represents their corporate financing requirement, not a series of specific investment decisions. I hope that that explains why both in the details of the order and in the Department's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin we could not give details on the specific advances. We can give the times at which advances have been made to finance the corporate requirements of particular new towns, and in the case of my hon. Friend that is Telford.

Another point discussed at great length by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne was the difference between the first and second columns of the order. Column 1 shows the amount of money advanced to the corporations when they asked for it and column 2—my hon. Friend had fun with this — shows the sum remaining to be repaid at 31 August 1986. The simplest explanation is to say that, rather like a mortgage, little principal is repaid in the first years when the advance is outstanding. These are all loans for 60 years, which is much longer than the period of the average mortgage. I hope that that explains the simple difference between the two columns.

Mr. Soames: Can my hon. Friend say on what basis the interest charges are calculated? Surely they are not fixed for 60 years. When changes are made to the interest charges, are they authorised on the Floor of the House?

Mr. Tracey: The interest charges on a particular advance are fixed. That was another point made in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin about a week ago.

There has been some criticism of the position. It appears that with almost £1·7 billion of debt the new towns have got into a mess. There are various reasons for the apparent financial problems, the most important of which is the sheer financial burden of providing infrastructure and amenities, especially in the later new towns. The Government were, understandably, determined to provide a high standard to avoid the feeling of what might be called new town blues. A further important factor is location. It was reasonably easy to make something of a surplus in a town near London with pre-existing good communications during a period of steady economic growth. The later new towns on green field sites needed a great deal of infrastructure, which did not already exist, and by the time that was created economic growth had been slower.

With hindsight, we can see that the original new town financial model was somewhat over-optimistic. The important thing now is to put matters right and to get them on to a sound financial footing which will serve for the remaining period.

The hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) said that the Government had sinister intentions that might lead to privatisation. We make no bones about the fact that we wish to see the greatest possible amount of private investment in the new towns. What would the hon. Gentleman have done in these circumstances? Would he have allowed the towns to obtain this vast amount of debt? I had thought that the Opposition were fairly agreeable when the idea of restructuring was mooted.

[Mr. Tracey]

My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin complained that he was unable to obtain sufficient information from Telford new town. He may have some cause for complaint, but he recently met my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and discussed the matter at great length. My right hon. Friend has undertaken to write to him about several points. Perhaps he should await the reply. His point about the Nedge hill area of Telford would be better dealt with in my right hon. Friend's letter. I should have thought that my hon. Friend could have obtained much of the general information, including investment and development in Telford, from a close examination of the new town's report and accounts.

My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin also mentioned the chairman of Telford new town corporation, Lord Northfield. My hon. Friend was worried about the fact that Lord Northfield is also chairman of Consortium Development. At the beginning of the year, we considered the potential conflict of interest and we concluded that, as Consortium Development operates in the south-east, and Lord Northfield is not personally involved in land negotiations at Telford, no conflict of interest arises. I record the fact that my hon. Friend has raised the point again, and I am sure that my right hon. Friend will answer it in his letter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) asked about the accountability of the development corporations. Like the Commission for the New Towns, they are fully accountable. The accounts in the annual reports are audited by external auditors appointed by the Secretary of State and they are reported on by the auditors. That is clear from the reports of the new towns. The Government examine closely those reports and the projects placed before us before deciding that annual budgets of the corporations. As my hon. Friend will know, we are also considering extending the competence of the ombudsman to examine new town affairs. I am sure that my hon. Friend welcomes that development.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) paid tribute in a typically robust and well-argued speech to the contributions of the new towns, but sounded sad when he suggested that Crawley had been treated unfairly compared with the four new towns mentioned in the order. I refer him to what I said about the greater ease with which Crawley had been able to develop a surplus and repay its debts. I pay tribute to what has been done in Crawley. I know that my hon. Friend is a force in encouraging the greatest possible efficiency and development of enterprise in the town.

My hon. Friend asked me about the forecasts for the four new towns and others. Our forecasts were prepared by the development corporations, but they were analysed by highly professional consultants appointed by the Government, so we have subjected the forecasts to careful scrutiny and analysed their sensitivity to a range of assumptions about rental income, investment levels, and so on. As my hon. Friend said, forecasting is not an exact science, but I am satisfied that we have the best possible forecasts.

A number of hon. Members mentioned specific places within the new towns. My hon. Friends the Members for The Wrekin and for Stafford (Mr. Cash) asked about the future of the Ironbridge Gorge museum after 1991. The future of the museum is under consideration and my noble Friend the Minister responsible for planning visited it early in July when discussions took place. The Department's officials have had further discussions with the officers of the museum trust and there will be more discussions. We intend to find a way to safeguard the future of this excellent museum which records so well the development of our industrial heritage.

My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin also asked me about the Telford ice rink. The development corporation provided for a rink in the town centre and it was understood at the time that, on completion, ownership of the ice rink would be transferred to The Wrekin district council and that the corporation would make no contribution to remaining costs, including any revenue deficit. As the Minister responsible for sport, I think that the provision of an ice rink, as a major public amenity in Telford, is a good thing and I am sure that it has been welcomed by the people of the town.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne asked about the Texas Homecare store in Milton Keynes. My hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon) mentioned the £1 billion of private investment in that excellent new town, and the Texas store is part of that. The development corporation made provision for infrastructure, such as the roads and the mains services around the store. I hope that that satisfies my hon. Friend.

My hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin, who raised the subject of housing transfer in Telford, will know from my answer to a question from him in March that the Government are determined to seek alternatives to direct transfer to local authorities. At present, we are engaged in close consultation in Telford and other new towns on this very point. My hon. Friend may rest assured that we shall continue discussions to find the best possible way forward.

I think that I have dealt with all the points raised, but I will write to any hon. Member whose question has not been answered. The new towns programme is now nearing completion, but there are still important tasks to be completed. I believe that the financial reconstruction will help to take us forward in the best and most businesslike way. I commend the order to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That the draft New Towns (Extinguishment of Liabilities) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 1st July, be approved.

West London Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Malone.]

2.1 pm

Mr. Nick Raynsford (Fulham): I am grateful for this opportunity to discuss the future of the West London hospital, which is extensively used by many residents of my constituency, although it is located just outside the boundary in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), who has fully supported my concern and would have wished to be here today but for other commitments. It is appropriate that this debate should take place today as a consultation paper is expected to be published today by the district health authority proposing the closure of the West London hospital in November 1987.

It is important that the House should be aware of the context of that consultation paper. It is being produced by a district health authority which has been told to make cuts of some £33 million in a budget of £120 million by 1993-94—a reduction in expenditure of no less than 27 per cent. That is no reflection of lack of need in the area, which has huge unmet needs—an aging population, long and lengthening waiting lists for many operations and many people suffering poverty and deprivation. Against that background, the National Health Service should be expanding and developing to meet needs more effectively, rather than being told to make swingeing cuts in the budget which illustrate all too clearly the dishonesty of the Government's claim that the Health Service is safe in their hands. The people of Fulham and Hammersmith are well aware how hollow and untrue that claim is. In the face of such cuts in hospital services, the Health Service in West London is far from safe in the Government's hands.

The West London hospital currently incorporates four main units. The obstetrics unit has a national reputation for a very high standard of care. Among women it has a reputation for providing a service that is sensitive to their needs and aspirations, and it has been in the forefront in promoting natural childbirth. There is also a special baby care unit with a particularly high standard of neonatal care —a factor contributing to the good reputation of the area in terms of perinatal mortality, for which the figures are among the lowest in Britain and, indeed, in western Europe. The plan in the consultation paper involves closure of the hospital and loss of the obstetrics unit without replacement, and thus the destruction of one of the country's best maternity units.

Secondly, the geriatric unit provides long-term care for about 50 elderly patients. This unit has done important work in developing understanding and a close relationship between staff and patients. Many of the patients suffer from senile dementia, requiring intensive care and needing to develop trust and confidence in the people looking after them.

The third unit is the psycho-geriatric assessment unit providing 16 beds and also associated day care. The fourth is the genito-urinary unit, which is doing extremely important work in one of the most difficult areas of medicine and, indeed, is currently one of the first places of referral for a substantial number of people suffering from AIDS in Britain. The importance of that work should not be underestimated.

Apart from the four units provided by the hospital, there is also an associated nurses home, Abercorn House, which is providing accommodation for 90 nurses in an area where there is a desperate need because high house prices and exceptionally high rents make it difficult for nursing staff to afford to live. That in turn creates acute problems for hospitals, one of which, the Charing Cross hospital, has encountered considerable difficulty in maintaining its wards because of the absence of nursing staff who simply cannot afford to live in the area.

The proposal in the consultation paper suggests the relocatin of some of those units. The psycho-geriatric and genito-urinary units would be relocated, essentially at Charing Cross hospital, and I would not quarrel in principle with that. It is appropriate that those units should be on a district general hospital site, and the standard of provision could well be improved there.

The geriatric department will be replaced under the proposals with two small-scale nursing homes. Again that is not necessarily wrong in principle, but there are serious potential problems. In the first place, there must be an anxiety about the timetable — whether the new units, which have not yet been begun, could possibly be completed and ready for occupation by November 1987, the date set for the closure of the West London hospital.

Secondly, what will happen in terms of the disruption of the care of the elderly people, whose trust in thieir nurses has been painstakingly built up over a period? We should remember that we are talking only of replacing beds that will be lost. Yet we know that there is an urgent additional need for extra beds, particularly for respite care to help many carers who look after elderly relatives and who desperately need the opportunity to place their relatives in a caring environment so that they can get away for a week or two weeks' holiday from time to time. Those are the units that will, to an extent, be replaced under the proposal. I want now to deal with those that will not.

The nurses home will be lost, and that will be a loss of desperately needed accommodation in the area. The obstetrics unit will be lost without replacement under the proposal. That is clearly motivated by a wish to make savings. There can be no other possible explanation of why that has been put forward. The consultation paper suggests that that will provide savings of approximately £2,250,000 out of the total projected revenue savings coming from the closure of the hospital of £2,750,000. So the lion's share of the total savings is attributable to the closure of the obstetrics unit without replacement.

What possible justification can there be for doing this? It may be argued that the West London hospital building is old, in need of maintenance and repair. It is an old building. It has a long and distinguished history going back 126 years, during which time the hospital has been located on this site. However, I hasten to add that there have been many additions and improvements to the building during that time. It is not simply a building that dates back to the 1860s.

Everyone who has been there or who has accompanied patients there knows what is really important is not its bricks and mortar but the standard of care. The West London hospital's reputation is without equal in that respect. It has an immensely high standard of care and concern for patients. It is also one of those smaller hospitals which can achieve a more friendly and intimate environment than is possible in larger hospitals.

[Mr. Nick Raynsford]

The physical fabric of the hospital might justify the relocation of the unit elsewhere, but it certainly does not justify the closure of that unit without replacement.

What other justification could be advanced for the closure of the unit? Undoubtedly the claim will be advanced—I suspect the Minister has been briefed to this effect—that there is "an over-provision of maternity beds in the district".

Such a claim can be substantiated only by a juggling of the statistics to suit the argument. There are only two maternity units in hospitals managed by the district health authority—Westminster hospital and the West London hospital. Between them they provide for about 3,000 births a year—about 2,000 at the West London hospital and about 1,000 at Westminster hospital. The birth rate for the Riverside area is about 3,500 and the forecast, based upon a midpoint projection, is about 3,700 a year.

Local needs can be met adequately only because of the two other maternity units, which do not come under the district health authority, but come under the special health authority. I refer to Queen Charlotte's and Hammersmith hospitals. Beds there are not primarily available to local residents. The North West Thames Regional Health Authority's maternity patients flow data show clearly that only a small proportion — about 17 per cent. — of maternity patients at Queen Charlotte's come from Hammersmith and Fulham. Most come from other areas.

There is no catchment area for obstetrics and no priority is given to local patients. Many of my constituents are refused access to Queen Charlotte's hospital. The letter that is sent out states simply:

"Your doctor has written to us requesting a booking for your confinement at Queen Charlotte's Maternity Hospital. We very much regret that during the time of your expected confinement we are fully booked and suggest that you return to your doctor immediately so that alternative arrangements for your confinement can be made."

Letters like that are being sent out in large numbers. According to recent evidence from Professor Elder, 150 applicants a month are turned away by the special health authority. So much for the argument about over-provision.

Furthermore, the argument ignores consumer choice. West London and Queen Charlotte's hospitals are both excellent in their way, but they represent entirely different poles of maternity care provision. The West London hospital has a national reputation for progressive maternity care, for natural child bith and for taking account of the woman's needs and wishes. My three children were born there, so I know of the extraordinary sensitive care that my wife received during her confinements.

The consultation document admits as much. It says:

"The West London unit is justly famous. It has been in the forefront of the development of more liberal and sensitive approaches to maternity services and has become known as a leading centre for natural child birth. It is also regarded as a major centre for teaching and research."

That is a tragic comment on the state of the Health Service under this Government. An outstanding maternity unit is threatened with closure without replacement.

The third argument which might be advanced for the closure is that patients can go instead to Westminster hospital. That involves the loss of the West London unit and its tradition of excellence. It will involve a substantial aditional journey for people in my constituency that is particularly important if their children are in the neo-natal intensive care unit and they have to be on hand to be close to their babies.

The fundamental argument is that even if one of those units has to close because of over-provision, West London certainly should not be chosen. West London is the only unit which satisfies the health authority's criteria for the minimum standards of provision which make the unit viable. The health authority's planners have made it clear that the minimum standard for viability is 2,000 births per year. The West London hospital achieves that, but Westminster does not. Even with the proposed extra provision, Westminster will still have a capacity for only 1,700 deliveries — far below the minimum level for viability. What an extraordinary proposal.

There will be a serious potential impact on Charing Cross hospital and its medical school. The closure of the unit at West London will leave a major teaching hospital without an associatud obstetrics unit. That will create an extraordinary situation and, as the consultation paper admits, it will have a knock-on effect on the gynaecological service. The document states:

"Some impact on the existing provision of gynaecology services could result. Any reduction in the level of gynaecology services would have to be the subject of separate formal consultation."

The paper admits that there will be serious potential consequences and that there will have to be further consultation, yet it is still proposed to go ahead with the closure of the West London hospital. That is nonsensical. Furthermore, this could undermine the viability of obstetric teaching at Charing Cross.

Professor Curzon has said that the closure of the West London unit would have drastic consequences. I shall quote from a paper that he wrote earlier this year, which states:

"If the West London obstetric unit were to be closed before a definitive solution to the long-term provision of obstetric services had been agreed and implemented, the School's department would have to move to some other temporary site. This would compound the damaging effects of further uncertainties about the future with the considerable turbulence resulting from the move. The only possible sites to which the department could move would be either Westminster Hospital or Queen Charlotte's Hospital. It has already been shown that Westminster Hospital fails to meet the essential criteria of sufficient resources for teaching, and provision of obstetrics and gynaecology on the same site."

A subsequent note from the Professor states that Queen Charlotte's hospital will not take the students in question.

There are all these damaging consequences. The cuts will have an effect on patient care, medical education and related health services. Above all, they will fly in the face of public opinion. When the closure was last proposed, there was generated a massive public reaction. There are many who are associated with the hospital, including patients and nurses in the Public Gallery today to show their concern.

I hope that the Minister will reconsider this ill-thought out proposal, which will have damaging consequences. If the Government wish to be taken seriously in their claim that the Health Service is safe in their hands, they must provide more funds to maintain the viability of this hospital.

2.16 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Barney Hayhoe): First, I congratulate the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr.

Raynsford) on what I think is his first Adjournment debate. I am sorry that he rather muddied his advocacy of local interests by making a number of highly party political assertions which he scattered during his speech. I repudiate the simplicity of what he was saying in such a party political context.

The West London hospital is a smallish hospital with fewer than 150 beds providing geriatric, psycho-geriatric, obstetric care, in-patient services and a special care baby unti. There are out-patient clinics, which I know are held in high regard. As the hon. Gentleman said, the building is in a poor state of repair and would require major capital investment to bring it up to a reasonable and acceptable standard. It is rather an isolated unit that is away from the associated specialty and support services that are normally found on a district general hospital site. When the hon. Gentleman was commenting about particular units he said that they could gain by being brought into Charing Cross and being close to the back-up services.

The services that are provided at West London are part of the overall service provision of the Riverside district. The Riverside health authority is responsible for planning services throughout the district and has to ensure that they are provided in a sensible and cost-effective manner.

The subject chosen by the hon. Gentleman for the debate is the future of a particular hospital. I am sure that he will understand that it cannot be considered in isolation. Any reasonable consideration must include services in the district as a whole. At present, the Riverside district is undertaking a review of all its services and it is considering the options for future patterns of services. Its budget last year, 1985-86, was over £120 million, and for 1986-87 it has already increased to over £128 million. There is still the share of the additional £50 million that the Government have made available to meet part of the cost of the pay review body awards. There is, therefore, further money coming to the district. The review which the authority must carry out includes the services provided by all the hospitals in the district and takes account of the changing population. The population of Riverside is declining and it is expected to fall by about 10 per cent. by 1994. Future services will need to reflect that decline. The real cuts that are taking place are in the number of people living in the Riverside area. Furthermore, in Riverside—little mention was made of this—there is a need to develop community services to ensure a better balance between hospital and community provision. While I understand why particular pressure groups home in on specific aspects of more general proposals, I believe it important that balanced judgments are made in proper context.

The overall regional strategy within which the district review is taking place has been generally endorsed by Ministers. The region's main broad strategic aims—the improvement of acute services in some parts of the region and the improvement of priority services throughout the region—are in line with national priorities. The region's overall approach to securing the resources needed to achieve those aims requires, first, the release of resources from local acute services in districts such as Riverside and, secondly, greater efficiency in the provision of these and other services throughout the region.

If, as a result of its planning, the district health authority decides that the closure or change of use of Health Service premises is necessary, there is a formal procedure which it must follow. This is set out in Health Circular HSC(IS)207. This requires health authorities to consult widely on their plans and to consider all comments that are made. Community health councils must be consulted and are free to put forward counter-proposals. Any such proposals by the CHC must be carefully considered by the health authority alongside the original plans. If the health authority rejects the counter-proposals and reaffirms its original plans, the matter must be referred to the regional health authority. If the RHA supports the DHA's decision the proposal must then be referred to Ministers for a final decision. There is a long consultation process.

I have gone into general issues by way of background in some detail despite what the hon. Gentleman said and what is implied in some comments I have heard, final decisions have not been made about the future of the West London hospital. I understand that today the district will circulate to health authority members its draft — I underline the word "draft" — consultative document. That document is to be considered by the health authority at its next meeting on 24 July. It has not been published. Obviously, the hon. Gentleman was quoting from a document. I do not know how that document was obtained. The document, in draft form is going to the health authorities for their consideration. It would be wholly inappropriate for me to comment in detail at this stage. If the DHA decides to go ahead, I shall look forward to hearing the results of the consultation exercise.

The hon. Gentleman referred to obstetric care. I understand his family connections in that respect. I am delighted to join with him in paying tribute to the high reputation that the unit has built up, especially under the leadership of Professor Norman Morris, who I believe retired last year. The unit has an innovative tradition. That is continuing. It is known as a pioneering centre for natural childbirth.

I do not accept the rather artificial destinctions that the hon. Gentleman tried to draw between the various hospitals that serve people in this part of London. Queen Charlotte and Hammersmith hospitals are run by a special health authority, but they bring in a considerable capacity for maternity care in that area, in addition to that provided by the Westminster and West London hospitals.

The latest figures that I have seen—they are for 1984 — show that about two out of every five mothers involved came from Riverside. Two out of every five women treated in the obstetric maternity areas of those four hospitals were Riverside mums. Over 5,000 came from outside the area. I am sure that some came from my constituency, because there is a close link between some of the hospitals in Riverside and those in my district of Hownslow and Spelthorne.

A balance must be achieved. It is important that we do not deal with these matters in watertight compartments. Perhaps there was too much of that in the past. It is necessary to look at health care, especially in London, and at the facilities provided by the health authorities and the special health authorities. I note, of course, the arguments put forward by the hon. Member for Fulham. I am sure that the health authority will do so also. I am sorry that he was rather narrow in his consideration of these problems and did not take a wider view.

As I have said, at this stage I shall make no comment on the West London hospital. It is for the health authority to come to a decision. It is right that health authorities should be generally free to explore all the options open to them. They must not be hidebound in their thinking but must consider a wide range of alternatives, even when they may involve radical change. When they have done that, there is a formal consultation process to ensure that the views of those affected are taken into account before final decisions are made. This seems to be the right way to proceed and to ensure the proper plan of future health services to meet the evolving requirements of health care in the district and region concerned. We are concerned not with what existed years ago but with making proper plans for the future provision to deal with patient needs.

I wish that there was more reasonable and balanced consideration of these issues. They are not helped by biased and distorted media coverage of NHS matters. I shall mention one concerned with west London hospitals. Recently the letter page of The London Standard contained a letter headlined "Londoners caught in a red alert". It was said that "the whole of the North West region had been on red alert since March."

The North West region occupies a substantial part of the home counties. The letter was totally untrue.

The administrator of the emergency bed services wrote making the correction that the red alert had lasted not for months but for four days, from 7 to 10 March, yet that letter was hidden away and given little prominence. I wonder whether the original letter was politically motivated and why The London Standard should in this instance, and often in other ways, give prominence to critical stories about the NHS in London, whether they are accurate or not, and ignore or seldom mention new hospital developments and improvements.

The provision of health care for the future and the discussion about it are of immense importance to all concerned. It is right that the hon. Member for Fulham should use the Adjournment debate to raise matters of special concern to his constituents. Having said that, I think that we should discuss them in a sensible and balanced fashion.

I know that the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) wishes to bring forward another Adjournment debate. Rather than reply in more detail, I shall sit down to give him that opportunity, although I am rather surprised that he is not in his place.

Sir John Biggs-Davison (Epping Forest): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you help the House? The hon. Baronet, the Member for Linlithgow, (Mr. Dalyell) who is not present, has complained that he has not been given time to pursue by debate his personal campaign against my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. You will observe, Sir, that a Minister of the Crown and my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House are present. A number of hon. Members are here in the hope that we might take part in the debate that the hon. Baronet wished to raise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): These are not matters for me. The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) has not made any complaint to me.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-nine minute past Two o'clock.

TRANSPORT

A45 (Traffic Delays)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport for how many days traffic along the A45 in the vicinity of Bury St. Edmunds has been subject to delays as a result of the closure of various lanes; how many yards of each carriageway have been or are now affected; what is the value of the work that so far has been carried out and that still remains to be done; how many man-hours have been spent in each week since this contract was let; and why so many red and white cones are frequently scattered across the highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current maintenance work on this stretch of the A45 has resulted in lane or carriageway closures on 40 days so far. These have not always involved significant delays for traffic. The total length of carriageway affected by the contract is 8 km (8,720 yds) but the maximum length affected at any one time has been 2 km (2,180 yds). The total cost is £160,000, of which £90,000 remains to be spent before the contract ends in September. The work has involved approximately 450 man-hours per week. Scattering of traffic cones is generally caused by drivers straying from their lanes. The contractor repositions displaced cones on a regular basis.

Roads (Maintenance)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum spent on the repair and maintenance of roads nationally, for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, inclusive, in actual prices and in real terms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Return of actual expenditure on highway maintenance are submitted by individual highway authorities to the Department in relation to their area as a whole. Prior to April 1986 the highway authority for Bradford was West Yorkshire metropolitan county council. I regret I cannot give details of maintenance expenditure within Bradford for this period.

Tunnelled Roads

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the current average cost of constructing tunnelled roads as opposed to surface bypasses, taking into account the loss of land involved in construction of bypasses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret that this information is not available. Tunnelling costs vary widely depending on geological and other local factors and there is no meaningful average cost. As a general rule, taking account of land and other costs, " "cut and cover" tunnel will be significantly more expensive than a surface scheme and a bored tunnel will be the most costly.

Car Registration Date

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had on the proposed change of the new car registration date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 19 May in column 23.

Inverness-Heathrow Air Links

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the implications of the availability of direct air links from Inverness to Heathrow for the international trading potential and prospects of indigenous industry in the Highlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I are taking these matters into account in our consideration of the Civil Aviation Authority's recent advice on air traffic distribution in the London area, on which he intends to make an announcement in due course.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to set up his proposed review of the Woolwich ferry; who will conduct it; what evidence it will invite; and when it is expected to be published.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are finalising details with the London borough of Greenwich who manages the ferry operation for us. We shall be appointing consultants to examine all aspects of the ferry and workshops operation with a view to reporting to us by the end of the year.

M3 (Maintenance)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on maintenance on the M3 Surrey stretch of motorway each year since its operation; and how often and for how long maintenance work has necessitated introduction of a contraflow system.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Total amounts spent on major works of maintenance on the M3 in Surrey have been as follows:

1980-81	10,474
1981-82	1,301,000
1982-83	1,387,347
1983-84	1,319,658
1984-85	2,591,314
1985-86	1,696,225

Expenditure was also incurred on certain less important works and routine maintenance. The total amounts cannot readily be identified.

The period for which contraflow systems have operated have been as follows:

	Weeks
1981-82	10
1982-83	14
1983-84	12
1984-85	12 and 11
1985-86	29

Hereford Bypass

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to commence the public consultation phase in respect of the proposed Hereford north-south bypass for the A49.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is too early in the study timetable to be precise, but probably during the first quarter of 1987.

WALES

Second Homes (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Property Services Agency concerning its application for planning permission for building second homes on land currently owned by it in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: None.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what advantages to the Welsh economy he envisages from participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Contracts awarded to Welsh companies as a result of participation in the SDI research programme will provide direct stimulus to the Welsh economy, strengthen the technological base and assist the retention and growth of technical and scientific expertise in Wales to the benefit of other high-tech industries based in the Principality.

Housing

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the number of representations he had before he decided to issue his circular on housing for senior management in Wales; and how many of these representations were from (a) local authorities, (b) other bodies and (c) individuals; and how many in each category were in favour and how many against.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Of the 27 bodies consulted on the draft circular, 22 responded. A further 12 representations were received. Some of the respondents qualified their support or opposition, but in broad terms the numbers in favour and against were as follows:

	Local authorities	Other bodies	Individuals
In favour	—	14	2
Against	7	11	—
Total	7	25	2

Lambs (Subsidy)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that, apart from any other compensation that may be payable, he will pay compensation of lost subsidy to those sheep farmers whose lambs will not qualify for subsidy when sold due to the ban on marketing if they would have qualified for subsidy had the ban not been imposed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have today had discussions with representatives of the farming unions in Wales on the question of compensation. Their views will be taken fully into account and I hope to be in a position to make an early statement.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Intelligence Secretariat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will now list the countries whose representatives attend the meetings of the security intelligence secretariat.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to comment on intelligence matters.

Prince of Wales (Wedding)

Mr. Canavan asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost to all Government Departments of providing various services at the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of providing various services was £69,782. This does not include costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence.

EC (VAT)

Mr. Shersby asked the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards zero rating for the purposes of value added tax in the context of the development of the internal market within the European Community; what initiatives Her Majesty's Government plan in this respect during the United Kingdom's Presidency of the Council of Ministers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Commission has put forward a number of proposals aimed at removing barriers to trade within the Community. One of the measures it has suggested is the "approximation" of indirect tax rates throughout the Community. Acceptance of this proposal would undoubtedly raise a whole range of political, economic, social and industrial problems, not just for the United Kingdom but for all member states. A major issue for the Government would be the future of the zero rate. But we do not believe that out zero rate is incompatible with the development of the internal market. We would therefore maintain that any tax measures which the Council considered were necessary for the completion of the internal market should permit the continuation of the zero rate.

The Economic and Finance Council, at its meeting on 16 June, concluded that it could not take decisions on questions concerning tax rates and rate structures until the Commission had provided further details, which Lord Cockfield has now promised for April 1987. In the meantime the Council agree to continue work under the United Kingdom Presidency on certain existing technical proposals affecting frontier formalities and the structure and mechanisms of value added tax and the main excise duties.

North-West (Visits)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will give details of each official visit she has made to the north-west of England since 1 March.

The Prime Minister: I have made no official visit to the north-west since 1 March.

Foreign Countries (Visits)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will give the number of times she has visited (a) the United States of America and (b) each of the European Community nations, since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 10 December 1985 at columns 575-577; the reference to a visit to Germany in November 1985 was a clerical error, however, and should be deleted. Since that date, I have made no visits to the United States, and have visited France, Italy and the Netherlands on one occasion each.

Engagements

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister, further to her answers of 17 June, Official Report, columns 512-13, and 23 June, Official Report, columns 49-50, if any right hon. or hon. Members were present at any of the meetings referred to other than as listed.

The Prime Minister: The meeting of 12 February with Birmingham councillors to discuss the city's Olympic bid was also attended by my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport. It is not for me to answer for those present at meetings other than members of the Government.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister if she will state the public expenditure of each Department of State, in actual real and 1979 = 100 terms for 1978-79, 1984-85 and 1985-86 in league order.

The Prime Minister: The following figures have been derived from tables 2.1 and 2.2 of the 1986 public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9702:

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Dr. McDonald asked the Prime Minister if she will allow time for consultation and a full discussion of any recommendations of the review team on the future of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, before any changes are implemented.

The Prime Minister: The review team is conducting a number of discussions. These have included meetings with Office of Population Censuses and Surveys trade union side representatives at London, Southport and Titchfield.

I shall consider what further discussions or consultations are appropriate when the review team has made its recommendations.

Dr. McDonald asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the current machinery of the Government review of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, she will make a statement about the continued existence of the social survey division of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

The Prime Minister: No. The review is still in progress.

South Africa

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister whether the version of the text of the new code of conduct for European firms operating in South Africa agreed on 19 November 1985 which was issued by other EEC Governments contained the same misquotation as the version issued by Her Majesty's Government; on what date Her Majesty's Government first discovered this error; which Departments issued the document containing the misquotation; what steps have been taken to trace the incorrect copies and to replace them with corrected versions; whether any copies containing the misquotation have been issued to companies trading in South Africa; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no information yet on measures taken by other EC Governments to implement the revised EC code of conduct for European companies with interests in South Africa. Following discovery earlier this year of a misquotation of the text of the 1977 code in a footnote to the revised code issued by the EC Presidency last November, informal guidance on the new code to which reports due after 30 June will relate was issued on 20 June to United Kingdom companies falling within its scope. A White Paper will be issued in due course.

Virgin Atlantic Challenger

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of flying by Nimrod aircraft petrol filters to Virgin Atlantic Challenger on 29 June; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The petrol filters were dropped by an RAF Nimrod in the course of an operational training sortie which had already been planned. RAF equipment used for the drop was recovered and has been returned for re-use. The delivery of the filters involved no extra costs to public funds.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iran (Exports)

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that exports to Iran of (a) petroleum and petroleum products, (b) artificial resins and plastic materials, (c) miscellaneous chemical products, (d) miscellaneous rubber products, (e) iron and steel products, (f) office machine and automatic data processing equipment (g) telecommunications and sound recording and reproducing equipment, (h) miscellaneous transport equipment, (i) professional scientific and controlling instruments, (j) electrical machinery and (k) road vehicles, have not contributed in any way to maintaining internal repression or continuing the war with Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: Many of these items are subject to export licensing control. In granting licences regard is paid to the possible use of goods for the purposes of internal repression and licence applications for supplies of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq are subject to the following guidelines:

(i) We should maintain our consistent refusal to supply any lethal equipment to either side;

(ii) Subject to that overriding consideration, we should attempt to fulfil existing contracts and obligations;

(iii) We should not approve orders for any defence equipment which, in our view, would significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict;

(iv) In line with this policy, we should continue to scrutinise rigorously all applications for export licences for the supply of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq.

Goods and Services

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest estimate of the total value of purchases of goods and services made by the state industrial sector; and what proportion of that total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Butcher: The nationalised industries for which this Department is responsible — the British Steel Corporation, the Post Office and British Shipbuilders— estimate that their purchases of raw materials, goods and services amount to just less than £4,000 million a year. I regret that within this total it is not possible to identify purchases from the private sector.

Audio Tapes

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what, from the latest available statistics, was the incidence of purchase of blank audio tapes in the United Kingdom, broken down by age group.

Mr. Pattie: Official statistics on sales of audio tapes by age groups are not available. The following is from industry sources.

The most recent survey, carried out by National Opinion Polls on behalf of the Tape Manufacturers' Group gives the following breakdown of acquisitions, that is, purchases plus gifts, of blank audio cassette tapes by age group. The survey was carried out in late January/early February of this year.

Telephone Equipment

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the regulation affecting the installation, preconnection inspection and designation of the maintenance contractors of single line call routeing apparatus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Director General of Telecommunications is currently seeking comments on changes that might be made to the branch systems general licence. No decisions on changes will be taken before the director general's advice is to hand.

Telephone Bills

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legslation to oblige telephone companies to provide itemised bills for all telephone subscribers.

Mr. Butcher: No. I understand, however, that the Director General of Telecommunications is pressing BT for progress in this area, although it cannot be fully achieved until BT has all the necessary technology in place. My hon. Friend may be aware that Mercury Comunications Ltd. has already announced that it is able to offer this service to its customers.

Time-share Properties

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he has any plans to seek to extend existing consumer protection legislation to contracts for the purchase of time-share properties; and what consultations he has had on this matter and with whom;

(2) whether he has any plans to seek to introduce a licensing system for those selling time-share properties; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has received any representations concerning the sales techniques adopted by those selling time-share properties, with particular reference to the activities of British companies in Spain and other overseas holiday resorts.

Mr. Howard: My Department has received nine complaints about the sales techniques used by some firms to sell time shares. One of these complaints was about a property abroad and this was in Spain, but there was no indication whether the company concerned was British.

Broadly speaking, existing legislation in the United Kingdom applies to contracts for time share purchases in the same way as it applies to other contracts. I have no plans at present to amend legislation because of the way in which timesharing contracts are marketed or to introduce a licensing system for firms engaged in such marketing.

I would strongly advise all those considering buying time shares, whether in this country or abroad, to think very carefully and to take independent legal advice before committing themselves.

Furniture (Fire Safety)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now state what action he proposes to take on the flammability of upholstered furniture, and, in particular, the replacement of standard polyurethane foam in upholstery combinations where it poses an unacceptable safety hazard.

Mr. Howard: I will reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Exports (Soft Loans)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 494, he will give details of the potentially suitable projects for funding under the aid and trade provision, which have been agreed in principle with the Chinese Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: Five projects are being negotiated for potential funding under the £300 million soft loan facility for China. These involve a power station, a tractor factory, a seamless steel tube mill, a fibre optic transmission equipment facility, and two specialised container ships.

Electrical and Electronics Firms

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the degree of concentration of (a) total turnover, (b) research and development expenditure and (c) contracts with Her Majesty's Government, among each of the top 10 electronic firms in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Retail Sales

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms represented the upper half of retail sales in the United Kingdom in 1985.

Mr. Howard: No estimate is yet available for 1985. The final estimate for 1984 is that the largest 107 individual companies accounted for one half of retail sales in Great Britain.

Pension Funds

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the assets net of short-term liabilities and long-term borrowing for self-administered pension funds in the United Kingdom in (a) 1984 and (b) 1985; and what were the absolute and percentage shares of their source of funds divided between (i) private sector funds, (ii) local authority funds and (iii) other public sector funds.

Mr. Butcher: The latest information relating to the net assets of pension funds is for 1984 and is published in table 11 of Business Monitor MQ5, second quarter 1985. The latest information on the income and expenditure of pension funds is for 1983 and is published in table 8 of Business Monitor MQ5 third quarter 1984. Information relating to the net assets for 1985 and income and expenditure for 1984 and 1985 will be published later this year. Copies of Busines Monitor MQ5 are in the Library.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the share of the top 10 pension funds in the assets of United Kingdom pension funds in: (a) 1984 and (b) 1985.

Mr. Butcher: The available information relates to 1984. It is estimated that the top 10 pension funds accounted for about one-quarter of total net assets at the end of December 1984.

South Africa

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account has been taken by Her Majesty's Government, in estimating the net number of jobs at risk from the possible imposition of sanctions against South Africa, of any offsetting job gains resulting from the manufacture in the United Kingdom of goods previously imported and the investment in the United Kingdom of capital previously exported to South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 1986]: The majority of United Kingdom imports from South Africa are accounted for by raw materials and agricultural products not available in the United Kingdom. Of the remainder it is not possible to determine what—if any—proportion would subsequently come to be manufactured in the United Kingdom.

There is no reason to suppose that United Kingdom capital withdrawn from South Africa would necessarily be invested in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what method of calculation has been used to arrive at a figure of 120,000 job losses in the United Kingdom if full economic sanctions were applied to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 1986]: The figure of around 120,000 job equivalents involved in exports of goods and services to South Africa is a broad estimate based on the aggregate level of trade with that country together with an assumption about the relationship between output and employment.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any contingency plans exist for alternative sources of supplies of strategically important minerals currently supplied by South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 1986]: The Government are aware that certain minerals of importance to British industry are largely imported from South Africa. It remains the Government's view that industry is responsible for maintaining adequate stocks of strategic minerals for its needs.

EMPLOYMENT

Pension Age (Equalisation)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the reduction in registered unemployment as a consequence of equalising the age of entitlement to state pension at 60 years.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Working Hours

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table of the estimated average hours worked by each category of part-time workers to illustrate the full-time equivalent level of the employed labour force for each quarter.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the exact form requested.

The regularly published employed labour force series does not identify number of hours worked.

The labour force survey (LFS) provides information on a different basis but allows the above analysis. Preliminary LFS results for the spring of 1985 are presented in the following table:

Average number of hours usually worked per week by part-time† workers*
Great Britain

	Hours
Employees working part-time	17·4
Self employed working part-time	14·6
Employees and self employed‡ working part-time	17·1

* Including overtime, excluding meal-breaks.
† The definition of part-time is based on the respondent's own assessment, not on the number of hours worked.
‡ Includes those who did not state if they were employees or self employed.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table to show the change in the size of the employed labour force between 1979 and each subsequent year separately for the United Kingdom and for all other countries in the European Economic Community combined.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the following table:

Cumulative change in total employment since 1979

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the size of the employed labour force in 1979 in each country in the then European Community and in each subsequent year up to 1985.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the following table:

Vacancies (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the registered number of vacancies by standard industrial classification in the Coventry area at the latest available date and at May 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The following table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres which cover an area closely corresponding to the Coventry and Hinckley travel-to-work area as at 2 May 1986, analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given in the Official Report on 25 November 1985, in columns 394 to 395, which gives the number of unfilled vacancies by 1968 standard industrial classification at jobcentres covering the same area in May 1979.

Manufacturing

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for the number of (a) part-time and full-time and (b) full-time only manufacturing jobs that have been lost in the United Kingdom since June 1979; and if he will list the figures for each English region, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Lang: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

Within the regularly published employment series the estimates of male employees in employment do not separately identify those in full-time employment. Analyses of full and part-time female employees in employment are not available for the United Kingdom for the dates specified. The following table gives the available information for employees employed in Great Britain and the other areas specified:

Net changes between June 1979 and March 1986 in the numbers of employees in employment in the manufacturing industries

	Net change
	All employees	Male and full-time female employeees
South East	– 337,000	– 294,000
East Anglia	27,000	– 27,000
South West	– 75,000	– 75,000
West Midlands	– 285,000	– 258,000
East Midlands	– 110,000	– 99,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	– 204,000	– 187,000
North West	– 294,000	– 272,000
North	– 126,000	– 119,000
Wales	– 110,000	– 107,000
Scotland	– 176,000	– 168,000
Great Britain	– 1,744,000	– 1,606,000

The Labour Force Survey provides information of a different basis and relating to employees resident in an area, but identifies part-time employees amongst male as well as female employees. The available estimates are presented in the following table:

Labour force survey estimates of changes in employees in manufacturing industries between the spring of 1979 and the spring of 1985

	All employees	*Full-time employees
South East	– 558,000	– 491,000
East Anglia	– 17,000	– 15,000
South West	– 83,000	– 73,000
West Midlands	– 350,000	– 305,000
East Midlands	– 58,000	– 53,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	– 234,000	– 206,000
North West	– 274,000	– 242,000

Scotland	– 182,000	– 172,000
Northern Ireland	– 36,000	– 32,000
United Kingdom	– 2,032,000	– 1,811,000

* In this table an employee is shown as part-time if he considers his job to be a part-time job.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers employed in manufacturing industry in (a) June 1979, (b) June 1983 and (c) June 1986, or the most recent figure; and if he will provide the figures for each regional area.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Employees in Employment in the Manufacturing Industries

	June 1979	June 1983	March 1986[1]
South East	1,878,000	1,583,000	1,541,000

Community Programme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General on the basis of the second postal follow-up survey of past participants on the community programme, in respect of those long-term unemployed community programme entrants that were in employment at the time of the survey, and for the following three standard eligibility by age groups, 18 to 20 years, 20 to 24 years, and 25 and over years, if he will provide the number and percentage that were (a) male and (i) married and (ii) single, separated, divorced, or widowed and (b) female and (i) married and (ii) single, separated, divorced, or widowed; and for each latter group and subgroup if he will provide the number and percentage that were working full-time or part-time: (I) while on the programme and (II) at the time of the follow-up survey.

Mr. Lang: Due to the necessity for computer analysis this question cannot be answered immediately. I will, however, reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Attorney-General how many people have received legal aid in each of the last five years; and what criteria will be used to determine eligibility of people who submit claims for legal aid in the future.

The Attorney-General: Apart from civil legal aid, for which the number of certificates issued is recorded separately, legal aid statistics are kept in the form of the number of legal aid bills paid in each year. The figures for the past five years for each type of legal aid are as follows:

Civil legal aid (certificates issued)	176,000	190,000	206,000	222,000	233,000
Assistance by way of Representation (bills paid)	57,000	61,000	64,000	67,000	61,000
Criminal legal aid (Magistrates courts) (bills paid)	296,000	323,000	332,000	334,000	371,000
Criminal legal aid (Higher courts) (bills paid)	193,000	193,000	215,000	230,000	233,000
Advice and Assistance (Green form bills paid)	649,000	733,000	832,000	953,000	1,039,000

All applicants for legal aid must demonstrate that they qualify on means grounds, the criteria for which vary slightly between the schemes. For those who qualify on means grounds, advice and assistance is available on any matter, relating to English law. Applicants for civil legal aid have to satisfy a merits test, which means, broadly speaking, that they must have reasonable grounds for taking or defending proceedings. Applicants for criminal legal aid must show that it is in the interest of justice that they should receive legal aid. No changes to these basic criteria are planned at present. However, the Government have recently received a report of the Efficiency Scrutiny of Legal Aid which recommends a number of alterations to these schemes, and this report is under consideration.

Mr. Speller asked the Attorney-General what is the average delay in deciding upon applications for legal aid and for emergency legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The latest available figures for the length of time taken to issue a civil legal aid certificate are for the financial year 1984-85, when the average time taken was 39 working days. Figures for 1985-86 are not yet available. Separate figures for emergency legal aid applications are not collected, though I understand that the large majority are dealt with within a few days. In appropriate cases, approval can be give over the telephone.

PCW Syndicate

Mr. Arnold asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to the answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 266, if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the £6,000 travel costs arising from investigations into the affairs of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The approximate figure of £6,000 as travel costs arising from investigations into the affairs of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate comprised in part £1,180 in respect of five return air fares to Berne for five officials who visited Switzerland on three separate occasions, and additionally the first class return air fare of £2,246 to New York for leading counsel. Subsistence and hotel claims totalled £1,954. The actual total is therefore £5,380.

Duty Solicitor Scheme

Mr. Speller asked the Attorney-General what is the average delay between work carried out and payment being made under the 24-hour duty solicitor scheme.

The Attorney-General: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

County Courts (Damages Claims)

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General what was the shortest and what was the longest time between the issuing of a summons in a claim for damages in a county court and the hearing of that claim in the last year for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: Figures are not available for the shortest and longest times between issue of a summons and start of hearing. However, information collected on a sample basis during 1985 as part of the civil justice review indicated that the average time between issue and start of hearing in personal injury cases in county courts was in the region of 18 months.

High Court (Damages Claims)

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General what was the shortest and what was the longest time between issuing a summons in a claim for damages in the High Court and the hearing of that claim at the latest year for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: Figures are not available in this precise form. However, information collected on a sample basis during 1985 for personal injury cases indicated that the shortest time between issue of a writ and start of a hearing in the High Court was approximately seven weeks, and the longest approximately 10 years.

Road Accidents

Mr. Janner asked the Attorney-General whether his Department has at any time carried out an inquiry into the effect of the introduction into the law of the United Kingdom of no fault liability in respect of road traffic accidents; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The report of the Royal Commission on civil liability and compensation for personal injury — Cmnd. 7053 — published in March 1978, considered the establishment of a no-fault system of compensation for motor vehicle injuries. No further inquiry has been undertaken or is warranted at this stage.

Terrorism (Murders)

Mr. Maginnis asked the Attorney-General (1) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of John Aiken in Fermanagh on 9 February 1971; and if he will give details;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Thomas George Beck in Fermanagh on 9 February 1971; and if he will give details;

(3) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Henry Edgar in Fermanagh on 9 February 1971; and if he will give details;

(4) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Malcolm David Henson in Fermanagh on 9 February 1971; and if he will give details;

(5) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of William Allan (Bill) Thomas in Fermanagh on 9 February 1971; and if he will give details;

(6) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Francis William Robert Philip Veitch in Fermanagh on 3 September 1971; and if he will give details;

(7) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of John Rudman in South Tyrone on 14 September 1971; and if he will give details;

(8) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of David Frank Powell in Fermanagh on 28 October 1971; and if he will give details;

(9) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Denis Wilson in South Tyrone on 7 December 1971; and if he will give details;

(10) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Thomas Francis McCann in Fermanagh on 13 February 1972; and if he will give details;

(11) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Thomas John Fletcher in Fermanagh on 1 March 1972; and if he will give details;

(12) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of William Logan in South Tyrone on 15 March 1972; and if he will give details;

(13) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Harry Gillespie in South Tyrone on 20 May 1972; and if he will give details;

(14) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Victor Husband in Fermanagh on 2 June 1972; and if he will give details;

(15) if anyone has been made amenable for the Murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Brian Robertson in Fermanagh on 2 June 1972; and if he will give details;

(16) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Samuel Donegan in Fermanagh on 8 June 1972; and if he will give details;

(17) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of William Henry Creighton in Fermanagh on 7 August 1972; and if he will give details;

(18) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Errol Leroy Gordon in Fermanagh on 7 August 1972; and if he will give details;

(19) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of David Wynne in Fermanagh on 7 August 1972; and if he will give details;

(20) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of James H. Eames in Fermanagh on 25 August 1972; and if he will give details.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as information on these murders has been obtained from the Royal Ulster Constabulary. I shall also write to the hon. Gentleman about any other similar incidents which may have occurred within his constituency if he tables appropriate questions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Uganda Police (Aid)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what aid he intends to give to the Uganda Government as far as provisions of blankets for the police force is concerned;

(2) what aid he intends to give the the Uganda Government as far as provisions of simple medicines for the police force is concerned.

Mr. Raison: We are providing vehicles and other equipment for the Uganda police force. We have not been asked for blankets or medicines.

South Africa (EEC Aid)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any of the money sent by Dr. Wilhelminus Blonk, a European Economic Community official of Directorate-General VIII, to South Africa on behalf of the European Economic Community will be given to organisations supporting violence; what was the total sum sent; whether the decision to send the money was made by the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: As part of a package of measures on South Africa adopted in September 1985, the Council of Ministers agreed to set up a programme of aid intended to improve the social situation, and to finance education and training of the non-white population and of political refugees. The money will be devoted to purely peaceful ends. The budgetary authority agreed to insert provision for commitments of about 10 million ecu—about £6·4 million—in the 1986 budget. No specific proposals have yet been put to member states, and no expenditure has yet taken place.

Bilateral Aid Projects

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all bilateral aid projects over £2 million approved by his Department (a) in 1985 and (b) in the first five months of 1986.

Mr. Raison: In 1985 and so far in 1986 the following individual aid projects worth over £2 million have been approved or agreed; the list excludes aid and trade provision projects, bilateral aid in non-project form, and investments by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of all projects approved under the aid and trade provision in (a) 1984, (b) 1985 and (c) the first six months of 1986.

Mr. Raison: The following projects supported under the aid and trade provision were agreed with recipient Governments in 1984, 1985 and the first six months of 1986:

Country	Project	United Kingdom export value £ million	Aid and Trade Provision Allocation £ million
1984
Botswana	Morupule Power Station	4·736	1·343
Colombia	Emergency Bridges	0·540	0·150
Egypt	El Omoum Drain	3·192	0·804
India	BALCO Power Station	130·000	33·066
Indonesia	AIS Submarine Cable	11·673	3·093
Jordan	Aquaba-Amman Power Line	13·568	3·611
Malawi	Rural Telecommunications	1·000	0·217
Malaysia	Sungei Ahning Dam	9·000	2·349
Sri Lanka	Colombo Airport	20·940	5·264
Indonesia	Jabotabek Feasibility Study	0·960	0·960
Malaysia	Ulu Jelai Hydro Feasibility Study	1·850	1·850
Paraguay	Asuncion Sewerage Consultancy	1·020	1·020
Thailand	Mini Hydros: pilot plants	1·500	1·500
1985
Caribbean	BAe 748 aircraft for LIAT	10·336	3·838
Indonesia	Buket Assam Rail Bridges	0·750	0·226
Indonesia	Offshore Supply Vessels	2·156	0·571
Kenya	Sugar Milling Equipment	0·891	0·230
Indonesia	Isolated Diesels	38·400	12·515
Egypt	Maghara Coal Mine	50·035	12·578
Egypt	NW Coast Electrification Abu Qir	0·825	0·825
1986
Mauritius	Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam Airport	18·960	6·311
Indonesia	Coal fired Power Station	0·800	0·800

In addition, a number of small technical co-operation projects of less than £0·5 million have been agreed. ATP offers made on a substantial number of further projects have not resulted in agreements with the recipient Governments.

ENERGY

Coal Mining Subsidence

12. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate when he proposes to make a statement on the Waddilove report on compensation for coal mining subsidence.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government response to the Waddilove report will be published as soon as possible.

Northumberland Coalfield

14. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any discussions recently with British Coal about the future of the Northumberland coalfield.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with the chairman of the NCB covering a wide range of subjects.

Power Stations (Coal Supplies)

15. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on current negotiations between British Coal and the South of Scotland Electricity Board in relation to the future contractual arrangements for coal to be burned in power stations.

Mr. Peter Walker: I welcome the fact that an agreement has been reached.

19. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the new pricing agreement with the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman of the NCB regularly and discuss a wide range of topics including coal prices.

20. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of British energy needs he expects coal to provide in the year 1996.

Mr. David Hunt: British coal will make a major contribution to our energy needs well into the next century.

British Gas

16. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on his Department's preparations for the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 18 June in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannan) in column 537, the director general designate of OFGAS has been appointed and a new draft authorisation published.

The Gas Bill has now started its report stage in another place.

34. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Gas; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) earlier today.

Alternative Energy Authority

17. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to establish an alternative energy authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department of Energy will continue to encourage positively research and development into alternative energy. Our current programmes are far in excess of anything previously achieved.

Coal Imports

18. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent information he has received on coal imports.

Mr. David Hunt: I would refer to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse).

Petrol Prices

21. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on recent changes in the price of petrol.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Following the rise in petrol prices at the beginning of June, pump prices have now begun to move downwards again.

Sizewell Inquiry (Report)

22. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements are being made for the publication of the inspector's report following the Sizewell planning inquiry.

35. Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements he will make for the publication of the report from the inspector at the Sizewell inquiry.

Mr. Peter Walker: The report will be published. I will decide on the publication date when I have received it.

Electricity Generation (Nuclear Reactors)

23. Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of total electricity is produced in the European Community by light water nuclear reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1985 some 27 per cent. of the electricity generated in the Community's 12 member states was produced by light water reactors. This year 35 per cent. of electricity generated in the Community will come from nuclear power stations.

Combined Heat and Power District Heating

24. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress being made by the electricity boards and the Central Electricity Generating Board in implementing their obligations, under the Energy Act 1983, to adopt and support combined heat and power district heating.

Mr. David Hunt: The electricity supply industry is seeking to identify economic CHP projects in line with the provisions of the Energy Act 1983 and its other statutory duties. Since 1983 boards have appraised 19 potential CHP projects of which five CHP/district heating schemes remain under active consideration. They are also involved in a number of CHP schemes which predate the Act; they have, in addition, offered specialist advice on request to potential investors in CHP.

National Coal Board

25. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the National Coal Board to discuss the future of the industry.

27. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the National Coal Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman of the National Coal Board regularly to discuss all aspects of the industry, including its future plans.

Electricity Supply

26. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail the capacity in electricity supply in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB advises me that the declared net capability of its generating stations was 52,726 megawatts sent out at 31 May 1986. The capacity of generating stations in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Gas Levy

28. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the level of the gas levy.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members concerning the gas levy.

Israel (Oil Sales)

29. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review the advice which he provides to British oil producers and suppliers on the sale of oil to Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my noble Friend the then Minister of State for Energy on 8 February 1982, at column 219 of the House of Lords Official Report.

Tidal Power Schemes

30. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those tidal power schemes equal to or larger in size than the larger of the two proposed Severn barriers which have been evaluated by his Department, and the amount of electricity each such scheme is now producing.

Mr. David Hunt: The Severn estuary is potentially the largest tidal resource in the United Kingdom and the second largest in the world. The Severn Tidal Power Group has considered two possible barrages in the estuary.

Large tidal schemes are also possible in the bay of Fundy in Canada, and in other sites around the world. The only substantial scheme in operation, however, is at la Rance in Brittany. This is rated at 240 MW and produces about 0·5 TWh of electricity per year.

Coal Industry

31. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he envisages any expansion in the coal industry in the present financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: The future size of the coal industry will depend on its ability to produce coal at a price the market will bear.

42. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effect of the recent pricing agreement between the National Coal Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board on the level of employment in the coal industry.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the answer given to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 24 June 1986 at column 92.

Oil Prices

32. Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate his Department has made of the impact of the fall in oil prices upon North sea oil developments and jobs.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 6 May at columns 105-6 to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace).

Energy Efficiency Year

33. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the progress of Energy Efficiency Year 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: Energy Efficiency Year continues to make a strong impact. The "Monergy" logo, and the slogan "Get More for Your Monergy" are well established, and over 800 "Monergy" events have already taken place; 3,200 people have attended the seven Monergy breakfasts held so far.

36. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Energy what further measures he proposes to take to encourage energy efficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The year is proving highly successful. Already, over 800 energy efficiency events have been held and the original target of 1,000 events will soon be exceeded. Over 3,200 people have attended the seven Monergy breakfasts held so far. In the industrial and commercial sectors we have identified energy savings worth £500 million. Energy Efficiency Year will be a powerful spingboard from which to launch future initiatives.

During 1987 interest will concentrate on obtaining the greatest possible application of new technologies.

40. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the savings per annum which have been secured so far by industry and commerce through energy efficiency schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Initiatives taken by industry and commerce so far in Energy Efficency Year are currently leading to annual savings of £500 million.

Gas Prices

37. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate his Department has made of the cost to the British Gas Corporation of cutting the price of gas to domestic customers by one penny per therm.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: It would be impracticable to reduce the price of gas to domestic customers and not, at the same time, to other tariff customers. A general tariff reduction of 1p a therm would reduce BGC's revenues by around £120 million in a full year.

Power Stations (Oil Supplies)

38. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give an estimate of the amount of oil used in United Kingdom power stations by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board respectively used about 2·9 million tonnes and 0·7 tonnes of oil in their power stations in 1985-86.

Magnox Reactors

39. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has had made to him about the key bolts holding up the core inside the Magnox reactors and the suggestion that they are suffing from corrosion.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has received one recent letter which, like any such letter, has been conveyed to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

41. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will publish the results of the recent reviews on British Magnox nuclear reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: As I told the House during the debate on nuclear power station safety on 23 May, the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate will publish its conclusions at the end of each review.

Hinkley Point Power Station (Incident)

43. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ensure that the report on the inquiry into the incident at Hinkley Point power station on 6 September 1984, or thereabouts, is published.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The report is an internal management document of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I understand that the chairman will be writing to the hon. Member shortly on this matter.

Fast Reactor

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement regarding the current state of negotiations between the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Electricité de France (EdF) over United Kingdom involvement in the proposed French commercial fast reactor Superhénix; and whether any other United Kingdom organisations for which his Department has responsibility are involved in the negotiations;

(2) whether the Central Electricity Generating Board or any other United Kingdom organisation for which his Department has responsibility has had negotiations with the company Europaische Schnellbrüter-Kernkraftwerksgesellschaft mbH (ESK), registered in Germany, regarding either (a) the costs of designing the commercial fast reactor SNR-2.(EURO-1), (b) guaranteeing any of the development costs and (c) taking a shareholding in the company or in any associated or subsidiary company established to develop SNR-2

Mr. Goodlad: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 16 January 1984, the intergovernmental memorandum of understanding for the joint development of the fast reactor provides for the industry progressively to set up its own general and specific implementing agreements covering particular aspects of the collaboration. One set of agreements would relate to collaboration between utilities, including possible cross-investment in demonstration fast reactors, another to co-operation on their design.

The Central Electricity Generating Board (CEGB) joined the consortium of German, Belgian and Dutch utilities, Schnellbrüter-Kernkraftwerks gmbH (SBK) as a minor shareholder (1·65 per cent.) in 1973. This consortium, which was formed for the construction and operation of the prototype demonstration fast reactor SNR-300 in the Federal Republic of Germany, is a member of the Europaische Schnellbrüter Kernkraftwerk gmbH (ESK) which, with French and Italian utilities, was formed for the construction of the commercial size demonstration fast reactor, SNR-2. SBK is also a small shareholder (16 per cent.) in the commercial size demonstration fast reactor Superphénix-1 in France.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell) on 22 February 1984, a general agreement was signed by the CEGB with Electricité de France in February 1984. This sets out the principles for long-term co-operation between the two utilities, with provision for specific agreements relating to specific projects. No such agreements have yet been signed and the Government have not received any specific proposals for investment by the CEGB in the construction of any new demonstration commercial fast reactor.

The National Nuclear Corporation is involved in design work on future collaborative reactors. Some of this work is funded by the CEGB.

Rutherglen Explosion (Replacement Work)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the costs of replacement work arising from the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive after the Rutherglen explosion.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The British Gas Corporation is responsible for the safe operation of its pipeline network. It is awaiting the outcome of the fatal accident inquiry into the Rutherglen explosion—which began on 23 June—before deciding what action it should take in response to the findings of that inquiry and the report of the Health and Safety Executive.

Magnox Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, whether he will deposit in the Library the current updated safety case for one of the Magnox nuclear power stations now subject to a 20-year safety review.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that this would be impracticable. The cases comprise a very substantial amount of documentation much of which is commercially confidential, and which, where necessary, has been the subject of additional discussion between the licensee and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Coal Imports

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the amount of coal imported and the places of origin for each quarter for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Power Stations (Oilburn)

61. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has for the amount of oilburn in Scottish power stations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am advised by the Scottish electricity boards that the amount of oilburn will depend on the future level of oil prices. I understand that under the recent agreement with the National Coal Board, the bulk of the Scottish boards' fossil fuel requirements will be met by coal.

Small Firms

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many small firms, as defined by the Bolton committee, went out of business during the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date;

(2) how many small firms, as defined by the Bolton committee, were set up in Scotland during the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date;

(3) how many small firms, as defined by the Bolton committee, presently exist in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Comprehensive information on small firms is not available. Information for the period 1980-83 for Scotland and the other regions of the United Kingdom on the stock of firms registered for value added tax and changes in the stock by size of turnover was published in "British Business" on 2 November 1984. Similar information for the United Kingdom for 1984 was published in articles in "British Business" on 23 August and 22 November 1985. Copies of these articles have been placed in the Library.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many small firms in Scotland, falling within the Bolton committee definition, have received regional development grants and other forms of financial assistance from his Department in the last 12 months; and how much money was involved;

(2) how many small firms were given assistance by the Scottish Economic Planning Department and others of his Department in the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date; and how much money was involved.

Mr. Rifkind: During the financial year 1985-86, 64 offers of regional selective assistance were accepted by small firms in Scotland with fewer than 200 employees. The total value of these offers was £4·3 million. In the same period, applications by 1,320 small firms in Scotland for new regional development grants were approved. The total value of these proposals was £36·6 million. Both types of assistance are administered by the Industry Department for Scotland. I regret that information in the form requested is not readily available for other forms of assistance administered by my Department.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small firms were given financial assistance by the Scottish Development Agency in the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date; and how much money was involved.

Mr. Rifkind: In the financial year 1985-86 the Scottish Development Agency offered finance with a total estimated value of around £14 million to firms with fewer than 100 employees. There were about 1,200 such offers, but some firms may have been offered assistance under more than one scheme.

Microelectronics Industry

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were employed in the microelectronics industry in 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure.

Mr. Rifkind: The latest estimates are that 43,800 persons were employed in the electronics industry in Scotland in mid-1985, compared with 41,700 in mid-1979. These estimates are based on information held in the regional data system. Although estimates from that source normally reflect the latest known industrial classification of plants, these estimates are derived from a special exercise in which plants have been given the classification appropriate to each year.

Glasgow, Rutherglen

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost and how many have been created in the Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency since May 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: Comprehensive information on jobs lost and jobs created is not available. There were 3,791 redundancies affecting 10 or more employees notified to the Cambuslang and Rutherglen jobcentres in the period since 1 May 1979; the area covered by these jobcentres is slightly larger than the constituency. In the period 1 May 1979 to 31 May 1986, 550 new jobs and 1,970 safeguarded jobs were associated with offers of regional selective assistance to businesses in the Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency. In the period to 31 May 1986, 190 jobs were associated with offers of new regional development grant. It should be noted that some projects received both types of assistance.

Job Creation (Glasgow)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost and how many have been created in the Glasgow travel-to-work area since May 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: Comprehensive information on jobs lost and jobs created is not available. There were 79,022 redundancies affecting 10 or more employees notified to jobcentres in the Glasgow travel-to-work area since 1 May 1979. In the period 1 May 1979 to 31 May 1986, 17,780 new jobs and 18,180 safeguarded jobs were associated with offers of regional selective assistance made to businesses in the Glasgow travel-to-work area. In the period to 31 May 1986, 9,400 jobs were associated with offers of new regional development grant. It should be noted that some projects received both types of assistance.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advantages to the Scottish economy he envisages from participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Those contracts, gained by Scottish firms and institutions as a result of participation in the strategic defence initiative research programme, will provide an additional boost to the Scottish economy and an enhancement to our national technological base. The contracts will also help to maintain the availability of skilled manpower resources in Scotland to undertake work in other military and civilian-related fields.

Pentland Regional Park

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when a decision on the Pentland regional park public inquiry can be expected.

Mr. Ancram: The position remains as stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), on 12 June 1986 in columns 206-7.

Women Police Surgeons

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, about his letter of 3 June regarding women police surgeons.

Mr. John MacKay: I wrote to the hon. Member today.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ascertain if the opinion of the Scottish universities on the funding proposals made by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council have altered since the University Grants Committee's recent announcement on the grant figures for each university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish universities are free to inform me of their opinions on matters of concern to them at any time. None has indicated any change in the views expressed on the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's proposals since consultations ended at Easter this year.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Appeals

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the percentage of planning appeals which were successful (a) in total and (b) expressed as a percentage of the total number of planning applications in the areas covered by (i) the Test Valley borough council and (ii) the New Forest district council in the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The information, so far as it is available, is as follows:

Planning appeals allowed expressed as a proportion of those decided

	England Per cent.	Test Valley Per cent.	New Forest Per cent.
1979	29	*	*
1980	31	*	*
1981	33	*	*
1982	31	*	*
1983	32	*	*
1984	32	†35	‡26
1985	37	‖42	¶38

* No information on appeals decisions broken down by district councils is available for the years 1979 to 1983.
† 19 appeals allowed.
‡ 23 appeals allowed.
‖ 23 appeals allowed.
¶ 50 appeals allowed.

Planning appeals allowed as a proportion of applications decided.

	Total number of decisions	Number of appeals so far decided	Number of those allowed	Proportion of local authority decisions so far reversed on appeal
England (estimated)				Per cent.
1984	404,000	13,300	4,750	1·2
1985	401,000	9,200	3,700	0·9
Test Valley
1984	1,385	54	14	1·0
1985	1,328	49	24	1·8
New Forest
1984	2,228	124	46	2·1
1985	2,276	84	31	1·4

Notes:
1. No information is available for earlier years.
2. Appeals will often be decided the year after the application to which they relate and the 1985 appeals figures are therefore underestimates.

Planning Permission

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total number of new buildings for which planning permission has been granted in the areas covered by (a) the Test Valley borough council and (b) the New Forest district council in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Tracey: This information is not available within my Department.

Town and Country Planning Act 1947

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for a review of the principles embodied in the Town and Country Planning Act 1947; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: We have no intention of dismantling the planning system, but we wish to simplify it and make it more efficient. We therefore keep the compoments of the town and country planning system established by the 1947 Act under review, and details of our current policy initiatives are set out in chapter 5 of the White paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers"—Cmnd 9794.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the guidance given to his Department's inspectors in relation to planning appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The planning inspectorate is kept well informed of developments in Government policy.

Green Belt

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of occasions in the last 10 years on which planning permission has been granted to allow building on green belt land other than for green belt uses.

Mr. Tracey: This information is not available within the Department. Most planning applications for development in the green belt do not come to the Department and no central record is kept of the decisions of local planning authorities.

Southend Pier

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the resources of his Department's advice and expertise available to the Southend borough council in its attempt to secure the speedy repair of Southend pier following the damage sustained on 30 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend is very concerned about the damage caused to Southend pier, which is a grade II listed structure. Advice and expertise on listed buildings and structures is now the responsibility of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, who acts as the Secretary of State's adviser in these matters. The advice of the commission's staff is available should the Southend-on-Sea borough council need it.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of homeless persons aged under 18 years in Greater London for each year since 1979; and if he will also express these figures as a proportion of the total of homeless persons in Greater London for each of these years.

Sir George Young: This information is not available.

London (Owner-Occupation)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what number of houses in each parliamentary constituency in Greater London is owner-occupied; what proportion this figure represents of the housing stock in each London borough; and what were the equivalent figures in 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested for 1979 and 1986 is not available. Figures on owner-occupation in parliamentary constituencies and local authority areas are available only for households enumerated in censuses. The percentages of these households who were owner-occupiers in the London constituencies and boroughs, respectively, appear in table H of the census 1981 Parliamentary Constituency Monitors, 1983 Boundaries, "Great Britain" and in the county report, Greater London, part 1. The numbers of owner-occupier households enumerated in each of the boroughs are in table 20 of the county report. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Liverpool of the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Thamesmead

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he now expects the ownership of land, property and buildings at Thamesmead to be transferred from the London residuary body to Thamesmead Town Ltd.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 14 April in column 301.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what value has been placed on the various assets to be transferred from the London residuary body to Thamesmead Town Ltd.; and on what basis payment will be made.

Sir George Young: The sale price will be for negotiation between the London residuary body and Thamesmead Town, informed by a valuation prepared by the district valuer.

Commons Legislation

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the report of the Common Land Forum, he intends to introduce new commons legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report of the Common Land Forum contains over 100 recommendations which require careful consideration. I shall make a statement on the Government's legislative intentions in due course.

Travellers' Caravans (London)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the number of travellers' caravans recorded as being present on (a) authorised sites and (b) unauthorised sites in Greater London in the January 1986 voluntary census, indicating in each case the number recorded in the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Tracey: The figures are:

	Caravans on authorised sites	Caravans on unauthorised sites
Greater London	599	638
London borough of Greenwich	100	137

Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) further to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 238, concerning works at Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon, what is the current establishment of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission's own specialist work force;

(2) if he will now put out to tender the remaining work which needs to be undertaken at Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon;

(3) if the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission will take steps to accelerate the completion of restoration of Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, by seeking to contract out the remainder of the work to private contractors; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if, pursuant to the answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 237-38, he will state why the remaining works on Lower Leigh, Churchstow, are scheduled to take until 1990; and if he will indicate separately the implications for the timescale of (a) availability of funds and (b) availability of specialist skills, respectively.

Mr. Tracey: The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission currently employs some 500 craftsmen, labourers and apprentices. Decisions on their deployment among some 400 monuments in the commission's care, the use of private contractors and the priority to be attached to particular repair programmes are all matters for the commission.

Housing Defects Act 1984

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the numbers and types of dwelling so far designated under section 1 of the Housing Defects Act 1984 by each local authority.

Sir George Young: Twenty-two types of prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings designed before 1960 have been designated nationally under the housing defects legislation. These are as follows:

Airey	Schindler and Hawksley SGS
Boot	Stent
Cornish Unit	Stonecrete
Dorran	Tarran
Dyke	Underdown
Gregory	Unity and Butterley
Myton	Waller
Newland	Wates
Orlit	Wessex
Parkinson Frame	Winget
Reema Hollow Panel	Wollaway

Information on the distribution of these types by local authority was obtained in 1983 and I am placing further copies of that material in the Library. My right hon. Friend has also recently designated the Smith house type nationally. We are assembling updated information from local authorities on the numbers of designated houses, including Smith, in both public and private ownership and I shall arrange for this too to be placed in the Library when it is available.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the amount of assistance so far committed by each local authority under section 1 of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Sir George Young: Local authorities in England have so far reported the following expenditure on providing assistance to eligible home owners under the housing defects legislation:

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the number and type of dwellings designated by each local authority under section 12 of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Sir George Young: Local designations under section 559 of the Housing Act 1985—previously section 12 of the Housing Defects Act 1984 — have been made by Dudley borough council (for certain dwellings with steel slag, semi-raft foundations), and by Birmingham city council and Nuneaton and Bedworth borough council (for Smith houses with additional foundation defects). The number of houses potentially covered are as follows:

	Privately owned	Local authority owned
Dudley (steel slag etc.)	17	201
Birmingham*	545	979
Dudley (Smith etc.)*	78	284
Sandwell*	326	760
Nuneaton & Bedworth*	53	145

* The figures given are for all Smith houses in each authority's area. The local designation will apply only to those houses actually suffering the foundation defect.

Deck Access Dwellings

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of deck access dwellings constructed by each local authority; how many have been demolished; and how many are programmed for demolition.

Sir George Young: The information local authorities give the Department about their housing stock does not specifically identify deck access housing.

Bradeley, Stoke on Trent

Mr. Forrester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision following the inquiry into the clearance area proposals for the Bradeley area of Stoke on Trent.

Sir George Young: I expect the decision to be announced in the next three weeks.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report estimates of the total costs, capital and recurrent, of the transfer of the Property Services agency area works office at Newcastle, York and Leeds to a new centre at Leeds and of any offsetting savings.

Sir George Young: An exercise is currently near completion to access the likely costs of the proposed regional reorganisation of PSA. When the details are available, I shall write to the hon. Member about the proposals for north-east region.

Council House Starts (London)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Tottenham of 3 July, he will state for each London borough the estimate of council house starts for 1986-87 supplied as part of those borough's applications for funding under the housing investment programme.

Sir George Young: The London boroughs' estimates, under their proposed programmes, of new building starts in 1986-87 of dwellings to rent for the elderly and disabled and of other dwellings to rent and of dwellings to be built for sale appear in columns B11 A4 (page 5.14) and B11 B4 (page 5.15) and C8 A5 (page 5.11), respectively, of the "1985 HIP2 all item print". A copy is available in the Library.

British Geological Survey

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the reason for the reduction in the level of his Department's funding of the British Geological Survey between 1979-80 and 1985-86.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's level of funding of the British Geological Survey was given in a written answer to the right hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Stewart) on 17 June 1986.

The reduction reflects changing priorities for research expenditure. In addition, the geological investigation of potential for deep disposal of radioactive waste, begun in 1979, was terminated in 1982. Work on disposal of low and intermediate level radioactive waste is now the responsibility of NIREX. The introduction of competitive tendering for part of the Department's requirements for geological and related research has led to a proportion of that work being let to the private sector.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he estimates the effect will be of the present proposals on the co-responsibility levy on (a) those farming over 100 acres and (b) those farming under 100 acres.

Mr. Gummer: The cereals co-responsibility levy which will apply from 1 July will be collected on cereals at the time of first-processing, intervention buying and export to non-Community countries. A producer processing grain on his agricultural holding for use on that holding in animal feed will, however, be exempt from levy. The effect of the levy is thus unrelated to the size of the farm.

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact he anticipates the co-responsibility levy on cereals will have on cereal prices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: The cereals co-responsibility levy will reduce prices received by cereals producers by £3·373—5·38 ecu—a tonne when they sell into intervention, for export to non-Community countries or to a leviable processing outlet.

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who currently benefits from the co-responsibility levy on cereals.

Mr. Gummer: Proceeds from the cereals co-responsibility levy, which applies from the 1986-87 marketing year starting on 1 July, will be used to offset expenditure by the European Community on cereals support measures.

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present position in negotiations on the co-responsibility levy on cereals.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission's implementing rules for the co-responsibility levy have now been determined and will apply from 1 July.

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the new United Kingdom and European structures policy for the fishing industry.

Mr. Gummer: The European Community is now reviewing its policy on the structure of the fishing industry. The process began with a discussion by the Council on 25 June of a paper by the Commission which outlined the progress under the present structural measures, described the main factors affecting policy in this area, including the enlargement of the Community, and suggested very broad guidelines for future policy. The Council's discussion will be followed by the submission of detailed proposals by the Commission for measures to replace those which terminate at the end of this year.

The Government keep the needs of the United Kingdom fishing industry under review and to that end maintain regular contact with the industry. We shall undertake consultations on the Commission's proposals when they emerge in order to take full account of the industry's views in determining our approach to the ensuing negotiations.

Food Stocks

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the current levels of butter stocks in the EEC; and what plans he has to reduce them.

Mr. Gummer: At nearly 1·3 million tonnes, Community butter stocks are unacceptably high. The United Kingdom Government have consistently pressed for a policy of price restraint to bring supply and demand into better balance.

Responsibility for disposing of existing stocks ties with the European Commission, in consultation with member states, and there are currently a number of ideas under discussion.

Mr. Canavan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current amount and value of surplus food stocks in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the entire EEC.

Mr. Gummer: A note setting out the volume of intervention stocks in the United Kingdom and the European Community on the latest available dates is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly. The most recent valuation of stocks in the United Kingdom is £1,367 million. EC stocks are valued once a year and the most recent valuation of Community stocks held on 30 November 1985 is £6,223 million.

European Community (Food Products)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give figures indicating production of butter, alcohol, cereals and potatoes by each European Community member state; and what information he has as to the level of subsidies allocated towards the production of butter by each member state each year since 1981.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested about agricultural production is shown below. The market support arrangements under the common agricultural policy include no direct subsidies allocated towards the production of butter. Producer prices for butter are supported mainly by intervention purchasing and refunds on exports to third countries, both incurring budgetary expenditure and by import levies. Expenditure by the Community in respect of butter cannot fully be separated from other expenditure in the milk sector for every year since 1981. The available information, analysed by member state, is contained in the financial reports on the EAGGF (Guarantee Section) for each year, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

EC Trade Barriers

Mr. Lyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the internal barriers to trade within the European Economic Community affecting those industries and trades for whose interests his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 465]: The main internal barriers known to my Department arising from the national arrangements of one or more EC member states are:

Certain food composition, hygiene, residue and labelling restrictions in cases where agreed EC rules do not yet apply.

Restrictions on imports of minced meat and comminuted meat.

Requirements as regards residues in meat.
Restrictions on imports of certain fish and their ova to protect fish health, and on bees to protect bee health.
Prohibition on the marketing of products containing a mixture of dairy and non-dairy fats.
Discriminatory duties and taxes and similar provisions on imported spirits.
Beer purity laws.
Import deposit arrangements.

The above list excludes trade barriers between Spain and Portugal and the rest of the Community which are being phased out under the terms of the accession treaty. Certain other barriers within the categories referred to in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 10 June also operate on industries and trades in my Department's sector.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Young Persons (Full-time Education)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of implementing a flat rate grant payable to all 16 to 18-year-olds remaining in full-time education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The cost would depend upon the numbers of students involved and the rate of grant payable as well as on counter-balancing savings in child benefit and discretionary payments already made by local education authorities.

The total number of students aged 16 to 18 in full-time education in schools and further education in January 1985 was 636,321. At a rate of, for example, £20 a week, the net cost would therefore be about £402 million. At a rate of £25 a week, the net cost would be about £569 million.

Graduates

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total number of graduates in computer science and information technology in the last financial year and the anticipated number in the current financial year compared with the estimated demand for such graduates by commerce and industry in both these financial years.

Mr. Walden: In 1985 there were some 9,900 graduates from disciplines relevant to information technology from all university courses in the United Kingdom and 2,400 from full-time and sandwich courses in polytechnics and institutes of higher education in England and Wales. A decrease of perhaps 500 is expected in 1986, but increases are expected for each of the three years following.

While it is impossible to forecast future manpower demand on an annual basis with any precision, a recent report by the Institute of Manpower Studies indicated that, of employers surveyed in 1985, most were able to recruit sufficient first degree graduates. It is, however, generally accepted that in future years the employment market will be able to absorb increased numbers of graduates from disciplines related to IT. The Government have initiated a range of measures designed to stimulate relevant graduate output. In particular, the engineering and technology programme, launched in 1985 will eventually produce 5,000 extra places in first degree and masters' courses—mainly from disciplines related to IT.

IT related disciplines refer to electrical and electronic engineering, mathematics, computer science and physics.

Higher Education

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions are involved in postgraduate study; and what were the equivalent figures in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: The information is shown in the table:

Mr. Forman: asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions took up places in higher education directly from school at the age of 18 or 19 years; how many did so via alternative routes such as sandwich courses or mature entry; and what were the equivalent figures in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: The readily available information, shown in the following table, relates to initial entrants aged up to 20 and those aged 21 or more to full-time and sandwich courses in higher education. Information on numbers entering higher education directly from school is not available on a comparable basis.

O-level and CSE Examinations

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give the number of children who have taken O-levels in Hertfordshire; in what subjects; and how many have passed, in the last five years;

(2) if he will give the number of children in Hertfordshire who have undertaken the CSE examination in the last five years, indicating subjects taken and grades passed.

HMI Reports

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate have now been published on individual schools and colleges; and what is the average length of time between inspection and publication of such reports.

Mr. Dunn: Since 1 January 1983 there have been a total of 626 reports published on schools and colleges on the basis of full inspections. There have also been 175 reports published on other educational establishments and surveys of provision. The average time between inspection and publication is nine months. It remains the aim of HMI that reports should be issued to individual institutions within six months of an inspection. They are working to achieve that time-scale. However, no institution or governing body has to wait that long to know the findings of the inspections as HMI discuss these and other matters with the head and staff during and at the end of each inspection and with the governing bodies shortly after.

Workers Educational Association

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the level of grant provided by his Department to the Workers Educational Association in cash terms and constant 1985-86 prices for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Cash £	At constant 1985-86 prices £
1979-80	1,195,528	1,928,661
1980-81	1,485,443	2,017,697
1981-82	1,831,615	2,262,073
1983-84	2,352,289	2,465,560
1984-85	2,477,799	2,626,839
1985-86	2,631,015	—

Note: Cash figures adjusted for general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices.

Sex Education

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department gives to local education authorities about the qualifications of those who should teach sex education in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: None. It is for the local education authorities and the schools themselves to ensure that teachers who contribute to programmes of sex education have appropriate professional and personal skills. The HMI discussion document "Health Education From 5 to 16" offers guidance on teaching approaches in this field.

Dyslexia

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of dyslexic children and adults, respectively; and what is his policy towards reducing the incidence of dyslexia.

Mr. Dunn: The Education Act 1981 seeks to avoid categorising children and the specific information requested is not available. The Act places a duty on local education authorities to assess a child's special educational needs and to ensure those needs are met. This includes children with dyslexia.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current membership of the Science and Engineering Research Council; if he will indicate where each member's first and subsequent degrees were obtained, and their present employment; and if he will make a statement on the method by which the Science and Engineering Research Council membership is established.

Mr. Walden: The following table shows the present members of the Science and Engineering Research Council, the institutions of their first — and, where appropriate, second — degrees, and their present employments.

Members are appointed by my right hon. Friend in accordance with the relevant provisions of article 4 of the council's royal charter.

Members of Council	Present Employment	Institution where first and subsequent degrees obtained
Professor E. W. J. Mitchell CBE FRS	Chairman	Sheffield (BSc MSc) Bristol (PhD)
Professor Sir Michael Atiyah FRS	Mathematics Institute, Oxford University	Cambridge (MA PhD)
Professor B. L. Clarkson	Principal, University College of Swansea	Leeds (BSc PhD DSc)
Professor A. H. Cook FRS	The Master, Selwyn College, Cambridge University	Cambridge (MA PhD ScD)
Professor D. E. N. Davies FEng FRS CBE	Department of Electrical and Electronic Engineering University College London	Birmingham (MSc PhD DSc)
Professor B. E. F. Fender CMG	Vice-Chancellor, Keele University	London (BSc PhD) Oxford (MA)
Mr. G. R. Hall CBE FEng	Director, Brighton Polytechnic	Manchester (BSc)
Professor C. Hilsum FEng FRS	Director of Research, GEC Research Laboratories	London (BSc PhD)
Dr. M. W. Holdgate CB	Director General of Research Department of Environment	Cambridge (BA MA PhD)
Professor M. A. Jeeves	Psychology Department St. Andrews University	Cambridge (MA PhD)
Dr. C. Jordan	Department of Theoretical Physics, Oxford University	London (BSc PhD)
Professor R. O. C. Norman FRS	Chief Scientific Adviser, Ministry of Defence	Oxford (MA DSc)
Professor D. H. Perkins FRS	Professor of Elementary Particle Physics Nuclear Physics Laboratory Oxford University	London (BSc PhD) Sheffield (DSc)
Dr. C. H. Reece	Director of Research and Technology, Imperial Chemical Industries	Leeds (BSc PhD)
Mr. O. Raith FEng	Chief Engineer and Scientist Department of Trade and Industry	Cambridge (MA)
Mr. D. T. Shore OBE FEng	Technical Director APV Holdings PLC	London (BSc(Eng) MSc (Eng))
Professor J. J. Turner	Department of Chemistry, Nottingham University	Cambridge (MA PhD)
Professor R. Wilson CBE FRS	Perren Professor of Astronomy Department of Physics and Astronomy University College London	Newcastle (BSc) Edinburgh (PhD)

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the benefits to United Kingdom scientific research of participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Walden: The strategic defence initiative research programme, together with a number of domestic and European schemes, offer United Kingdom university, polytechnic and industrial researchers the opportunity to seek to participate in work in a range of fields that are at the forefront of engineering and advanced technology.

Kidsgrove Primary School

Mr. Forrester asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to give approval for the building of the Kidsgrove replacement C.E. (A) primary school.

Mr. Dunn: A decision on the proposals affecting Church of England primary schools in Kidsgrove, which were published jointly by Staffordshire local education authority and the governors of Wade Memorial CE (Aided) infants' school, has been delayed pending the outcome of inquiries into legal difficulties arising from the proposed site arrangements. Subject to the satisfactory resolution of these matters, I hope that it will be possible to reach a decision quickly.

Liverpool University (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what subjects were discussed during the visit of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) to Liverpool university on Monday 30 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I regret that this visit had to be postponed because of other ministerial business. It is being rearranged for early in the autumn term.

Speech Therapy Training

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to how many applications were received by training institutions for speech therapy training in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each of the last five years;

(2) how many places are available for speech therapy training; what were the figures for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The information sought by the hon. Member is not available. To enter the profession of speech therapist, it is necessary to become a Licentiate of the College of Speech Therapists, and for this purpose to have followed a three-four year degree course of relevant study approved for the purpose by the college. These courses, provided at institutions of higher education, are not, however, designed exclusively for intending speech therapists. The Department does not collect statistics of applications received by institutions of higher education.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the disposal by local education authorities of school playing fields; what information he has as to the total acreage sold, and sums raised, in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Provided the requirements of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 (SI 909) are met, local education authorities are free to dispose of surplus playing fields if they wish. In my Department's circular 2/81 "Falling Rolls and Surplus Places", LEAs were urged to review their plans for school provision, identifying which buildings and land should be retained and which were surplus. An authority which sells surplus assets has the benefit of capital receipts as well as of revenue savings resulting from reduced maintenance costs. In this way it can add to its resources for priority needs. Information as to the total acreage of land sold, and sums raised, is not collected by the Department.

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department collects on the number of school playing fields that have been sold for building development since the issue of his Development's circular 909 in 1982.

Mr. Dunn: None.

Universities (Revenue)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list what information the University Grants Committee has on the surplus or deficit of revenue for universities in the United Kingdom for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to tables 3 and 6 of volume three of "University Statistics 1983-84", a copy of which is in the Library, which give full details of univerities' income and expenditure in that year.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average grant paid to a mature student in full-time higher education for the last year for which a figure is available.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 1986]: The final sentence was omitted from the answer.

The mandatory awards regulations do not define a mature student. However, from their mid-twenties, students may, in addition to a full grant, receive certain supplementary allowances including an older students allowance and an allowance for dependants. In the academic year 1984-85, the average allowance paid to students in these categories was £530 and £1,355 respectively. This was in addition to a grant — for students not living with their parents — of £2,100 (London rate) £1,775 (elsewhere rate). Subject to the approval of Parliament, we propose to increase the older students allowance from this autumn by an average factor of about 10 per cent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Castington Youth Custody Centre

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the 1986-87 overtime budget for the Castington youth custody centre has been set at £511,008 rather than at the figure of £515,612 given in his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 7.

Mr. Mellor: The overtime budget finally allocated to Castington for 1986-87 is £498,999. I regret the error made in my earlier reply. My noble Friend is writing to the hon. Member explaining the difference between the above allocation and the figures of £515,612 given earlier and that of £511,008 he has quoted.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give further details of the reasons for the consent given to the loss of the pump appliance and firefighter crews from L21 East Ham fire station by his Department; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services' assessment of fire cover presently available in that fire station's ground.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is presumed that this refers to the approved reduction in 1979 to accommodate the new 42-hour working week for the fire service. Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services has had no reason then or since to judge that the reduction was detrimental to the standards of fire cover.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list every fire station in the London fire brigade that has been closed since 1965, the appliance deployment and firefighter staffing at each station immediately prior to closure, and give details of the fire stations, fire appliances and firefighter staffing that presently cover the former station ground of each such fire station; and what were the reasons for closure in each case.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is understood that the Camden Town, Pageants Wharf and West Wickham fire stations have been permanently closed without replacement since 1965, and their fire cover responsibilities absorbed elsewhere. The other information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. If, however, the hon. Member has any particular points, my noble Friend should be glad to try to deal with them in correspondence.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy towards proposals included in the 1987-88 London fire and civil defence authority establishment scheme for the London fire brigade regarding the loss of the pump ladder appliance or the emergency rescue tender appliance presently based at L21 East Ham fire station and for reduction in the present establishment of station officers, sub-officers, leading firemen and firefighters, respectively;

(2) if he will give details of his assessment of the establishment of firefighters, fire appliances (pump, pump ladder, and specialist), and fire stations required by the London fire brigade to provide an effective, efficient and economic service during the financial year 1987-88 commencing 1 April 1987.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has received no proposals from the London fire and civil defence authority in respect of the establishment scheme for the London Fire Brigade for 1987-88. Such a scheme does not have to be submitted until January 1987 and when received it will be carefully considered on its merits.

Central London (Road Closures)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for a report of the circumstances which obliged the traffic police to close Chelsea embankment, Grosvenor road, Nine Elms lane and other adjacent public roads during the afternoon of Saturday 28 June.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the commissioner that these streets were closed in order to assist in the policing of a march organised by the Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Soliciting

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of girls under the age of 18 years who have appeared before magistrates' courts during the last seven years following alleged offences of soliciting.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information relates to female offenders aged under 17 and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 1" — under offence classification 166 in tables 1.1(B) and 1.1(C).

Metropolitan Police Instruction Book

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the Metropolitan police instruction book or parts thereof is a classified document;

(2) whether the provisions of chapter 10, paragraph 12F ('Use of truncheons') of the Metropolitan police instruction book are advisory or mandatory;

(3) whether the provisions of the Metropolitan police instruction book chapter 4, paragraph 40 ('Instruction Book') are advisory or mandatory;

(4) whether the instructions given in the Metropolitan police instruction book are advisory or mandatory to police officers;

(5) whether the provisions of chapter 6 of the Metropolitan police instruction book for the reporting of occurrences are advisory or mandatory in particular with regard to report book rules: chapter 6, paragraph 2: no erasure or obliteration of notes or reports is permissible at any time; chapter 6, paragraph 3: leaves must not be torn out for any purpose; chapter 6, paragraph 4: no blank spaces will be left; chapter 6, paragraph 5: overwriting is forbidden; chapter 6, paragraph 6: there must be no writing between lines; chapter 6, paragraph 7: all statements must be written down in the exact words used by speakers; chapter 6, paragraph 8(1) and (2): recording of time, places and names; chapter 6, paragraph 9: notes — where to be made; chapter 6, paragraph 10: production of entries to a senior officer; chapter 6, paragraph 11: use in evidence; chapter 6, paragraph 12: production at court; chapter 6, paragraph 13: recording of telephone numbers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The instruction book is marked "restricted" and "for police use only". An edited version, revised to exclude material which the commissioner considered it would be operationally damaging to disclose, was placed in the Library on 24 February 1983.

Some provisions of the book are directions, breaches of which may make an officer liable to disciplinary proceedings, and other parts are guidance. Chapter 4 (paragraph 40) and chapter 6 (paragraphs 2-12) are directions; chapter 6 (paragraph 13) is guidance; and chapter 10 (paragraph 12F) contains both directions and guidance.

Dr. Skuse

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 26 June, Official Report, column 279, if he will say whether, during his Department's review of cases in which Dr. Skuse gave evidence, anything emerged to suggest that Dr. Skuse's evidence was not reliable.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Public Order

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences under public order legislation took place in the Metropolitan police area in 1985; and how many persons were convicted of such offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information that is available on offences recorded by the police relates to offences of riot, unlawful assembly, causing an affray, and placing or despatching articles to cause a bomb hoax, most of which are offences under common law. A total of 638 such offences were recorded by the Metropolitan police in 1985. The number of convictions in 1985 is not yet available.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 368, he will update to the latest date for which figures are available the figures on the cost of police action at Wapping, the number of officers deployed and the police man hours spent.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all representations received by his office since June 1979 regarding any of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mellor: Since June 1979 we have received representations expressing concern about the convictions of the six men or seeking a review of the case, from the Government of the Republic of Ireland; the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Archbishops of Westminster and Armagh; the Bishops of Down and Connor; and of Derry; the Irish Commission for Prisoners Overseas; the Irish Chaplaincy Scheme in Britain; the Council of Irish County Associations; the Irish Episcopal Commission for Emigrants; the Irish American Unity Conference of Texas, USA; Pax Christi; Birmingham's Women's Aid; and Action des Chretiens pour l'Abolition de la Torture (Paris).

In addition, we have received letters from some 40 right hon. and hon. Members, some of whom forwarded letters from their constituents: two noble Lords, members of the prisoners' families and about 35 members of the public.

Prince of Wales (Wedding)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost to the Metropolitan police of policing the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, including the provision of barriers;

(2) how many members of the Metropolitan police were engaged in duties connected with the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that some 7,530 Metropolitan police officers were deployed on the day of the wedding in duties connected with the event and the total additional cost to the Metropolitan police was £587,141.

Prison Population (Supervised Release Scheme)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to introduce a supervised release scheme in the light of the rise in the prison population in recent years.

Mr. Mellor: We have no such plans at present.

Drug Dependency and Alcoholism

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons suffering from (a) drug dependency, and (b) alcoholism were sent to prison in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(2) how many prisoners suffering from (a) drug dependency or (b) alcoholism were treated in (i) prison or (ii) medical establishments in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(3) how many prisoners suffering from (a) drug dependency or (b) alcoholism were refused treatment by a medical establishment in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: In the period 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985* a total of 3,737 inmates were reported by prison medical officers as having some degree of dependence on drugs at the time of their reception into custody. The corresponding information for the four preceding calendar years is as follows:

	Number
1980	1,003
1981	1,558
1982	1,666
1983	1,827

The other information requested is not statistically recorded.

*In this period the Prison Department was in the process of changing from an arrangement under which medical statistics were kept on a calendar year basis to one under which they are now kept on a financial year basis. Statistics for the financial year 1985-86 will be published in the report on the work of the Prison Department for that year.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons entered prison for fine default in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(2) how many fine defaulters were given sentences of (a) one to three months, (b) three to six months and (c) six months to one year, in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in Prison Statistics England and Wales (Table 7.3 of the latest Issue, Cmnd. 9622, for 1984). Information for 1985 will be published later in the year.

Day Fine System

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has received any representations seeking the introduction of the day fine system as operated in several European countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the growth in the number of people imprisoned for fine default.

Mr. Mellor: The number of people imprisoned for fine default has been declining for several years. In 1985, nearly 20,300 fine defaulters were received into Prison Department establishments, compared with the peak figure of 24,500 defaulters in 1982. My right hon. Friend is considering whether a system of day fines, which has been advocated by a number of organisations, most recently the parliamentary all-party penal affairs group, would lead to a further reduction in the number of those imprisoned in default.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison workshops there were in each year from 1980 to 1985; and how many there are at the present time.

Mr. Mellor: The following numbers of industrial workshops were in operation in prison establishments in England and Wales:

	Number
1982	305
1983	310
1984	306
1985	306
1986*	295

* Up to June

Comparable figures for 1980 and 1981 are not available.

Prisoners (Training and Education)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many courses were available for the training and education of prisoners in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Mellor: The available information on education and vocational training courses relates to full-time courses in prisons and youth custody centres — prisons and borstals in the academic years 1981-82 and 1982-83—in England and Wales and is as follows:

Academic year	Total Number of courses available
1981-82	145
1982-83	213
1983-84	254
1985-86	442

Corresponding information relating to full-time courses in detention centres and remand centres, and to part-time courses, is not collated centrally. Details are not readily available for the academic year 1980-81.

In addition, the number of construction industry training courses provided in prison service establishments is as follows:

	Total Number of courses available
1980	161
1981	156
1982	158
1983	156
1984	160
1985	170
1986	170

Bail Hostels

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels there were in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Mellor: Approved hostels are categorised variously as bail, probation, and combined probation and bail hostels. All now take people on bail or for bail assessment. The information requested for the three categories is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Bail	14	13	15	16	17	17	16
Probation	66	64	66	67	69	69	69
Probation/bail	12	14	15	15	15	16	17
Totals	92	91	96	98	101	102	102

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were accommodated in bail hostels in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested. During the years in question, bail, probation, and combined probation and bail hostels provided the following numbers of places:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Bail	172	164	198	207	241	242
Probation	1,134	1,132	1,183	1,209	1,260	1,267
Probation/bail	223	263	282	290	290	309
Totals	1,529	1,559	1,663	1,706	1,791	1,818

Average occupancy rates for all three categories of hostels were:

	Per cent.
1980	*
1981	76·7
1982	77·3
1983	77·0
1984	74·0
1985	76·4

* 1981 is the first year for which this information is available.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels are being planned at present.

Mr. Mellor: Not only bail hostels, but combined probation and bail hostels and also all probation hostels made places available for persons on bail. In England and Wales there are in all 102 such hostels providing over 1,800 places. No new hostels are planned at present. In 1985 average occupancy was only 76·4 per cent. of the approved number of places, so there is no general shortage of places; nor does the Home Office have evidence of serious difficulties in finding places locally.

Diplomats (Breathalysers)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many diplomats have been breathalysed in each of the past five years and to date; and, of these, how many were found to be positive.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not collected centrally on the occupation or status of those required to provide a sample for a screening breath test. An accredited diplomat, because of his inviolability under article 29 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, cannot be required to provide such a sample. Diplomats may, however, be breath tested before their entitlement to immunity is known, or at their own request to demonstrate that they are capable of driving safely.

Lynne Marsland

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at what time Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, went into labour;

(2) under what conditions Lynne Marsland, a prisoner at Her Majesty's prison Holloway, was kept after the onset of labour; and who else was present in her cell, and for how long;

(3) who decided that Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, had commenced labour; and what was their qualification to do so;

(4) how long after the commencement of labour Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, was transferred to Whittington hospital;

(5) if the full complement of staff was on duty at Her Majesty's prison Holloway over the weekend of 28-29 June;

(6) what are the prison rules, procedures and practices relating to the treatment of a prisoner going into labour;

(7) how many times, and when, Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, was seen by (a) a doctor and (b) a midwife from 23 June until the onset of labour was diagnosed;

(8) what was the cause of death of the infant born to Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, on 29 June;

(9) if he will set up an inquiry into the circumstances leading up to the death of the infant born to Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, on 29 June;

(10) if he will make a statement about the death of the infant born to Lynne Marsland, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Holloway, on 28 June.

Mr. Mellor: Ms. Marsland has been located since 22 April in the mother and baby unit at Holloway prison, on which a state registered midwife is always present. She was examined by a member of the prison's medical staff, a qualified obstretician and gynaecologist, on 26 June, and by the consultant gynaecologist who supervises ante-natal cases at Holloway on 25 June. Over the weekend 28-29 June there was a full complement of nursing staff on the unit. Labour is not considered to have commenced until about 5 pm on Sunday 29 June, when Ms. Marsland was examined by a state registered midwife in a single room in the unit where she had been placed for close observation. It is the normal practice to transfer mothers before delivery to an outside hospital, in accordance with prison standing orders 13 107, which set out the rules, procedures and practices relating to the treatment of prisoners going into labour and provide that, at the appropriate time, the medical officer will arrange removal to a hospital. At 5.20 pm an ambulance was called to transfer Ms. Marsland to an outside hospital: she left Holloway in the company of a nurse and two officers at 5.40 pm. Later that evening she gave birth to a baby who died shortly after delivery.

I am informed that arrangements have been made for a post mortem examination to take place on 7 July. We have no present plans to institute an inquiry.

Libyan Students

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to permit Libyan students who have not been involved in political activities to complete their courses before leaving the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Provided that they and their course of study are acceptable, Libyan students are given leave to enter or remain if they meet the requirements of the immigration rules.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change in real terms between 1979 and 1986 in (a) the cost of a firearms certificate, (b) the revenue derived from firearms certificates and (c) the cost of administering the firearms certificate system; how many certificates were issued in 1979 and in the last period of 12 months for which figures are available, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Bail (Refusal)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were refused bail as they were without a permanent residence in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the daily average throughout the year of fishing vessels working in the 200 mile exclusion zone around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: For the period May 1985 to April 1986 we estimate that a daily average of 57 fishing vessels, including trawlers, squid jiggers and reefers, were present in the Falkland Islands protection zone.

British Overseas Citizens

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the numbers of British overseas citizens broken down by country of residence.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 16 May in column 575. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of British overseas citizens by country of residence.

Senor Juan Eduardo Fleming

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request the Government of Argentina to recall Senor Juan Eduardo Fleming, head of the Argentinian interests section at the Brazilian embassy, following the M25 motoring incident, for failing to observe the standard of behaviour required.

Mr. Eggar: No decision will be taken until we receive the police reports on the incident. We expect them shortly. The White Paper on deplomatic privileges and immunities made clear that stricter standards would be applied on breaches of the criminal law by diplomats. We normally request the withdrawal of a diplomat who has committed a second drink-driving offence, or the first if aggravated by violence, injury to a third party or previous traffic offences.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the exact status of Senor Juan Fleming and the other three Argentinian nationals working in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: They are notified to us as members of the Argentine interests section of the Brazilian embassy. Senor Fleming is a counsellor; the other three are first secretaries.

Council of Foreign Ministers (Chairmanship)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his priorities during his term of office as Chairman of the European Community Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Miss Maynard) on 5 March in column 176.

Diplomats (Drink-Driving Offences)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will now arrange for diplomatic immunity to be removed from Senor Juan Fleming; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why it is his normal policy not to request withdrawal of a diplomat on the basis of drink-driving offences until a second such offence has been committed; what action is taken following a first offence; and how many cases of (i) first and (ii) second offences have been recorded in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) on what authority diplomats are not proceeded against in their first drink-driving offence in cases where diplomatic immunity is waived.

Mr. Eggar: The White Paper on diplomatic privileges and immunities, Cmnd. 9497, made clear that our objective is to achieve a better standard of behaviour and a reduction in the number of offences for which immunity can be claimed. In each case the strength of available evidence, normally from detailed police reports, and other relevant factors are taken into account. Article 31 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, which is scheduled as United Kingdom law by virtue of the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964, provides that a diplomat shall enjoy immunity from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving state. A person entitled to diplomatic immunity cannot be forced, under article 29 of the Vienna Convention, to undergo a breath test or other medical examination. A decision is therefore taken on whether or not to request a waiver of immunity in order that the case may be tried. Waivers can be granted only by the sending state. In drink-driving cases, a waiver even if granted would come too late to allow the necessary medical evidence for conviction to be obtained. We therefore do not request a waiver in drink-driving cases. Our policy is to request the withdrawal of diplomats after the first drink-driving offence if aggravated by violence, injury to a third party, or previous traffic offences.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office draws the attention of the head of mission to the details of a first offence. He is asked to warn the offender that a repetition will lead to a removal, and to inform us that he has done so. The figures requested on drink-driving offences are as follows:

Alleged drink-driving offences by persons enjoying diplomatic immunity

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986 to date
Total	17	19	30	32	24	10
Of which second offences	*	1	4	2	7	1

*Figures not available.

European Commission Directives

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those European directives in relation to which Her Majesty's Government have (a) requested the European Commission and (b) received permission from the Commission, for delays or derogations in meeting their terms; what were the reasons for these requests and the corresponding articles under which these requests have been made and the dates by which the Government expect to be able to comply with Community legislation in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: Delays or derogations are agreed in the course of negotiations on draft legislation in the Council machinery; they are discussed with the Commission but the power of decision rests with the Council. So far as informal understandings with the Commission in connection with the implementation of that legislation are concerned, this information is not readily available and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

FB111 Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts over the role of the American FB111s in the current intermediate nuclear forces talks in Geneva.

Mr. Renton: We remain in close contact with our allies, notably through the Special Consultative Group, about all issues relating to the INF group at the nuclear and space talks in Geneva.

Namibia

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the involvement of (a) the South West Africa People's Organisation and (b) other organisations in acts of terrorism in Namibia during the last five years; what information he has about the nature and extent of casualties to civilians, police and military personnel; and if, in the light of that information, he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the future status and administration of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have no independent source of information about the responsibility for and extent of such acts of violence in Namibia during this period. We support the early independence of Namibia on the basis of the United Nations plan.

Departmental Administrative Structure

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a breakdown of the administrative structure of his Department and the number of staff employed in each section.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

Diplomatic Wing

Permanent Under-Secretary

Deputy Under-Secretary
Relations with all countries in Europe; European Community (political cooperation); labour matters and coordination of planning: two assistant under-secretaries and 81 other staff.

Deputy Under-Secretary
Trade and economic relations; United Nations; energy, science, space, maritime, aviation and environment matters: two assistant under-secretaries and 144 other staff.

Deputy Under-Secretary
Personnel, finance, communications, office services, overseas estate, protocol, news and information matters; cultural relations; consular, migration and nationality questions; relations with Parliament: five assistant under-secretaries and 2,806 other staff.

Deputy Under-Secretary
Relations with all countries in the Americas, the Caribbean, Australasia and Asia: two assistant under-secretaries and 148 other staff.

Deputy Under-Secretary
Relations with all countries in Africa and the near and middle east; Commonwealth coordination: two assistant under-secretaries and 109 other staff.

Deputy Under-Secretary
Relations with the Republic of Ireland; arms control, disarmament and defence matters; service advisers and attaches; security coordination: one assistant under-secretary and 111 other staff.

Aid Wing

Permanent Secretary

Deputy Secretary
Bilateral, multilateral and functional aid; overseas manpower services; overseas service pensions: five under-secretaries and 929 other staff.

In addition, there are two deputy under-secretary equivalent and two assistant under-secretary equivalent and 138 other specialist staff (legal, research, planning and economic) in the diplomatic wing, and two under-secretaries and 613 other staff (finance, aid policy, establishment and organisation and economic) in the aid wing, who report directly to the relevant Permanent Under-Secretary and Permanent Secretary respectively.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

South Africa (Products)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to his reply of 30 June, Official Report, column 377, on what criteria the decision not to stock currently any South African products in the Refreshment Department was taken.

Mr. Irving: I have been asked to reply.

With the approval of the Catering Sub-Committee, the Refreshment Department's policy is primarily to purchase produce from EEC countries. Storage space is at a premium, and it is therefore difficult for the Department to stock all the selections of food which Members may require.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will indicate, for each product of South African origin which ceased to be stocked by the Refreshment Department during the last 12 months, the difference in price between that product and its replacement from another source.

Mr. Irving: I have been asked to reply.

The only product of South African origin which ceased to be stocked by the Refreshment Department during the last 12 months was pears. It is impossible to give a price comparison between that product and a replacement from another source due to the substantial price fluctuations in the marketplace throughout the seasons.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many hospital in-patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970;

(2) what has been the size of the hospital waiting list in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970;

(3) how many beds there were in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970;

(4) how many hospital out-patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970.

Mr. Whitney: The required information is given in the table:

NHS Hospitals (Linen)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been spent by the National Health Service on provision of linen for National Health Service hospitals each year since 1979; and what estimates of the value of linen has been reported stolen have been made by health authorities each year during the same period.

Mr. Hayhoe: The annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals show total expenditure on bedding and linen as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	32·4
1980-81	38·8
1981-82	42·4
1982-83	44·6
1984-85	47·4

Losses of bedding and linen have been separately identified in the accounts only from 1984-85. In that year losses through theft, fraud, arson or negligence were recorded as £63,335 and those arising from discrepancies and unexplained issues as £552,719. However, the returns for 1984-85 were incomplete and the last figure is therefore an understatement of the real position. Management action has been taken to investigate the reasons for incomplete returns and to ensure full returns for 1985-86.

Neonatal Intensive Care Cots

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many neonatal intensive care cots are available in National Health Service hospitals in each regional health authority; how many babies were admitted to them each year since 1981-82; and what proportion of them were premature.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information she seeks. It is not collected centrally. Although statistics are routinely collected on the availability of cots in special care baby units, there has been no generally agreed definition of intensive care to enable the provision made for this to be recorded separately. Figures will be available when the recommendations of the health services information steering group have been implemented in April 1987.

Hostels

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hostels surveyed by the Social Security Policy Inspectorate in preparing its 1986 report on hostels.

Mr. Major: In preparing its report the Social Security Policy Inspectorate visited 210 hostels to hold interviews with residents receiving supplement benefit and with some members of hostel management. Information given to the inspectorate by particular individuals and organisations in the course of enquiries is treated in strictest confidence and an assurance to this effect is given to all participants. Accordingly, identifying details are not passed to the Department itself and are destroyed by the inspectorate in compliance with the Data Protection Act 1984. I regret therefore the information requested cannot be made available.

Mileage Allowance

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the precise components of the mileage allowance calculations for hospital doctors and dentists, the results of which are to be found in advance letter M.D.5/86.

Mr. Hayhoe: The mileage allowances are based on the schedules of motoring costs published by the Automobile Association each April. I have placed a note explaining the calculations in the Library.

Single Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been made in the current year for single payments in Scotland by 30 June, or the most recent available date, which have still to be processed to their conclusion; and if he will estimate the outstanding amount that is being claimed.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. However, a special count made on 2 July showed single payment claims from 85,848 claimants were then being processed in local offices in Scotland. An estimate of the amount being claimed cannot be made. Information about amounts paid is recorded only after a claim has been determined.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether all justifiable claims for single payments made before the introduction of any new regulations abolishing them will be met in full.

Mr. Newton: Claims for single payments of supplementary benefit are decided by reference to the regulations in force as at the date of claim.

Fair Rents

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why local authority offices have been instructed in a circular from his Department to apply for registration of fair rents only in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Major: No such instruction has been issued by the Department.

Home Helps

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the charges for home helps were in 1984, 1985 and at the present moment for (a) people on benefit and (b) people not on benefit; and what was the total number of people using the service in each category, and in each English county.

Mr. Whitney: Information in the form requested is not available. The latest information about local authorities in England who impose charges for their home help service is set out in columns 223 to 227 of the "Personal Social Services Statistics 1984-85" actuals published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, a copy of which is in the Library. Details of the numbers of people who received home help in a sample week are shown in columns 213 to 220, but no information is available about the numbers of people charged and whether they were in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Cancer (Smear Testing)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to encourage and assist on-site cancer smear testing in industry.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health authorities are responsible for ensuring that cervical screening facilities are available. Cervical smears are taken by general medical practitioners, health and family planning clinics and hospitals. Some health authorities and employers also arrange screening sessions at work places either directly or using the mobile clinics of the Womens National Cancer Control Campaign which receives a substantial grant from the Government. On-site screening can usefully complement the normal National Health Service screening services, provided it concentrates on attracting women who have not already been screened within the recommended interval.

Well Women Clinics

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of well women clinics in Britain; and what steps he is taking to increase their number.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the number of well women clinics is not held centrally. Their provision is a matter for individual health authorities in the light of local needs and priorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that women doctors are always available at well women clinics for those women who prefer them.

Mr. Whitney: The staffing of well women clinics is the responsibility of those health authorities that choose to set up such clinics.

Women Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of all admissions to hospital are women with disorders of their reproductive systems.

Mr. Whitney: In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, an estimated 6·4 per cent. of all in-patient cases discharged from NHS non-psychiatric hospitals in England received treatment for disorders of the female reproductive system.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the proportion of women to men for whom tranquillisers are prescribed.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret the information requested is not available from official statistics.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the number of women who die premature deaths each year from cervical cancer.

Mr. Hayhoe: Actual figures for 1985 are given in the following table:

Number of deaths with underlying cause of malignant neoplasm of cervi uteri (ICD(9) 180) in England and Wales, by age group, 1985

Age group	1985
All ages	1,957
15-34	114
35-54	481
75 and over	430

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in which (a) social group and (b) age group cervical cancer is most prevalent.

Mr. Hayhoe: Statistics from the registration of newly diagnosed cases of cancer are the nearest available data on the prevalence of cancer. In England and Wales for 1982 (the latest available year), the age-group with the highest registration rate per 100,000 women for malignant neoplasm of cervi uteri (ICD(9) 180) is 60-64 years. The social group with the largest age-standardised proportional registration ratio is social class V. However, great care is required in interpreting these PRRs, and full details of the methodology are given in "Cancer statistics: registrations 1982 series MB1 No. 14", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which identifiable groups of women fail to make full use of cervical cancer screening services; and what steps he is taking to seek to persuade them to do so.

Mr. Hayhoe: The principal group of women not making full use of cervical cancer screening is the over-35 age group. Priority is given to the screening of women over 35. I believe that the most effective way of persuading these women to attend for a smear is a personal approach by their general medical practitioners. The computerised call and recall systems now being introduced will help identify women due for screening so that they can be sent a personal invitation. The Government are supporting research into the reasons why women do not attend for screening, and into ways of encouraging women to attend.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the potential reduction in mortality that could result if all women between 20 and 65 years of age were screened at intervals of (a) five, (b) three and (c) one year.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am advised that no estimate with a worthwhile degree of accuracy has yet been made on the effects of different screening intervals.

Any estimate depends critically upon the assumptions made on such matters as the incidence of the disease in the absence of screening; the natural history of the disease, and on the effectiveness of screening. All of these are difficult to quantify.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new steps he has taken to make women more aware of the facts of cervical cancer.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department has given the Womens' National Cancer Control Campaign grants for producing health education literature and a video film on cervical smear tests, which are now available, and to carry out pilot projects to see how local health education campaigns can increase attendance for cervical cancer screening. The Health Education Council has been asked to consider further ways of informing women about the value of regular smear tests, in addition to leaflets they already provide.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any evidence connecting sexual transmission of a virus by men working in certain industries and cervical cancer.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am aware of no such evidence.

Body Positive

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what contact his Department has had with the Body Positive organisation; and if he has considered allocating it any finances to enable it to increase its level of counselling services to acquired immune defficiency syndrome sufferers.

Mr. Hayhoe: Officials from my Department's AIDS unit have contact with representatives of Body Positive on a regular basis. In the last two weeks my Department has received a request for financial assistance to meet the cost of a counselling video film being developed by Body Positive in conjunction with St. Mary's hospital, Paddington which is being considered.

Health Authorities (Employment)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of health authorities which employ staff through employment agencies; how many staff are employed by each authority in this way; and what are the total annual fees paid by each authority to such agencies in each year.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that details of the numbers of staff employed through employment agencies are available only in respect of nursing and midwifery staff. The figures are shown in table 1. Table 2 shows the total expenditure on the employment of non-National Health Service staff (mostly agency staff) in the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85 for each region in England and for the special health authorities of London post-graduate teaching hospitals. It is not possible to distinguish between salary costs and commission fees to employment agencies.

Pharmaceutical Companies

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many non-British pharmaceutical companies have established a research or manufacturing capacity in the United Kingdom in the last five years; and, of this total, how many were Japanese.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not available in the precise form requested. Most major pharmaceutical companies operating in the United Kingdom have been established here for more than five years. Many of them have made significant investments in recent years through replacement of or additions to existing research or manufacturing facilities. Information on the total value of pharmaceutical industry investment in the years 1979-1984 was contained in my reply to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 23 June at column 64. No Japanese pharmaceutical company has invested in research or manufacturing capacity in the United Kingdom.

Pharmaceuticals (Investment)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to encourage inward investment in pharmaceuticals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: One of the purposes of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS) is to ensure that the United Kingdom offers a fair return for pharmaceutical innovation and investment. My right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 19 June at columns 588-89 announced that negotiations for a renewal of the PPRS had been completed and that the industry was being consulted on the outcome. I hope that the revised scheme will provide a period of stability for the industry and renewed confidence to encourage further investment.

Neuro Fibromatosis

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the Government are funding research into neuro fibromatosis; and whether there are plans to increase this funding.

Mr. Whitney: Research in this field is being conducted at the University of London Institute of Orthopaedics at the Royal National orthopaedic hospital. This is in part supported from general university funds.

The Medical Research Council is responsible for biomedical research generally. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Science Vote of the Department of Education and Science. I understand that the Council is not currently funding any specific research into neuro fibromatosis.

Clinical Academic Staff

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the effect on patient services over the past two years of recent losses of clinical academic staff.

Mr. Whitney: The Government's observations on the third report of 1985-86 ("UGC Cuts and Medical Services") of the Select Committee on the Social Services were published by the Committee in February 1986 (HC242). The conclusion was that the changes in UGC funding had not prevented a significant overall increase in the level of provision of National Health Service clinical services. The latest available evidence gives no grounds for suggesting that this assessment should be revised.

Girocheques

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 11 June, Official Report, column 218, on the encashment of girocheques, when he expects to be able to reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, about the constituent's problem, details of which were supplied.

Mr. Major: I replied to the hon. Member today.

London Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to meet representatives of consultants from London teaching hospitals to discuss resource allocation; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend and I plan to meet representatives of the London teaching hospital consultants on 10 July.

Ombudsman (Wythenshawe Estates)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to provide the full information sought by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration regarding the complaint of Mr. Pendleton of Wythenshawe in relation to delays in the designation of several estates in Wythenshawe as hard-to-heat; when such information was first sought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration requested further information in a letter received on 5 June 1986. Officials are currently looking into the matter and I will reply as soon as possible.

Occupational Mortality

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 1 May, Official Report, column 470, if, in the course of preparing the Registrar General's decennial supplement on occupational mortality for the years 1979-80 and 1982-83, there has been a bridge coding exercise on similar lines to that conducted for social class coding of fathers' occupations recorded at birth registration.

Mr. Whitney: No.

Rate Rebates

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he accounts for the change in the number of persons receiving rate rebates in Lambeth from 63,000 as given in his answer of 14 June 1985, Official Report, column 586, to 36,378 as given in his answer of 25 June 1986, Official Report, column 213.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the responsible authority for information about changes in the number of people receiving rate rebates in Lambeth. However I understand that Lambeth's recent case load estimates do not reflect the number of outstanding claims likely to be successful.

Speech Therapists

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many posts there are for speech therapists; and how many of these are vacant at the present time.

Mr. Whitney: Staffing levels are a matter for individual health authorities. At September 1984, the latest date for which centrally collected information is available, it was estimated that there were 2,150 speech therapists in post in England. Information about vacancies is not available but we are not aware of any general shortage.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current provision of speech therapy services in the National Health Service as compared to (a) the National Health Service provision in 1979, (b) the private sector provision, (c) the population's need for speech therapy and (d) the provision in other industrialised countries.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total expenditure by health authorities on management consultants in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collected centrally.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if any of the present issue of BE hearing aids feature compression; if it is his intention to invite tenders for this type of aid in the future; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many tenders were received for his Department's last purchase of BE hearing aids; and if he will break this figure down to show the number from the United Kingdom and the number from each other country;

(3) what was the average unit cost paid on the last delivery to his Department of a hearing aid in the ranges of BE 12, BE 32 and BE 52, respectively.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available centrally. Contracts for the supply of National Health Service hearing aids are the responsibility of Mersey regional health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the regional chairman.

Smoking

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the British delegation voted at the World Health Organisation meeting in Geneva on 14 June on the motion calling on its members to abate the incidence of smoking by the end of the century; what further steps he proposes to implement this decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The United Kingdom voted in favour of the resolution at the World Health Assembly in May and we are seeking to implement a wide range of policies in line with the World Health Organisation's objective to reduce smoking.

Medicines Inspectorate

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the full complement of the Medicines Inspectorate within his Department; and how many staff are currently in post.

Mr. Hayhoe: There are 21 established posts in the Medicines Inspectorate and 17 inspectors currently in post.

NHS (General Managers)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will specify all those changes mentioned in his Department's recent circular, according to the extent of which it it proposed to pay general managers in the National Health Service a bonus.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the provision in personnel memorandum (86)7 which enables discretionary additions to be made to the salaries for general manager posts in order to reflect special local factors. Two kinds of factor are specified: the extent of change to be achieved and the difficulty and complexity of the management task. Examples of these are set out in paragraph 13 of the document, copies of which are in the Library.

Complex Lenses

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of patients entitled to complex lenses at cost price; and, of these, how many have actually received them at this price.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Medical Records (Patients' Rights)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue guidelines ensuring a right of access by patients to their medical records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Consultations are well advanced on the content of an order under section 29(1) of the Data Protection Act 1984 relating to access by individuals to automatically processed data about their health.

Consideration is currently being given to the comments received. An order subject to approval by affirmative resolution will come before the House later this year or early next.

North-Western RHA (Computers)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the computerisation of the integrated personnel systems and patient administration systems in the North-Western regional health authority; on whose initiative this was carried out; what role the regional general manager played in its implementation; and what assessment has been made of its cost-effectiveness and efficiency.

Mr. Whitney: The acquisition of computer systems is a matter for individual health authorities, to whom their general managers are accountable, to decide.

An audit report on North-Western regional health authority which examined a number of issues is now being considered by the Department in the light of formal comments submitted by the authority.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service

62. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of employees in the Civil Service at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 5 June in column 609 to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash).

Financial Management Initiative

63. Mr. Waller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on financial management initiative in Government Departments.

Mr. MacGregor: The financial management initiative emphasised the importance of managing public expenditure to give value for the taxpayer's money. With specific reviews and scrutinies, it is an unprecedented effort to get a better Civil Service. Improvements worth hundreds of millions of pounds a year have already been made with the help of civil servants. Work is continuing in each Department to make these changes more widespread and achieve the further improvements our record shows are to be had from sound financial management.

Mortgages

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the number of new and other mortgages, respectively, eligible for tax relief in the latest year for which figures are available; and how many of the mortgages which were not new were for house purchase and how many were for improvements to existing property.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1985 about 1·3 million eligible mortgages for house purchase were taken out. Just under half of these were taken out by first-time buyers and the remainder by former owner-occupiers. In addition, about 0·9 million loans were taken out for home improvements which also qualified for tax relief. The amounts borrowed for home improvements are typically much smaller than loans for purchase. Although precise estimates are not available, the proportion of tax relief which corresponds to improvement loans is estimated to be between 5 and 10 per cent. of the total cost of relief.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will establish a task force to deal with the problem of unpaid value added tax, capital gains tax and corporation tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The VAT provisions included in the Finance Act 1985, particularly the default surcharge which is to be implemented on 1 October this year, are expected to reduce the arrears of VAT significantly. The Inland Revenue already vigorously pursues unpaid capital gains tax and corporation tax. I see no need for further measures of the kind proposed.

Tax Arrears

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total in tax arrears, at outturn and at real prices, due to his Department in each of the last financial years for which figures are available; and what this represents as a proportion of total tax revenues for each of those years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The last three full years for which figures are available in respect of the main Inland Revenue taxes, excluding capital transfer tax and stamp duty, are the years ending 31 October 1982, 1983 and 1984. The figures below represent tax which is collectable, that is, legally due and payable, and exclude tax which has been assessed but has been held over because it was under appeal:

	Year ended 31 October
	1982	1983	1984
A. Tax collectable but not paid at current prices £bn	2·135	2·659	3·242
Tax collectable at 1982 prices* £bn	2·135	2·523	2·955
B. Total tax collectable at current prices £bn	47·402	53·541	56·456
Total tax collectable at 1982 prices* £m	47·402	50·717	51·478
A as percentage of B	4·5 per cent.	5·0 per cent.	5·7 per cent.

* Revalued to average prices in the year ended October 1982 using the GDP deflator.

For VAT, taking the March figures as an indication of the average arrears at the end of the financial year, the figures are as follows:

	1984	1985	1986
A. Average arrears of VAT at current prices £bn	1·5	1·4	1·3
Average arrears of VAT at 1982 prices* £bn	1·4	1·3	1·1
B. Net VAT revenue (plus arrears) at current prices £bn	16·7	†19·9	20·6
Net VAT revenue (plus arrears) at 1982 prices† £bn	15·6	17·8	17·3
A as percentage of B	9·0 per cent.	7·1 per cent.	6·4 per cent.

All of the average arrears figures and the 1985-86 VAT receipt figures are provisional.

* Revalued to average prices in the year ended October 1982 using the GDP deflator.

† The 1984-85 VAT receipts were boosted by an estimated £1·4 bn attributable to a change in accounting procedures for imports.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of arrears in income tax due from the self-employed in the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that information about income tax arrears of particular classes of taxpayer is not available.

Gay's the Word Bookshop

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise action which led to the prosecution of the Gay's the Word bookshop.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost to his Department in legal fees of the prosecution of the Gay's the Word bookshop.

Mr. Brooke: This information is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise were employed in the overall action against the Gay's the Word bookshop.

Mr. Brooke: At one time or another some 40 staff—including local and headquarters staff and legal advisers—worked on the Gay's the Word case. Most were involved for a very short period, mainly in scrutinising books detained from the bookshop to determine whether or not they were covered by the import prohibition.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether compensation will be paid to Gay's the Word Bookshop for new books soiled in the course of scrutiny by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Customs and Excise will consider any valid claim by Gay's the Word bookshop for compensation for any new book damaged while seized by them.

Monetary Aggregates

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes which have occurred since June 1979 in the definitions of the following monetary aggregates (a) M0, (b) M1, (c) M2, (d) M3, (e) PSL1, (f) PSL2 and (g) sterling M3.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Shipping

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements exist in each member state of the European Economic Community to exempt from tax income derived from shipping companies from the sale of ships; and what conditions have to be met to qualify for such tax exemption.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 411]: The only member state of the European Economic Community to exempt from tax unconditionally proceeds received by shipping companies from the sale of ships is Greece. This is part of the special tax regime for ships sailing under the Greek flag.

The only other Community country where such gains would generally be exempt from tax is Spain which exempts from tax gains from the sale of most tangible fixed assets of a company to the extent that the proceeds are reinvested in the purchase of other such assets: ships are included in this regime. Reinvestment must normally take place in the year of sale or the two following years, but the tax authorities may in some circumstances extend the period to four years. Exemption is also available where a replacement assets has been acquired in the year preceding the sale. Exemption is conditional on the new asset being retained until fully depreciated.

Investment Promotion

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which member states of the European Economic Community have investment promotion arrangements comparable to the business expansion scheme; whether such arrangements apply to investment in ships; and what conditions are imposed in each case, including particularly restrictions on the nationality of the operating company, the ability of the companies concerned to hire in management services, the provenance of the ships, the flags under which they sail, the nationality of their crews and the trades or trading areas in which they operate.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 411]: Only the Republic of Ireland has an investment promotion arrangement similar to the BES. It is restricted to individuals purchasing new shares in manufacturing, data processing and health care companies.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which employers in Northern Ireland have failed to comply with a direction from the Fair Employment Agency under section 13 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976; and whether, in each case, the agency made an application to the county court under section 15 of the Act.

Dr. Boyson: None.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints under section 24 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 of unlawful discrimination the Fair Employment Agency has declined to pursue; and what reasons have been given in each case.

Dr. Boyson: I understand from the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that the agency has declined to pursue 63 complaints under section 24 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act because:

	Number
(1) The complaints were considered frivolous	28
(2) The complaints were outside the time limits	24
(3) The complaints were outside the scope of the legislation	9
(4) The complaint had been considered by another body	1
(5) The complainant failed to provide sufficient information	1

Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Alfred Johnston in Fermanagh on 25 August 1972; and if he will give details;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of William H. Trotter in Fermanagh on 28 August 1972; and if he will give details;

(3) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of William A. McIntyre in South Tyrone on 10 September; and if he will give details;

(4) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Douglas Richmond in South Tyrone on 10 September 1972; and if he will give details;

(5) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Duncan McPhee in South Tyrone on 10 September 1972; and if he will give details;

(6) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Tommy Bullock in Fermanagh on 21 September 1972; and if he will give details;

(7) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Emily Bullock in Fermanagh on 21 September 1972; and if he will give details;

(8) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Robert John Bell in Fermanagh on 22 October 1972; and if he will give details;

(9) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder alleged to have been committed by regular soldiers of Michael Naan in Fermanagh on 24 October 1972; and if he will give details;

(10) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder alleged to have been committed by regular soldiers of Andrew Murray in Fermanagh on 24 October 1972; and if he will give details;

(11) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Joseph Calvin in Fermanagh on 17 November 1972; and if he will give details;

(12) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Robert Keys in Fermanagh on 28 November 1972; and if he will give details;

(13) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder alleged to have been committed by regular soldiers of Louis Leonard in Fermanagh on 15 December 1972; and if he will give details;

(14) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Henry Sandford in South Tyrone on 14 January 1973; and if he will give details;

(15) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Charles Morrison in South Tyrone on 8 February 1973; and if he will give details;

(16) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Michael J. Gay in South Tyrone on 17 March 1973; and if he will give details;

(17) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Andrew Sommerville in South Tyrone on 27 March 1973; and if he will give details;

(18) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Franklin Caddoo in South Tyrone on 10 May 1973; and if he will give details;

(19) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of David Purvis in Fermanagh on 5 June 1973; and if he will give details.

(20) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Terence Herdman in South Tyrone on 5 June 1973; and if he will give details.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as information on these murders has been obtained from the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

I will also write to the hon. Gentleman about any other similar incidents which may have occurred within his constituency if he tables appropriate questions.

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Brian Criddle in South Tyrone on 18 July 1973; and if he will give details;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Francis Mullen in South Tyrone on 5 August 1973; and if he will give details;

(3) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Bernadette Mullen in South Tyrone on 5 August 1973; and if he will give details;

(4) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Ronald Beckett in Fermanagh on 30 August 1973; and if he will give details;

(5) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Patrick Joseph Duffy in Fermanagh on 5 September 1973; and if he will give details;

(6) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Matthew Lilly in Fermanagh on 7 September 1973; and if he will give details;

(7) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Raymond McAdam in Fermanagh on 12 October 1973; and if he will give details;

(8) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Francis McCaughney in South Tyrone on 28 October 1973; and if he will give details;

(9) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Ivan Charleton in South Tyrone on 22 November 1973; and if he will give details;

(10) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Cyril McCaul in South Tyrone on 22 November 1973; and if he will give details;

(11) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Daniel Hughes in South Tyrone on 17 January 1974; and if he will give details;

(12) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Cormac McCabe in South Tyrone on 19 January 1974; and if he will give details;

(13) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of George Saunderson in Fermanaugh on 10 April 1974; and if he will give details;

(14) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Harold Sinnamon in South Tyrone on 11 April 1974; and if he will give details;

(15) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Norman W. McKenzie in Fermanagh on 11 April 1974; and if he will give details;

(16) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of James Murphy in Fermanagh on 21 April 1974; and if he will give details;

(17) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Eva Martin in South Tyrone on 2 May 1974; and if he will give details;

(18) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Gertie Devlin in South Tyrone on 7 May 1974; and if he will give details;

(19) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by Protestants of Jim Devlin in South Tyrone on 7 May 1974; and if he will give details;

(20) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Fred Dick in South Tyrone on 4 June 1974; and if he will give details.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as information on these murders has been obtained from the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

I will also write to the hon. Gentleman about any other similar incidents which may have occurred within his constituency if he tables appropriate questions.

Michael Tighe (Tape)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who currently has the tape recorded from the device in the shed where Michael Tighe was shot dead in Northern Ireland in 1982.

Mr. Tom King: The facts concerning certain events in Northern Ireland in the autumn of 1982 are currently the subject of an inquiry being carried out at the request of the Chief Constable of the RUC.

Lost Working Days

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many days were lost through industrial disputes in the Province in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the last five years and for 10 years previously.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Year	Working days lost
1985	40,681
1984	51,586
1983	79,420
1982	96,900
1981	69,200
1980	49,400
1975	245,700

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were unemployed in the Province at the latest date for which figures are available; what were the equivalent figures for each of the last five years and for 10 years previously; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: At 8 May 1986 there were 124,717 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland. Figures for each of the last five years and for 10 years previously are as follows:

Year	Unemployed claimants at May of each year
1985	120,922
1984	120,597
1983	114,953
1982	105,100
1981	95,900
1976	48,800

Note:
1. Figures prior to 1983 are estimates and rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. Figures over the period are not strictly comparable due to changes in the method of counting.

The Government recognise the seriousness of the unemployment problem in Northern Ireland and continue to give a high priority to employment training and enterprise programmes, details of which were published in Action for Jobs Northern Ireland on 24 June 1986.

Discrimination

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Government intend to release the report of the review of initiatives on employment discrimination and inequality in the Northern Ireland Civil Service announced in his reply to a question on 3 July 1985, Official Report, column 161, and which he announced in a reply on 12 November 1985, Official Report, column 129, would be published early in 1986.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 584]: I hope to publish proposals for discussion as soon as possible. Additionally, the first report of the Northern Ireland Civil Service equal opportunities unit will be published shortly.

THE ARTS

Museums (Insurance)

47. Mr. Barron asked the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to extend the insurance indemnity scheme to provincial museums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Loans to and from provincial museums which are for public benefit are already included within the Government indemnity scheme.

Young People (Musical Performance)

48. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to help young people not in school to participate in musical performance.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council expects all its clients to engage in educational activity, encouraging young people to participate.

The council has budgeted £70,000 for musical education in 1986-87, and the regional arts associations will also be spending considerable sums on this. A substantial proportion will be spent on projects not involving schools.

National Museums and Galleries Act 1964

49. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the operation of the National Museums and Galleries Act 1964.

Mr. Luce: The Act continues to provide an adequate framework for the provision of library and museum services by local authorities.

Musical and Theatrical Companies (Rural Tours)

50. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to promote wider financial backing for rural area tours by musical and theatrical companies.

Mr. Luce: Such support is a matter for the Arts Councils. They already promote tours to many rural areas; and action is in hand to extend these in conjunction with regional arts associations and district and regional councils.

Museums (Charges)

51. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what is the latest information he has about the impact on attendances of museums operating (a) voluntary and (b) compulsory admittance charges.

Mr. Luce: There is no comprehensive information on this subject. Attendances vary from museum to museum due to a number of factors. It is interesting to observe that at independent museums, the majority of which charge for admission, attendances are generally buoyant.

Sadler's Wells Theatre

52. Mr. Hanley asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on Sadler's Wells theatre.

Mr. Luce: I welcome the fact that funding for the theatre has been secured. In addition to support from the Arts Council and the successor authority, which has replaced GLC funding, two companies have come forward with generous sponsorships: Northern Telecom with £50,000 and Digital Equipment Company with £175,000 over two years, to which I have added £25,000 from my business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Public Lending Rights

53. Mr. Watts asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to promote co-operation on public lending rights in the European Community.

Mr. Luce: During the United Kingdom Presidency of the Community consideration will be given to a resolution encouraging the establishment of other national public lending right schemes, with a view to introducing reciprocal arrangements such as already exist between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Free Library Service

54. Mr. Dickens asked the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to the provision of a free library service to the public.

Mr. Luce: No.

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

55. Mr. Waller asked the Minister for the Arts what is the total number of (a) first-time sponsors and (b) existing sponsors registering under the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Mr. Luce: Two hundred and nine first-time sponsors and 199 sponsors have won awards under the scheme in the period October 1984 to April 1986.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil and Public Services Association

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service when he expects to meet the general secretary designate of the Civil and Public Services Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have at present no plans to meet the leaders of the non-industrial Civil Service trade unions.

Civil Servants

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service in what circumstances he collects information on the political adherence of civil servants.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 1986]: With one exception, the Government are not concerned with the political adherence of civil servants. It has been the policy of successive Governments since 1948 that no one may be employed in connection with work the nature of which is vital to the security of the State who:

(a) is, or has recently been, a member of a Communist or Fascist organisation, or of a subversive group, acknowledged as such by the Minister, whose aims are to undermine or overthrow parliamentary democracy in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland by political, industrial or violent means;

(b) is, or has recently been, sympathetic to or associated with members or sympathisers of such organisations or groups, in such a way as to raise reasonable doubts about his reliability;

(c) is susceptible to pressure from such organisations or groups.

DEFENCE

USSR (Backfire Bombers)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the deployment by the Soviet Union of Backfire bombers with long-range cruise missiles.

Mr. Stanley: There is no evidence that long-range (strategic) cruise missiles are currently deployed on the Backfire bomber.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the Soviet Union's production rate of the Backfire bomber and as to whether the Backfire bomber constitutes a strategic intercontinental bomber.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union is assessed to produce the Backfire bomber at a rate of about 30 per year. As to whether the Backfire is a strategic system, I refer the hon. Member to what is said on this point in paragraph 17 of annex A of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986 (Cmnd. 9763-1)."

Vessel Design (S-90)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence against what design criteria as respects purposes and degrees of specialisation for towed array sonar was the evaluation by the marine technology board of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council of the S-90 carried out.

Mr. Lee: No evidence was presented to the marine technology board that the performance of the S90 frigate when operating with towed-sonar had been addressed.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of the nature of the failure of the S-90 to meet the Royal Navy's requirements.

Mr. Lee: As I said on 1 November 1983, at column 333, it was concluded that the proposed design of the S90 was fundamentally unsuited to the key requirements of the type 23 frigate. It lacked sufficient space and did not meet our requirements on speed, endurance, seakeeping, damaged stability and noise.

Management Consultancy

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contacts, with the subject of the assignment, awarded to management consultancy or accounting firms by his Department in 1985, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Lee: Comprehensive records of all contracts placed with management consultancy firms are not available centrally and it would be disproportionately expensive to collect the information. Details are, however, available of the management consultancy work commissioned through the MOD's management studies division, which covers most of the management consultancy assignments proper — as opposed to computer consultancies, project support and similar work.

Civilian Manpower

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what circumstances the Ministry of Defence and the Property Services Agency takes into account when deciding on the redundancy terms to be offered to civilian employees at his Department's bases; and what has been the range of redundancy payment, in terms of years wages, that has been offered to various such employees over the past seven years.

Mr. Lee: Redundancy terms offered to civilian employees in the Ministry of Defence depend upon age and length of service and whether the individual concerned is in a mobile or non-mobile grade. These terms apply throughout the Civil Service.

The maximum redundancy payment made in the last seven years was two years wages and the minimum was one week. I am unable to provide information on Property Services Agency employees as they are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with allies in Europe about the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has had a number of meetings with European colleagues this year, at which a wide variety of subjects of mutual defence interest including strategic defence initiative were discussed. Communiqués of these meetings have been issued, where appropriate, and copies of these have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the benefits to the United Kingdom of participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Lee: There will be a certain level of financial benefit through United States-funded work in the SDI research programme. The principal economic benefit will, however, be indirect through the development of the national technology base both in terms of knowhow and the level of participation and experience of professional personnel. Exploitation of this enhanced potential offers prospects to advance the capabilities and make our industries more competitive in the export field both in defence and civil programmes. A further very real benefit of British participation is that scientists, engineers and other specialists who might otherwise have been tempted to move to the United States to carry out work in the SDI research programme, will remain in the United Kingdom to carry out the work with the resulting benefit that that will bring.

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the benefits to employment in the United Kingdom of participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Lee: At this early stage of British participation in the SDI research programme it is difficult to predict with any certainty the extent of the effect that such participation might have on employment in the United Kingdom. There are, however, encouraging signs indicating that British involvement in the programme will occur on a progressive scale. With that prospect the effect on employment can only be a positive one.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding the proposed privatisation of the Royal Ordnance factories.

Mr. Lee: Since the announcement on 17 June 1986 of the deferment of this summer's flotation, in addition to a small number of letters from MPs, the trades unions and members of the public, several inquiries have been received from industry about Royal Ordnance plc. It would not be appropriate to disclose details at this stage.

Defence Equipment (Sri Lanka)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there has been any change in the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards trade in defence equipment and services with Sri Lanka since the answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) of 14 February 1985, Official Report, column 285; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No.

Prince of Wales (Wedding)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total cost to his Department of providing security and ceremonial services at the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales;

(2) how many members of the armed forces were engaged in duties connected with the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Mallet Blow Exercises

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list in the Official Report the types of aircraft to be used in the third series of Mallet Blow exercises taking place between 4 and 8 August;

(2) whether any new types of aircraft are being used in the third series of Mallet Blow exercises taking place between 4 and 8 August.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

US Nuclear Bombers

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations take place between North Atlantic Treaty Organisation military officials regarding the use of long-range United States nuclear bombers in military and airforce manoeuvres being held in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Trade Unions

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any national officials of trade unions recognised by his Department to whom it is his Department's policy not to disclose information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: This Department has no such policy at the present time. The only information withheld from all trades unions is that which has been designated as classified.

Procurement Contractors (Mergers)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of mergers among major defence procurement contractors for his defence procurement policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence considers each proposed merger on its merits in the light of strategic, value for money and other considerations. Where appropriate, we give evidence to the Office of Fair Trading and Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Virgin Atlantic Challenger

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the operation for Richard Branson's Challenger boat involving the dropping of engine filters and so on from a Nimrod aircraft; and how that cost will be met.

Mr. Freeman: The petrol filters were dropped by an RAF Nimrod in the course of an operational training sortie which had already been planned. RAF equipment used for the drop was recovered and has been returned for re-use. The delivery of the filters involved no extra costs to public funds.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 8 July 1986

ENVIRONMENT

Planning

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the chief planning adviser has yet consulted representatives of small business about the problems they face with the planning system.

Mr. Tracey: It is normal practice for the Department to consult bodies representing small businesses about proposals to modify the planning system which are of relevance to them. By way of example, I refer my hon. Friend to pages 158-159 of "Speeding Planning Appeals: a review of the handling of transferred written representation planning appeals: report of an efficiency scrutiny" (HMSO, May 1986), a copy of which is in the Library. Consultation with representatives of small businesses is not a specific responsibility of the chief planning adviser.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the chief planning inspector last consulted representatives of small businesses about the system of planning appeals under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Mr. Tracey: My Department, including its planning inspectorate, frequently consults bodies representing small businesses about the operation of the planning system, including planning appeals. Representative bodies were, for example, consulted during the course of the efficiency scrutiny of written representation planning appeals last year and the similar review of inquiry planning appeals which was completed recently.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the new chief planning adviser will be expected to devise additional ideas for improvements in the planning system, further to those mentioned in the White Paper on deregulation.

Mr. Tracey: It is the responsibility of the planning land use policy directorate under its director, and minerals division under the director of planning services (the chief planning adviser) to search constantly for, and advise on, improvements to the planning system. The proposals described in "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794) are another step in a process of improvement and simplification which has been under way since 1979. Paragraph 5.31 of the White Paper also invites suggestions for further deregulatory measures which we can consider.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the training for planning inspectors includes a module on development, enterprise and the role of small firms.

Mr. Tracey: Yes, for example, a seminar on the economics of development was held recently for experienced inspectors; the subject is to be included in a forthcoming weekend seminar for inspectors recruited within the last two years; and is being introduced as a standard component in the training of new entrants.

Hedgehogs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to seek to amend schedule 5 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to extend the protection currently afforded to hedgehogs.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have no plans at present to amend schedule 5 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to extend the protection currently afforded to hedgehogs by schedule 6 to the Act. I am advised that the hedgehog is not considered an endangered or declining species.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received in respect of the protection of hedgehogs.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no recent representations in respect of the protection of hedgehogs.

Conservation (Compensation)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has any plans to seek to amend provisions for compensation under legislation concerned with protecting the countryside; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are currently considering the responses to the consultation paper on the compensation provisions in the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 which was issued by the Department on 16 April 1986.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific numerical weightings were applied to each of the critical factors taken into account regarding a proposed dump for low-level nuclear waste when the four sites the subject of the special development order which was laid before Parliament on 14 May were chosen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The choice of sites was for NIREX. The factors influencing its choice, and weightings attributed to those factors, were matters for it. In making its choice NIREX was aware that any proposals for developing a site ultimately put forward would have to meet the Government's criteria for the development of radioactive waste facilities on land. These criteria are set out in a booklet published by HMSO, entitled "Disposal Facilities on Land for Low and Intermediate-Level Radioactive Wastes: Principles for the Protection of the Human Environment". Copies are available in the Library.

Team Events

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been his response to the report published in December 1985 by the Central Council for Physical Recreation on the staging of major team events.

Mr. Tracey: I have received no such report.

Pollution Control

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to have consultations with EEC Ministers about collective action to be taken to enforce more stringent pollution controls.

Mr. Waldegrave: During the United Kingdom's Presidency of the EC we will be highlighting the importance of proper implementation and enforcement of Communitywide measures to reduce or prevent pollution. I intend to consult individually all my European colleagues before we meet at the Environment Council on 24 November.

Elderly People (Housing)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to seek to improve the housing stock used by elderly people; if, in particular, he has any plans to seek to improve insulation in houses occupied or intended for occupation by elderly people; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government attach importance to improvements in the housing stock in contributing to its objective of helping elderly people to remain living in their own homes. Resources available to housing authorities have been increased by £200 million this year; we expect them to give increasing priority to the renovation of their own stock. Local authorities have been asked to give priority when considering applications for discretionary home improvement grants to those most in need, including elderly people. Under the homes insulation scheme grants are also available for the insulation of loft spaces and associated tanks and pipes, with a higher rate of grant available for the elderly on low incomes.

The present requirements of building regulations for energy efficiency in new housing are being reviewed with the aim of combining a higher standard overall with greater flexibility in the ways in which the requirements can be met. There will be full consultation later this year on any proposals for change.

Elderly people form one of the special needs groups to which priority is given when resources are allocated to housing associations for new build or rehabilitation schemes. Associations provide dwellings for the elderly for rent, and also for sale under leasehold schemes for the elderly, some of which are funded wholly or partly through private finance.

Fair Rents

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to increase the number of private dwellings for which fair rent has to be registered.

Sir George Young: In the next Parliament we hope to introduce legislation to encourage private landlords to provide more rented homes. If landlords are to invest in rented accommodation, and maintain it adequately they need a better return than that currently provided by fair rents.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total numbers of listed buildings in each county in each grade.

Mr. Tracey: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly when I have up-to-date figures.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many grade I listed buildings are situated in the cities of Bath and York respectively.

Mr. Tracey: There are 72 grade I listed buildings in Bath and 84 grade I listed buildings in York.

Lead-free Petrol

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to encourage other petrol producers to follow the example of those companies which have introduced, or plan to introduce, lead-free petrol ahead of the statutory dates; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has for a campaign to inform motorists on the use of lead-free petrol; and, in particular, how he intends to publicise which existing models can use it safely.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Carlisle) on 23 June 1986 at columns 3-5. Unleaded petrol started to come on the market shortly thereafter, and the Department is already consulting interested bodies on the information needs of motorists.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Liverpool of the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the visit of the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction to Merseyside.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986]: I visited Merseyside on 2 July 1986.

In the morning I toured the Liverpool south docks and also met the Bishop of Liverpool.

In the afternoon I opened a computer-aided engineering centre on the Wirral, and on returning to Liverpool, saw examples of inner city housing conditions as well as some urban renewal projects in the company of the chief executive of Liverpool city council.

Motor Vehicles (Pollution)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the vehicle industry about any further steps to be taken to introduce computers into motor vehicles, including lorries and buses, in order to reduce pollution levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley : I have been asked to reply.

The Department has frequent discussions with vehicle and component manufacturers to discuss the ways in which developing technologies would help meet emission limits for new vehicles. The new limits for cars provisionally agreed in Europe last year are likely to encourage more sophisticated engine control systems using computers.

THE ARTS

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Jessel asked the Minister for the Arts what further property has been accepted by Her Majesty's Government in satisfaction of capital transfer tax since 31 March; and if he will give details of the individual amounts of tax satisfied in each case.

Mr. Luce: Yes. Two items have been accepted in lieu of capital transfer tax since 31 March. These are as follows:

Property Accepted	Amount of Tax Satisfied £
Portrait by Sir Thomas Lawrence	103,435
Moorlands in Staffordshire	580,500

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Officer Appointments

Mr. Millan asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many applicants were received by the Civil Service Commission in each of the last five years for executive officer appointments; and how many appointments were made in each of these years.

Mr. Luce: The figures below relate to executive officers (and departmental equivalents) in the Home Civil Service and are taken from the Civil Service Commissioners' annual reports for each of the years in question.

	Applications received	Appointments made
1981	23,868	1,378

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Magistrates

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of magistrates who reside in each ward, on a ward-for-ward basis; and what percentage this is of the total magistrates on each bench in the petty sessional districts of Ashton under Lyne, South Tameside and Stockport.

Mr. Tebbit: The figures requested are in the Table.

PRIME MINISTER

La Belle Discotheque (Bombing)

Q73. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what is the character of the evidence other than the firm evidence regarding involvement of Libya in the bombing of La Belle discotheque on 5 April, referred to in her answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 617.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 3 July at column 587.

Overseas Aid

Q93. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to increase the current levels of expenditure in overseas aid in response to the United Nations Special Session on famine in Africa.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the positive outcome of the United Nations Special Session on Africa. We will make ever effort to increase our aid to those countries which can make effective use of it, especially those now carrying out sensible economic policies.

Easenhall

Q116. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Easenhall near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Public Education

Q147. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister whether it is now the Government's policy to put more real resources into public education at all levels as part of their investment plans.

The Prime Minister: The Government's principal aims for all sectors of education remain to raise standards and to secure the best possible return for the resources invested. In schools, the investment we have already made has led to record levels of spending per pupil and to the best ever pupil : teacher ratio; and since 1979 there has been a substantial expansion of higher education. Further spending plans will be published in the next public expenditure White Paper; we shall continue to seek to improve the quality of education at all levels.

Broadcasting (Complaints)

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister how many complaints Ministers, or officials acting on their behalf, have submitted during the past year to the Broadcasting Complaints Commission, the Governors at the British Broadcasting Corporation or the Independent Broadcasting Authority, claiming bias in programmes; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Ministers and Government's Departments, like other individuals and institutions, are free to complain to the broadcasting authorities about their treatment in programmes, but no central record is kept of such exchanges. As far as I am aware no such complaints were made to the Broadcasting Complaints Commission in the past year.

Engagements

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 July.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 July.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will seek to pay an official visit to the European Court of Justice.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 47, concerning fraud investigations, if she will provide such details as she can without hindering possible police action of the two cases where progress has not been made; and if she will state the estimated amount of public money involved for each of the cases referred to in her answer.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

In both cases inquiries are proceeding, but it would not assist the police investigations if details of progress were to be given.

Since all the cases referred to in the Prime Minister's answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 47, are sub-judice, the information requested cannot be given.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. John Fraser asked the Attorney-General what is the time taken in greater London to deal with an application for civil legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The only figures at present available for the length of time taken to deal with legal aid applications are those contained in the Law Society's annual reports, which are national figures based on a sample survey of a number of area offices. The latest available figure is for the financial year 1984-85, when the average time taken to issue a legal aid certificate was 39 working days. The figures for 1985-86 are still being collected. As the Law Society announced in its last annual report (35th Legal Aid Annual Reports, House of Commons Paper 156, published January 1986), improvements are planned in the collection and presentation of these statistics, which should enable a more detailed breakdown to be given in future years. It will be remembered that in appropriate cases emergency certificates may be granted. These are normally processed within a matter of days at most and sometimes even over the telephone.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Visitors (Entry Refusals)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations were made by hon. Members on behalf of passengers refused entry in each month since January 1985.

Mr. Waddington: Before 1 May 1986 figures were not kept on a monthly basis. The figure for May was 647. The figure for June will be available shortly.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in 1985 a visitor refused admission has been removed from the United Kingdom after an hon. Member has placed a stop on behalf of the visitor but before the hon. Member has made representations, or after representations have been made but before the outcome of the representations has been notified to the hon. Member.

Mr. Waddington: The statistics maintained do not identify such cases separately, but six are known to have occurred in 1985.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals by visitors refused entry at ports of entry were (a) lodged, (b) allowed and (c) refused in each quarter since January 1985.

Mr. Waddington: The readily available information relates to appeals by all persons refused entry at ports in the United Kingdom, and is given in the following table:

Visitors (Detentions)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers detained at least overnight in each quarter since January 1985 were held (a) in prison department establishments and (b) in police cells.

Mr. Waddington: Statistics are not maintained in the form requested, and are recorded on an annual basis. In 1985 a total of 582 passengers were detained overnight in prison department establishments, police cells, or other accommodation not managed by the immigration service. The figure may include a small element of double counting in respect of persons transferred between different detention accommodation.

Drug Offenders (Bail)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prevent the granting of bail for those accused of serious drug offences.

Mr. Mellor: The Bail Act 1976 establishes a general presumption in favour of bail. The nature and seriousness of the offence are among the matters to which a court must have regard when considering whether any of the exceptions specified in the Act to that general presumption applies. We have no plans to introduce legislation to prohibit absolutely the grant of bail to a person charged with any particular category of offence.

Prison Places (Costs)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of providing a place in those prisons currently being built.

Mr. Mellor: The average cost per place of the five prisons now being built is £45,994 (excluding staff housing and associated facilities). They include one category B (dispersal) prison, two category B (non-dispersal) prisons and two category C prisons.

Ex-Prisoners (Homelessness)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people released from prison in 1985 had no home to go to.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Custody and Remand (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people serving a custodial sentence, or on remand, in 1985, were registered as disabled.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Firearms, Certificates

Mr. Marland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has increased the cost of renewal of a firearms certificate by 65 per cent.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the explanation I gave during the debate on the Firearms (Variation of Fees) Order 1986 on 25 June, at columns 427-31.

Custody Officers

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the police forces that have so far employed police officers below the rank of sergeant as custody officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Section 36(3) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides that no officer may be appointed a custody officer at a designated police station unless he is of at least the rank of sergeant, but section 36(4) provides that an officer of any rank may perform the functions of a custody officer at a designated police station if a cutsody officer is not readily available to perform them. Section 36(7) provides that the functions of a custody officer shall be performed at a station which is not a designated station by an officer who is not involved in the investigation or, if no such officer is readily available, by the officer who took the arrested person to the station, or by any other officer. In such cases the Act does not prescribe the rank of the custody officer. Information about the identity of the officer, including his rank, performing the functions of the custody officer will be kept in individual cases on the custody record, but this is not collated and is not available centrally.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current establishment of the West Midlands police force; and how many officers were in post at 31 March 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the West Midlands police is 6,684. The strength of the force on the dates mentioned was as follows:

On 31 March	Strength of West Midlands police
1982	6,679
1983	6,673
1984	6,679
1985	6,544

Police Officers (Uncertificated Sick Leave)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of days uncertificated sick leave taken by police officers in each police force area during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is for chief officers of police to monitor the incidence of uncertificated sick leave and no central record is maintained.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to replace the police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police national computer mainframe hardware will have completed 10 years of continuous service by 1988, but final decisions have not yet been taken as to its replacement.

Litter

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to permit the police to issue litter tickets analogous to parking tickets or to levy on-the-spot fines for littering of public places.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce such arrangements.

Foreign Visitors (Overstayers)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overstayers from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan were detected in 1984 and 1985; how many had been recorded on INDECS when they entered the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that this information is not available.

Lynne Marsland

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the pregnancy and confinement of Lynne Marsland on 28-29 June whilst a prisoner in Holloway prison, with particular reference to the type of cell in which she was kept prior to the confinement, the number and grades of relevant staff on duty, and the arrangements for monitoring the progress of her labour.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 7 July.

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the works on new kitchens for Wormwood Scrubs have cost.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 27 June, at column 345.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of home beat officers per police division within the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Inquiry)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what advice Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary gave to the Police Complaints Authority and to the chief constable of Greater Manchester concerning the appointment of Mr. Colin Sampson to investigate alleged disciplinary offences involving the deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester, Mr. John Stalker;

(2) what advice Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary gave to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary concerning the appointment of Mr. Colin Sampson to take over from Mr. John Stalker the conduct of inquiries into allegations concerning the actions of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary;

(3) to what extent Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, when consulted on the appointment of Mr. Colin Sampson to head the respective inquiries into the conduct of Mr. John Stalker, on the one hand, and of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, on the other, considered the implications for Mr. Sampson's ability to conduct expeditiously and effectively the one inquiry of his involvement with the other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In advising those concerned that the chief constable of West Yorkshire should undertake both of these inquiries, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary had regard to the importance of conducting both inquiries efficiently and expeditiously.

Public Order

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a list of housing estates in London for which the Metropolitan police have prepared contingency plans in relation to public disorder; and if he will detail such plans and procedures.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that there are contingency plans for dealing with disorder in a number of areas. It would defeat the object of these plans to publish details of them.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which estates in London have been targeted by (a) the central drugs intelligence unit in the course of drug abuse investigation and (b) the area intelligence and surveillance unit.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that there is no such targeting. The activity of his officers is directed against individuals or groups of individuals whom the police have reason to believe are involved in drugs offences.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cargo Road Trailers (Belgium)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate the subsidy from the Belgian Government payable to exporters of cargo road trailers to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no evidence that the Belgian Government are subsidising exporters of cargo road trailers. However, should such details be forthcoming, my Department will pursue the case with the European Commission, which has powers to investigate state aids granted by EC member states.

Electrical and Electronics Firms

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the degree of concentration of (a) total turnover, (b) research and development expenditure and (c) contracts with Her Majesty's Government, among each of the top 10 electric and electronic firms in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 10]: Available information on the electrical and electronic engineering industries* is as follows:

(a) the 11 largest enterprises, defined in terms of their employment, accounted for nearly 50 per cent. of the total gross output† of these industries in 1983;

(b) the 10 largest enterprises, defined in terms of their research and development expenditure, accounted for nearly 90 per cent. of the total research and development expenditure of these industries in 1981; and

(c) information on contracts with Her Majesty's Government is not available in the form requested.

* Class 34, Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980).

† The minor difference between the definitions of turnover and gross output is unlikely to be significant in this context.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Date Marked Food (Sales)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to ban the sale of food marked with a sell-by date or best-before date which has passed.

Mrs. Fenner: No. Date marking is intended to indicate when the product is at its peak, but it is not necessarily unwholesome after then. It is an offence under the Food Acts to sell or offer for sale food which is unfit for human consumption.

Frozen Food

Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about European Community document 9402/84 on the approximation of laws relating to quick-frozen foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: My officials have kept in close contact with interested organisations during current negotiations on this directive in Brussels. We have received comments at various stages from representatives of the frozen food industry, refrigeration engineers, consumer groups and enforcement authorities.

We still wish to avoid adoption of a directive in a form which would impose unacceptable burdens on industry and we will therefore continue to seek modifications to the proposals to make them more acceptable.

Research and Advisory Services

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 2 July, if he will make a statement on the effect of further cuts of £4·1 million and £2·8 million on the manpower and the operations of the Agriculture and Food Research Council and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, respectively.

Mr. Jopling: The manpower and programmes of these two bodies will reflect the continuing substantial input of public funds and the contribution which the industry is prepared to make towards the cost of work from which it benefits. The Agricultural and Food Research Council is currently assessing the implications of the funding changes which have been announced. In the case of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, it is envisaged that receipts in 1987-88 from levy funded and contracted research and development commissioned directly with ADAS should enable the net reductions in expenditure to be achieved without ADAS post losses.

Cereal Producers

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to include all cereal producers, including integrated cereal/livestock producers, in the United Kingdom arrangements for the European Economic Community cereals co-responsibility levy; if he will also make it his policy not to grant any exemptions to this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing quarterly levels and changes in the United Kingdom employed labour force since 1979, identifying separately (a) employees in employment, (b) armed forces and (c) self-employment, with a breakdown of these categories by: (A) hours, full-time and part-time split, and (B) sex.

Mr. Lang: The available estimates for the employed labour force are as follows:

[1] Estimates relate to the spring of each year. Figures for 1984 and 1985 exclude those on Government schemes, whereas earlier years include those on schemes if reported as in employment.

[2] Includes those who did not state if they were in a full or part-time job.

[3] In this table a person is shown as full-time or part-time according to whether he considers his job to be a full or part-time job.

[4] In 1979 and 1981 the self employed were not asked if they worked full or part-time.

[5] Includes those who did not state if they were an employee or self employed.

Preliminary results.

Training Schemes

Mr. Maxton asked the Paymaster General what was the total number of people on youth training schemes and other Manpower Services Commission schemes on 1 April.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. However the position on 31 March is shown in the table:

Scheme	Numbers on 31 March
YTS	265,219
Community Programme	199,919
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	54,878
Voluntary Projects Programme	15,094
Community Industry	*6,880
Total	541,990

* Community industry figures are as at 13 March 1986.

Nuclear Inspectors

Mr. McWilliam asked the Paymaster General if he will specify in the light of the shortfall of nuclear inspectors in post against the number of authorised posts, what work is currently being delayed or not done; on the basis of what criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Recent events have inevitably created additional pressures on the inspectorate's already fully stretched resources. However, the inspectorate has so far been able to meet all its essential commitments without compromising its very high standards of safety.

In allocating resources, the criterion for determining priorities is the immediate protection of the public and the work force. The highest priority is therefore allocated to matters affecting operating reactors and other installations. The inspectorate has some flexibility in deciding on the extent and depth of its assessment work for new installations, but there will be no relaxation of the inspectorate's requirements; hence there may be some delays to new projects until additional resources are available to balance the increasing demands on the inspectorate.

The inspectorate's participation in international discussions is one area which has recently been given lower priority, although, inevitably, essential work will flow from the international reactions to Chernobyl.

Mr. McWilliam asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of inspectors actually in post with the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, together with the number of authorised posts over each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers are as follows:

Nuclear installations inspectors in Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

	Number in post	Manpower target agreed by Health and Safety Executive
1 July 1982	98	102
1 July 1983	97	102
1 July 1984	99	102
1 July 1985	101	102
1 July 1986	98	105

In approving the manpower targets shown in the table the Health and Safety Executive made it clear that further resources would be made available if it proved possible to recruit beyond that figure.

A recruitment competition is about to start from which it is hoped to recruit up to a maximum of 20 nuclear installations inspectors.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas Production

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1970 production of oil and natural gas as a percentage of gross domestic product to one place of decimals.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The gross domestic product of the mineral oil and natural gas extraction industry, as s percentge of total GDP at factor cost, was negligible before 1976. The figures for later years are:

Year	Per cent.
1977	1·6
1978	1·9
1979	3·3
1980	4·4

Dounreay Reactor (Plutonium)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what use is planned for the plutonium which will be produced by the fast breeder reactor planned for Dounreay.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom is a member of the European collaboration for the development of the fast reactor, which was established by the intergovernmental memorandum of understanding of January 1984. This states that activities taking place as part of the collaboration will be directed to the peaceful development of nuclear energy. The collaboration envisages a sequence of demonstration reactors to be built in the collaborating countries. There is, however, no specific proposal at present to construct a demonstration fast reactor at Dounreay or anywhere else in the United Kingdom.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progess made by the National Coal Board (Enterprise) Limited.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 391]: NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. was set up on 8 October 1984 with initial funding of £5 million to support and encourage new and expanding industries to create lasting jobs in Britain's traditional coalmining areas. On 28 November 1984 this sum was doubled to £10 million. The company's continued progress resulted in a further doubling of accountable funds to £20 million on 25 July 1985.

The company is continuing to make excellent progress and is increasing the scale of its success: up to the end of June the company had committed £12·9 million towards 639 projects to create 8,228 job opportunities. A further £65 million of investment has been attracted from other sources and, in addition, the company will be spending some £3 million on building works for new enterprises and businesses. The Government are determined to ensure that this success will continue.

The company, which from 31 July will be known as British Coal (Enterprise) Ltd. aims to double the level of its activities during this financial year. This will result in much more money being needed over the coming months. I am therefore delighted to announce that a further £20 million is being made available, bringing the total funding available to the company to £40 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sewerage Scheme (Newtownbreda)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to which company the mechanical subcontract has been awarded in connection with the proposed new sewerage scheme for Newtownbreda; and in which country the company is based.

Mr. Needham: The contract for the supply and installation of mechanical and electrical plant and equipment at Newtownbreda sewage treatment works was awarded to Mahon and McPhillips (Group) Ltd, a company registered in the Republic of Ireland.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many requests to visit (a) Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station and (b) police stations in the police division containing Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station, were received by the Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Constable for the morning of Saturday 7 June from (i) hon. Members and (ii) other dignitaries;

(2) how many guests of his Department have been right hon. and hon. Members in the years to the end of May 1985 and 1986; and how many of those right hon. and hon. Members have visited (a) Royal Ulster Constabulary stations and (b) military posts.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

NHS (Beds)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1978 and for each health board, the total number of beds in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The most recent available information is as follows:

Average available staffed beds at 30 September

NHS (Acute Services)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cash value of total National Health Service acute services received by a person living in each of the Scottish regional health authorities and in each district authority, respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: A breakdown of expenditure between acute and other services is not available. Details of total per capita expenditure by Scottish health boards for 1984-85 were given in a reply of 14 April 1986, at column 262, in response to a question from the right hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Stewart).

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has completed his policy review of the Scottish Special Housing Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: In accordance with arrangements applying to all non-departmental public bodies, I have now carried out a review of the Scottish Special Housing Association. I am satisfied that it is doing a worthwhile job and that it has an important and continuing contribution to make to the management and provision of public sector housing in Scotland. I have therefore set for it the following main objectives to guide its work over the next five years:

i. to continue to assist authorities to meet local housing needs, primarily by (a) managing its own stock effectively; and (b) contributing towards the provision of special needs accommodation;
ii. to recognise tenants' aspirations for home ownership and, where possible, to give priority to transfer of its assets from the public to the private sector, in order to break up single tenure estates and enhance diversity and choice of tenure;
iii. to promote and demonstrate innovative developments in the management and provision of public sector housing;
iv. to promote tenant involvement in the management of the estates in which they live;
v. to minimise the demands it makes on public housing resources, both capital and revenue;
vi. to offer value for money in all its operations and services.

At the same time, I have been conscious of the need to look at the wider context of overall housing activity in Scotland over which the Government exercise control. There is common ground among the main bodies concerned and there have been changes in housing patterns following the successful pursuit of this Government's housing objectives. I therefore propose that active consideration should be given to the early promotion of a closer working relationship between the SSHA and the Housing Corporation in Scotland. If this proves fruitful, a full merger in the longer term may be a desirable option. A consultation paper will be issued as soon as specific proposals have been developed for consideration.

Copies of the policy review report have been placed in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Thames Crossing, Dartford

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his choice of promoter to build a third crossing of the Thames at Dartford.

Mr. Moore: I received submissions from seven private sector groups on 31 May in response to the invitation my predecessor issued on 3 March for proposals for a third crossing at Dartford. Some groups offered schemes with several variants. I am grateful to all those who responded. All the proposals have been considered very carefully and I have decided that the choice lies between four of the schemes submitted by three of the groups. Before making a final choice, I need to undertake discussions with those three promoters to satisfy myself about certain technical and financial aspects of their proposals. They are the Dartford River Crossing Company, which has proposed twin bored tunnels or a bridge, and the Dartford Tunnel Group and the Thames Tunnel Company, both of whom have proposed immersed tube tunnels.

I am still considering the public and private financing alternatives which all these promoters have offered. Following the discussions with them, I hope to announce my final decision as soon as possible.

A1 Doncaster

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport when work will commence on widening sections of the A1 north of Doncaster.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work began last month on widening the Clifton to Stannington section in Northumberland. Construction of a new bypass of Wetherby is planned to start in August. Widening of the Bramham to Wetherby and Wetherby to Dishforth sections could begin in the spring of 1989 subject to the completion of statutory procedures. The need for improving the section between Doncaster and Bramham is being examined as part of the east of Leeds study.

Southend Pier

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a vessel crashed into Southend pier on 30 June; and if he will initiate an inquiry into this incident.

Mr. Moore: A marine surveyor has been appointed under section 728 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 to inquire into the circumstances attending this incident. On completion of his investigation a decision will be taken on further action.

Roads (Manchester-Sheffield)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether in the light of the closure of all the direct routes between the Greater Manchester and South Yorkshire conurbations for several weeks during the severe winter weather early in 1986, he will reconsider his decision on the provision of a high standard all-weather route between Manchester and Sheffield in the trunk road programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no justification for adding such a route to the trunk road construction programme. Existing roads can, with selective and limited improvements, safely meet the needs of present and predicted traffic.

Widnes Bypass

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work will start on the Widnes eastern bypass scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants were appointed in March: it is too early to give a firm date for construction. Depending on the need for public inquiries, work might start in 1989.

Airedale Route (Shipley Link)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been carried out by his Department on the provision of a connection between the Airedale route at Cottingley Bar and the future Shipl eastern bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultation is now taking place about improvements to the existing A650 between Cottingley Bar and the line of the proposed Shipley eastern bypass.

Blackburn-M6 Link

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what level of traffic is expected to be on the Blackburn-M6 link (a) at the time of its opening and (b) 15 years after it opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The predicted levels of traffic on the Blackburn-M6 link are between 8,000 and 34,000 (vehicles/day) at the time of opening and between 9,000 and 43,000 (vehicles/day) 15 years after opening. The predicted traffic levels are rough estimates and will be reassessed before firm proposals are published, to take account of the latest survey data and of the detailed design of the scheme. The wide ranges quoted are due to significant variations in flow along the route, and the use of high and low growth factors.

M180-A15 (Construction)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the starting date for the construction of the proposed M180-A15 in Humberside.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a Humberside county council scheme receiving 100 per cent. grant from central Government. A start could be made late in 1987 subject to satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures.

M6 (Traffic Statistics)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what the level of traffic was on the M6 between the Thelwall viaduct and the M55 Preston Northern bypass when last counted; what the level is expected to be by the end of the century; and what plans he has made for widening this motorway or making alternative provision in this corridor.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The last traffic count between Thelwall viaduct and the M55 (Preston Northern bypass) was taken in 1984, and showed an average flow of 52,000 vehicles per day; by the end of the century the level of traffic is expected to have increased by between 15 per cent. and 40 per cent. A scheme to widen the M6 between junctions 20 and 21a, including Thelwall viaduct is included in the national trunk road programme.

Roads (Morecambe-Heysham)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has made for improving road communications between the M6 and the developing industrial areas of Morecambe-Heysham and Heysham docks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the Department's request, Lancashire county council has carried out a study to establish what improvements are necessary to cope with future traffic demands in the area. Its report is under consideration and a decision on it will be announced as soon as possible.

A59 (Improvement)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been carried out by his Department into the provision of an improved A59 between Liverpool and Preston; and what were the dates and results of such studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the late 1960s a study identified three possible improvement schemes on the A59 Liverpool to Preston for inclusion in the national programme. By 1980 it became clear that the traffic figures no longer justified the scheme and they were suspended from the programme. In 1981 a bypass of Burscough and Rufford was reinstated. Consultants were appointed in August 1984 to study trunk roads in the Preston-Ormskirk area. Their report was received earlier this year and is currently under consideration.

Cumbria (Coast Road)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for improving the A595/A596 coast road in Cumbria.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are six schemes, valued at some £21 million in the national trunk road programme. They are:

Under construction
A595/A596 Thursby bypass

In preparation
A596 Wigton bypass
A596/A66 Workington bypasses
A595 Howgate-Hayes Castle Improvement
A595 Hensingham bypass
A595 Egremont bypass

In addition, the Department continually monitors conditions on these trunk roads and introduces smaller improvements when justified on safety and economic grounds. As part of this monitoring we are currently investigating the A595 between Ironbridge and Yeorton Brow, south of Egremont.

Road Construction

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total mileage of new motorways and other trunk roads opened in the northern, north-western and Yorkshire and Humberside regions in each of the years since 1979; and what were the comparable figures for the other English regions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is set out below.

Note:
The regions shown are those areas covered by the Department of Transport's nine regional offices.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport which outstanding trunk road schemes in the Northern, North Western and Yorkshire and Humberside regions may now be built as dual carriageways rather than single carriageways following the publication of the revised rules in standard TD20/85 on 28 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No changes in the standard of trunk road schemes are proposed in the northern and Yorkshire and Humberside regions. In the north-west region, a section of the proposed Macclesfield relief road is to be upgraded from single to dual carriageway.

Roads (Statistics)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total mileage of motorway and of dual carriageways in the northern, north-western and Yorkshire and Humberside regions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total mileage of motorway and dual carriageways by standard region as at 1 April 1985, was:

	Motorway	Dual Carriageways
Northern	95·8	283·5
North Western	292·4	296·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	195·4	284·9

Highway Schemes (Cost)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give an up-to-date estimate of the cost of outstanding highway schemes in the northern, north-western and Yorkshire and Humberside regions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimated works costs of national road schemes outstanding in the northern, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions are given below:

	£ Million
Northern	80
North-West	470
Yorkshire and Humberside	200

These figures exclude the costs of scheme preparation, land acquisition and other miscellaneous items which add between 20 per cent. and 25 per cent. to the costs of a national road scheme.

Wigan, Westhoughton and Hindley Bypass

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the anticipated timescale for decisions and action relating to the construction of the Wigan, Westhoughton and Hindley bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to appoint consultants for this later this month. A detailed programme will be drawn up after the appointment. Construction is programmed to start after April 1989.

Dearne Towns Link

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to build the Dearne towns link as a trunk road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to do so. We consider carefully proposals for changes to the trunk road network put by the local highway authorities.

Roads (Bradford)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum spent on the repair and maintenance of roads in the Bradford metropolitan district council area in 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, giving the figures in actual prices and in terms of 1979-80 prices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Returns of actual expenditure on highway maintenance are submitted by individual highway authorities to the Department in relation to their area as a whole. Prior to April 1986 the highway authority for Bradford was West Yorkshire Metropolitan county council. I am afraid therefore I have no details of maintenance expenditure within Bradford for this period.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to the problems of people with severe upper limb disabilities, including thalidomide victims, in his review of the orange badge scheme; when he expects to issue his discussion paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The problems faced by those with severe upper limb disabilities will be carefully considered in the review. The discussion paper will be issued shortly, when we have the information we are still awaiting from some authorities.

Roads (Maintenance)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum spent on the repair and maintenance of roads nationally, for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, inclusive, in actual prices and in real terms.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 7 July, 1986, c. 1]: The following reply should be substituted for that given:

The total sums spent on the repair and maintenance of all roads and bridges in England, including motorways and trunk roads, for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 were as follows:

	Cash (£ million)	Real (£ million)
*1979-80	715	715
1980-81	786	648
1981-82	972	722
1982-83	1,052	722
1983-84	1,068	697
1984-85	1,145	710
†1985-86	1,237	711

* 1979-80 prices calculated from the Department's highway maintenance price index.
† Estimated.

Okehampton Bypass

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Dartmoor national park authority over the permanent siting of spoil heaps, arising from the construction of the proposed Okehampton bypass, within the boundaries of the national park.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1986, c. 595]: The Department's agent for the highway works, Devon county council, has had discussions with the Dartmoor national park authority at officer level on the advice to be given to tenderers about the need for them to obtain planning permission for any use of land within the national park for the disposal of surplus material arising from the construction of the bypass.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy on the present situation in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister confirmed in the House on 17 June, our objectives remain an end to apartheid, a solution to the South African problem by negotiation and a suspension of violence on all sides. We shall continue with our partners to do what we can to help achieve these goals.

Intergovernmental Agreements

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the practice at meetings of representatives of European Community member states meeting on the occasion of Council meetings but not as members of the Council to give their assent to intergovernmental agreements not by formal signature but by their acceptance of the undertaking during such meetings.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has referred the hon. Member to previous instances where this practice has been followed. — [Official Report, 12 June 1986, c. 287.]

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what way the text of the 1984 intergovernmental agreement was recorded; and in what languages.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the hon. Member on 12 June at column 287.

Verbal Agreements

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there is any precedent for a verbal agreement accepted informally by representatives of EC member states without an agreed text being described as a treaty.

Mrs. Chalker: On the assumption that the hon. Member is referring to the 1984 intergovernmental agreement, the draft text for adoption was before the representatives of the member states meeting within the Council in a written form and the text as adopted appears in written form in the Council minutes. Agreement to that text was expressed orally. Article 11 of the Vienna convention on the law of treaties provides that the consent of a state to be bound by a treaty

"may be expressed by signature, exchange of instruments constituting a Treaty, ratification, acceptance, approval or accession or by any other means if so agreed".

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has previously referred the hon. Member to precedents, on 12 June 1986 at column 287.

Ghana

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Ghana.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy good relations with the Republic of Ghana, a senior and respected member of the Commonwealth, though our two countries do not necessarily agree on every issue.

Trade between the United Kingdom and Ghana increased by almost 50 per cent. in 1985 and our pledged programme aid doubled to £14 million.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has of the additional cost arising for Her Majesty's Government as a result of the current United Kingdom Presidency of the Council of Ministers; and what estimates he has of the number of ministerial meetings arising.

Mrs. Chalker: Additional costs on the FCO vote are likely to amount to just under £2 million. There are likely to be 10 ministerial meetings held in the United Kingdom during our Presidency.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Incomes

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures for the weekly earnings after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant April 1985 prices of (i) a single man, (ii) a married man, (iii) a married man with two children under 11 years, (iv) a married man with four children, two under 11 years, one 11 to 15 years, and one over 16 years, whose gross weekly earnings are at (v) the lowest decile, (w) the lower quartile, (x) the median, (y) the upper quartile and (z) the highest decile for April 1979 under the June 1979 tax-benefit regime and April 1985.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Lead-free Petrol

Dr. David Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with oil companies about his proposals for tax concessions on lead-free petrol.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further and Higher Education

8. Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate for 1985 on further and higher education.

69. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate for 1985 on further and higher education.

71. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate for 1985 on further and higher education.

77. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate for 1985 on further and higher education.

Mr. Walden: None.

Health Education

14. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has plans to publish more detailed guidance to schools on health education.

Mr. Chris Patten: Her Majesty's Inspectorate published last week a discussion document on "Health Education from 5 to 16", offering professional guidance in the health education field. My right hon. Friend intends shortly to issue a draft circular on the particular issues associated with the provision of sex education in schools. He has no present plans to publish other more detailed guidance on health education.

78. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on health education in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend receives a considerable amount of correspondence about all aspects of health education provision, including sex education, education about smoking and health, teaching intended to combat drug and alcohol misuse, and healthy eating. The Government have made clear tha they regard health education as an essential element in the school curriculum.

Local Authority Expenditure

15. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to his offer to discuss the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision in England with local authority elected members.

Mr. Chris Patten: Local authority elected members have welcomed my right hon. Friend's offer of discussions on this topic.

26. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to his offer to discuss the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision in England with local authority elected members.

27. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to his offer to discuss the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision in England with local authority elected members.

34. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to his offer to discuss the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision in England with local authority elected members.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ipswich (Mr. Weetch).

Schools (HMI Report)

16. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

32. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

35. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

56. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

76. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department has no record of any representations from local education authorities about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on "The Effects of Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1985". My right hon. Friend has invited the Local Authority Associations to discuss the report at a future date.

31. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from teachers' unions about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

43. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from teachers' unions about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

44. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from teachers' unions about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

61. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from teachers' unions about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on schools (1985).

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department has no record of any representations to my right hon. Friend from the teachers' unions about the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on "The Effects of Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England—1985.

66. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate (1985) on the level of maintenance of school buildings.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate (1985) on the level of maintenance of school buildings.

70. Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate (1985) on the level of maintenance of school buildings.

72. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate (1985) on the level of maintenance of school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: The Department regularly receives letters from members of the public about the maintenance of school buildings but there have been no major representations on this issue since the publication of the Report by Her Majesty's Inspectors on "The Effects of Local Authority Expenditure Policies on Education Provision in England 1985".

Teaching Materials

17. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to deal with the problem of shortages of teaching materials in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: In successive rate support grant settlements the Government have made provision for local authorities to increase their spending on items such as books, equipment and materials, provided they can make savings through increased efficiency and contain costs generally. We are also making extra resources available to enable authorities to provide additional books and equipment for GCSE courses.

Polytechnics

18. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received about the recommendations of the National Advisory Body.

Mr. George Walden: In my reply of 10 June to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) I said that since the secretariat of the National Advisory Body wrote to institutions on 4 April with proposals for student numbers in 1987-88, about 470 representations had been received. Since then a further 250 representations have been received.

37. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month from directors of polytechnics about the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

39. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month from directors of polytechnics about the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

55. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month from directors of polytechnics about the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

74. Mr. Derek Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month from the directors of polytechnics about the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Members to the Answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) and Knowsley, North (Mr. Kilroy-Silk).

47. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the number of students at polytechnics, the proportion of school leavers gaining places and how this compares with previous years.

Mr. Walden: The figures for English polytechnics and English school leavers are as follows:

	Academic Year
	1979-80	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86*
Number of full-time and part-time students (thousands)	175·2	215·8	220·3	228·2

	Academic Year
	1979-80	1983-84	1984-85	*1985-86
Percentage of school leavers whose intended destination was a full-time course at a Polytechnic starting in the year shown	2·1	2·7	2·9	2·8

* Provisional.

School Syllabuses

19. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied that the scope of syllabuses are being sufficiently protected by education authorities in responding to falling school rolls.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend is well aware that falling pupil numbers may make it difficult for schools to offer a broad curriculum, matched to the abilities of their pupils, without incurring disproportionate costs. This is why he urges local authorities and the governors of voluntary schools, on educational as much as on financial grounds, to rationalise provision so as to maintain schools of sufficient size. The Government published their proposals on school size in "Better Schools" for consultation with the partners, and my right hon. Friend intends to issue further guidance shortly.

School Libraries

20. Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the level of purchasing of new books in school libraries.

65. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the level of purchasing on new books in school libraries.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the level of purchasing of new books in school libraries.

Mr. Chris Patten: A survey which Her Majesty's Inspectorate conducted in 1984 of school libraries in six local education authority areas revealed a wide diversity of provision between authorities and within the same authority. The Government recognise the importance of school libraries and look to local education authorities and schools to explore ways in which the resources available can be most effectively deployed.

Graduates (Industrial Employers)

21. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to seek to remedy the shortfall in graduates for industrial employers.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has already responded to industry's strongly expressed concern about areas of skill shortages through a range of measures aimed at increasing significantly the numbers of relevant graduate places by the end of the decade.

Huddersfield Polytechnic

22. Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to visit Huddersfield polytechnic.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

School Attendances

23. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on school attendances.

Mr. Chris Patten: Unjustified absence is a serious problem in a minority of schools. In the Government's view there is scope for the education welfare services to focus their efforts more sharply on such absence, and to take early, preventive action before irregular attendance becomes habitual. On 10 February the Department issued a circular "School attendance and education welfare services", to local education authorities. It contained a number of recommendations about the functions and organisation of the services, commented on their implications for the training of education welfare officers, and asked authorities to inform the Secretary of State by 31 May how far their existing and planned policies corresponded to those recommendations. Early in 1987 we will ask for more detailed information about authorities' arrangements for implementing the recommendations in the circular.

Schools (Finance)

24. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to seek powers to regulate the method of distributing finance between schools.

45. Mr. Edward Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to change the method of funding of secondary schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: No.

Sex Education

25. Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has plans to meet representatives of Family and Youth Concern to discuss sex education in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet representatives of Family and Youth Concern and has received no request for such a meeting.

Birkbeck College

28. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the future of Birbeck college.

38. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the future of Birbeck college.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received over 400 representations about the funding of Birkbeck college. The University Grants Committee is currently reviewing the basis on which it allocated resources in respect of part-time students at Birkbeck college.

Russian Language

29. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to promote the teaching of Russian as a foreign language in schools and colleges.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend published last month a draft statement of policy on foreign languages in the school curriculum which made clear his view that, within available resources, more pupils should have an opportunity to study Russian at school, in particular as a first foreign language. The draft statement is now the subject of consultation. In higher education, student numbers reflect demand: the Government are concerned to ensure that this demand is met in thriving and viable departments.

School Reorganisation Plans

30. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the shortest and what was the longest period in which he replied with his formal decision on school reorganisation proposals for local education authorities since 1983.

Mr. Dunn: The shortest period between publication of school reorganisation proposals and a final decision by the Secretary of State since 1983 was 2·3 months and the longest period was 23·2 months. In both cases this includes the two-month period during which statutory objections can be made and the further month allowed before a local education authority must submit these objections and their comments to the Secretary of State.

Scottish Universities (Grants)

33. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Scottish universities about the latest round of grant allocation.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the Principal of Edinburgh university, and I heard representations at first hand when I visited Aberdeen university on 2 June. We have also received about two dozen representations on the 1986-87 grant allocations for Scottish universities from hon. Members, university staff and students.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

36. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress on introducing the GCSE.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have devoted £10 million to a training programme for the GCSE which is the most ambitious ever mounted. Schools will be able to close for two days this term to complete the training programme. Together, the LEAs and Government are directing £60 million this year to books and equipment for the new exams. The Government will be making available a further £20 million over the next two years. Almost all syllabuses are now approved and most of them are in schools. I welcome the fact that all the teachers' associations are now co-operating in preparation for the GCSE.

46. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received to the steps he recently announced to help teachers prepare for the GCSE.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the funding available for the introduction of the GCSE.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since my right hon. Friend's announcement of 10 June of increased support for books and equipment to the GCSE, both the NUT and the NAS/UWT have advised their members to co-operate with the preparations for the introduction of the GCSE. The Department has received a general welcome for this announcement, including an official response from the Professional Association of Teachers.

58. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many syllabuses have now been approved for the GCSE.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Secondary Examinations Council has now approved 281 GCSE syllabuses which virtually completes the programme for the approval of syllabuses. The examining groups have already circulated most of the approved versions and they will distribute the remainder as soon as possible.

67. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Norfolk county council about preparations for the GCSE.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department has received no recent representations from Norfolk county council about preparations for the GCSE. However, my right hon. Friend will be meeting a deputation from Norfolk county council in the middle of July.

75. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from local education authorities about the implementation of the new GCSE programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since the beginning of June the Department has received six letters from local education authorities about the arrangements for the introduction of the GCSE. The authorities concerned are: Avon; Buckinghamshire; Devon; Kingston; North Yorkshire; and Shropshire.

I also met a deputation from Bradford on 27 June to discuss GCSE issues. The main issues raised concerned the provision of resources and the training programme.

Design Courses

40. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the number of students studying on design courses.

Mr. Walden: The Government attach great importance to design. Between 1979 and 1984 the number of full time equivalent home and EC students on advanced courses in design in the public sector, which accounts for the majority of such courses increased by some 70 per cent. from a little over 8,000 to around 14,000.

Teachers (Dispute)

41. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to end disruption in schools still being caused by teachers in dispute.

Mr. Chris Patten: In accepting a 1986-87 pay offer on 9 May, all six school teacher unions gave an assurance that there would be a return to peace and calm in schools immediately. Pupils should now be receiving a normal, uninterrupted service and I trust that local education authorities, as employers, are ensuring that teachers are carrying out their contractual obligations.

Technological Skills

42. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he will take to overcome the deficiencies in technological skills of those engaged in British industry.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is maintaining the PICKUP programme which is encouraging and supporting universities and colleges to develop more and better training for adults in employment and the Department is playing its part in the Government's adult training campaign to bring home to employers the importance of investing in the training of their employees. In addition, my right hon. Friend is reforming teacher training to promote the teachings of technology and of its economic importance.

Open University

48. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of supply and demand for places with the Open University in the forthcoming academic year.

Mr. Walden: The university predicts that it will receive about 58,500 applications for the 1987 academic year. It expects to make some 35,400 offers in order to fill the 22,000 places available.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the value of the Government grant to the Open University for each year since 1971-72 in cash terms, constant 1985-86 prices and indexed using 1971-72 as a base, including and excluding Government loans to the institution; and what was and is the number of undergraduates studying at the institution on degree courses for each year.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Recurrent grant (£ million)	Recurrent grant in 1985-86 real terms (£ million)	Recurrent grant indexed in real terms: 1971-72 = 100	Student numbers in academic (calendar) years

1983-84	55·72 (56·42)*	61·55 (62·33)	199·0 (201·6)	66,403
1985-86	60·93	60·93	197·1	67,433

* Figures in brackets are based on the inclusion of £1 million, £0·7 million and £0·8 million in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 respectively, to enable the Open University to develop its professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) activities. These sums were originally made available as loans but were converted to grant with effect from the financial year 1986-87. The university's PICKUP activities are part of its non-degree continuing education programme.

Glasgow and Strathclyde Universities

49. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to visit Glasgow university and Strathclyde university.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend does not at present have plans to visit Glasgow university or Strathclyde university.

Higher Education

50. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to have any early discussions with university authorities concerning the future development of higher education.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on 26 June and discussed a number of issues including the future funding of universities.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will set out the number of students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions who are taking mixed honours degrees composed of more than one subject and indicate the proportions which these represent of the total number of undergraduates in each case;

(2) how many students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions are following courses of study based on single subjects and mixed subjects, respectively; and what were the equivalent figures in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: The required information for further education and public sector higher education could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. Equivalent information for universities is not currently collected. The number of students on modular first degree courses in public sector institutions in England, in 1984, was 6,400 which represented 3·6 per cent. of all first degree students in the public sector. The revised subject classification introduced for the collection of 1985 university statistics will in future enable students studying combinations of subjects to be identified.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions are following courses of study as undergraduates of two years, three years and more than three years duration, respectively; and what were the equivalent figures in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: The available information is shown in the following table:

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the young mature entry index for higher education in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The available figures for the young mature entry index, which is defined as the number of home full-time and sandwich initial entrants aged 21 to 24 expressed as a percentage of the numbers of "potential entrants" in the age group, are shown in the following table. In this context "potential entrants" means those with one or more A-levels or Scottish equivalent who did not enter higher education at younger ages.

Universities (Funds)

51. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

53. Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

59. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

62. Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

79. Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

Mr. Walden: I refer hon. Members to my reply of 1 July to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) at column 473.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage charge in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1986-87, excluding those amounts representing: compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of capital in recurrent expenditure, local authority rates and additions made for the engineering and technology, information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The exclusion of the funding elements selectively listed by the hon. Member gives an unrealistic impression of changes in the funding of universities by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1986-87. The payment of items such as local authority rates and compensation for early retirements is part and parcel of the cost of running large institutions. The engineering and technology, information technology and new blood programmes are important features in the life of universities which should not simply be ignored. Between 1980-81 and 1986-87 total recurrent and equipment grant paid to universities by the University Grants Committee increased by 39·3 per cent. in cash terms which is equivalent to an increase of 1·3 per cent. in real terms (using the GDP deflator).

However, neither this increase nor the figures specifically requested by the hon. Member, which are as follows, accurately reflect the changes in universities' overall financial position over the period: increases in income from overseas students and other private sources and reductions in tuition fees for home students (paid from public funds in most cases) must also be taken into account.

Changes in UGC recurrent and equipment grant to universities between 1980-81 and 1986-87 in real terms (using the GDP deflator), with selected exclusions listed by the hon. Member, were:

Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981

52. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will review the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Dunn: My Department keeps under continuous review the evidence available to it regarding the appropriateness of the requirements of the regulations.

Science and Mathematics Teachers

54. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional measures he is considering to seek to improve the recruitment and retention of science and mathematics teachers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth).

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

57. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the effect of the reduction of pupil-teacher ratio on education standards over the last five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend recognises that the pupil-teacher ratio is one factor affecting the standards achieved by pupils, and the Government's public expenditure plans as announced in this year's White Paper (Cmnd 9702) provide for a further modest improvement in overall PTRs between January 1985 and January 1987. It is important that schools should use the flexibility allowed by smaller PTRs to give teachers adequate time for curriculum planning and development, and improve teacher deployment, not simply to reduce class sizes.

Deaf-Blind Children

60. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to the draft consultative document on the education of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Dunn: A number of responses have been received and are being considered. However many of the bodies who were consulted have been unable to meet the original deadline of June 16, and so this was extended until July 4 in order to allow the widest possible range of comments to be considered.

Teacher Shortages

63. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning the shortage of key teachers in particular education authorities; and what action he is proposing to ensure that they are enabled to discharge their statutory obligations.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department does not maintain detailed records of teacher recruitment in individual local education authorities. We are aware that some authorities have had difficulties in recruiting enough teachers with certain specialisms in the secondary or primary age ranges. An expansion of the primary training system was begun in 1982, and we have encouraged more students to specialise in the teaching of younger pupils. On the question of secondary specialisms, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth).

Expenditure

64. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much proposed education spending has been increased in 1986-87 and 1987-88 since he came to office; what percentage of gross domestic product will be spent on education in 1986-87 and 1987-88; and how it compares with the percentage in 1978-79.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since taking office my right hon. Friend has announced increased funding for the introduction of the GCSE and an increase of £36 in the value of individual student awards. The total expenditure concerned is £24·5 million in 1986-87 and £14 million in 1987-88. An additional £5 million has also been made available in 1986-87 for scientific and technological equipment for the introduction of the GCSE by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. All of this expenditure falls within the overall public expenditure planning totals.

Public expenditure on education in the United Kingdom in 1978-79 was 5·3 per cent. of GDP for that year. The plans for education spending in 1986-87 set out in the 1986 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) represent 4·4 per cent. of forecast GDP. Decisions on the level of provision for local authority current expenditure on education in 1987-88 remain to be taken.

Single Sex Education

68. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards school closures and reorganisation that effectively extinguish parental choice of single sex education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend considers all proposals for school closures and reorganisations which come before him on their individual merits, taking into account all the relevant educational social and financial factors. Circular 4/82 made clear my right hon. Friend's view that proposals should have regard to parental preference for maintaining opportunities for single-sex education in schools.

National Advisory Body (Planning Exercise)

73. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past month from the National Union of Students about the National Advisory Body's planning exercise for 1987-88.

Mr. Walden: None.

School Leavers (Higher Education)

80. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number and proportion of school leavers taking up places in higher education; and how this compares with 1979.

Mr. Walden: Information is not available precisely in the form requested. Data on the intended destinations of school leavers showing those who were planning to pursue degree courses (including teacher training courses) and those whose intention was to follow other further or higher education courses is shown in the table:

*School leavers in academic year—Intended destinations

	1978-79		1984-85
Full-time courses	Number (thousands)	As percentage of all leavers	Number (thousands)	As percentage of all leavers
Degree (including teacher training) courses	58·1	7·9	57·7	7·8
Other further and higher education courses	99·4	13·5	151·4	20·5
Total full-time further and higher education courses	157·6	21·4	209·1	28·3

* Whose intended destination was perceived or outcome known, by the Head Teacher at the time of the completion of the School Leavers Survey.

Education (Grants and Awards) Act

81. Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent the Education (Grants and Awards) Act has been used to assist in specific programmes to help low attainers in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: At present education support grants are not being used to assist in specific programmes to help low attainers in schools although many ESG supported activities will benefit low attainers even though they are not specifically so targetted.

However the Government are funding three major research projects in mathematics on the needs of low attaining pupils in secondary schools at a cost of some £1 million. The lower attaining pupils' programme itself was set up in 1982 and provides for expenditure of about £3 million a year to be supported through the urban programme.

Crime Prevention

82. Mr. Ryder asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what means he is encouraging education for crime prevention in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend is encouraging education for crime prevention in schools in a number of ways, including the following:

—through the Government's policy, as set out in "Better Schools", for improving standards of academic achievement and behaviour at all schools;

—through the arrangements for paying Education Support Grant in respect of approved schemes for (a) promoting social responsibility in schools, and

(b) combating the misuse of drugs

—through promoting better co-operation between police and the schools;

—through action to increase parental involvement in schools;

—through various projects on which grant is payable under the Urban Programme and through grants made by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary under Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department is taking as a result of the Downing street seminars on crime prevention.

Mr. Chris Patten: At the seminar in January of this year the Department undertook two assignments: to collect and disseminate examples of good crime prevention strategies in relation to school premises and to commission a research study on the nature and extent of wilful damage to buildings and property and to advise on cost-effective and practical solutions. The first was completed on 26 June when a discussion document was sent by the Department to all local education authorities and interested national bodies in England. The research study has been commissioned and is now in progress. The findings are expected to be available in the spring of 1987 and the Department will issue practical guidance on school security before the end of 1987.

School Buildings

83. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he now expects to complete his survey into the state of school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: Because many survey returns have still not been received from local education authorities, it is not possible to say when the survey will be completed. Authorities are being pressed to submit outstanding returns as soon as possible.

School Leavers (Examinations)

84. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to international comparisons of quality between school leavers' examinations at 16 and at 18 years.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available. However, I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the Department's statistical bulletin 9/84 — "International Statistical Comparisons in Higher Education" — which contains some information on examinations taken by pupils in a number of countries prior to entering higher education.

Student Grants

85. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to estimate the number of students in full-time further and higher education in receipt of grants who have recourse to borrowing to help finance their studies.

Mr. Walden: No.

Low Attainers

86. Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of his policies to help low attainers.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the speech which my right hon. Friend made on the occasion of the Open Day for the lower attaining pupil's programme at Warwick University on 1 July. Briefly the main impact of the programme so far has been on the motivation of pupils and on their attitude to school. The challenge for the future is to exploit this to raise the eucational attainment of the pupils concerned.

Research

87. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the total funding of research work by his Department in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The total funding of research by the Department of Education and Science in 1986-87 is estimated to be about £1,276 million.

National Staff College (Teachers)

88. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce a national staff college for teachers.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present. He already funds the National Development Centre for School Management Training and aids by specific grant the attendance of heads and other senior school teachers on approved courses of management training, and is considering how such training might be further developed.

Royal Greenwich Observatory

89. Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the transfer of the Royal Greenwich observatory to the north-west.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and I have received 29 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and other interested parties seeking a transfer of the Royal Greenwich observatory to the north-west. In addition I received a deputation representing north-west interests in my office on 3 June.

Medical Faculties (Funding)

90. Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current level of funding of medical faculties; what steps are taken to ensure that this level fulfils the criteria laid down in the Medical Act 1978 in relation to standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The education committee of the General Medical Council has responsibility under the Medical Act 1983 (the currently operative legislation) for establishing the required standards for medical education and ensuring that they are met. My right hon. Friend has seen no evidence that current levels of university funding have reduced standards below what that Commitee regards as necessary. The Government have announced their willingness to increase financial provision for the universities if they can demonstrate real progress in the pursuit of better management, improved standards of teaching, selectivity in research funding and rationalisation of small departments. It will be for the universities themselves to decide the distribution of any extra money among subject departments.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the actual and real spending per primary and secondary school pupil including teachers, materials and all aspects of education provision in 1970, 1974, 1975, 1979 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 July, at column 470.

Teachers (Duties)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department has given to local education authorities on the contractual duties of teachers.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department has not issued advice to local education authorities on teachers' contractual duties. The Government made clear in August 1985 that they wish to see progress towards a clear definition of the range of teachers' duties linked to their contracts of employment.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 332, what were the corresponding figures for grammar schools in the United Kingdom 10, 15 and 20 years ago both in absolute terms and as a percentage of all public sector secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The data are as follows:

United Kingdom

	1976	1971	1966
Grammar schools*	499	991	1,295
As a percentage of all public sector secondary schools	9	16	20

* Excludes public sector schools in Scotland with a purely selective intake policy as did the answer of 10 March, at column 332.

University Students

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total number of part-time students at university in each year since 1974; and what proportion they were of total university student numbers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is shown in the following table.

Student numbers in universities in Great Britain

Academic year beginning	Part-time (000s)*	Per cent. part-time
1974	24·1	8·8
1975	25·0	8·7
1976	26·0	8·7
1977	27·3	8·9
1978	28·1	8·9
1979	30·0	9·3
1980	31·9	9·7
1981	33·2	10·0
1982	33·5	10·2
1983	34·6	10·6
1984	36·0	11·0

* Excluding the Open University.

School Curriculum

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what subjects, other than sex education are defined by his Department as essential elements in the curriculum.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's White Paper "Better Schools" envisages all schools offering a curriculum which is broad, balanced, relevant and differentiated within the framework of appropriate local education authority policies. We believe that English, mathematics and a broad and balanced course in science have a place in the curriculum of all pupils up to the age of 16. Pupils should also engage in physical education; should study elements drawn from the humanities and the arts; should consolidate their understanding of the values and foundations of British society and develop economic awareness; and should take part in practical and technological work in subjects such as craft, design and technology. Most pupils should also study at least one foreign language. The place of religious education in the curriculum is governed by statute.

Teachers (In-service Training)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated expenditure on in-service training and induction by local authorities for the latest year for which a figure is available; and what this figure represents as a proportion of expenditure on teachers' salaries.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 6 May, at column 44, to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris). The supported expenditure listed there is equivalent to about 1·9 per cent. of expenditure on teachers' salaries.

Assemblies and Collective Acts of Worship

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has received from Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools as to which schools in the west Essex area of Essex comply with the requirements of the Education Act regarding assemblies and collective acts of worship and which do not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has received no such information. Where parents or others are concerned that the requirements of the Education Act 1944 in relation to assemblies and collective acts of worship are not being met, they should inform the school concerned or the local authority and, if necessary, complain to my right hon. Friend who will have the matter investigated.

Conductive Education

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what proportion of mentally or physically handicapped children who receive conductive education proceed to normal schools;

(2) how many residential and non-residential schools in Britain provide conductive education;

(3) how many schools for mentally and physically disabled children in Britain are based on the principle of conductive education; how many children they cater for; what is the teacher-pupil ratio; and if he gives any financial support to them.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect information about the movement of individual children. It is known that a number of schools and units use forms or derivatives of conductive education but details are not available centrally. More information on these and other aspects of conductive education is likely to become available, however, as a result of a detailed study of this method which the Spastics Society has proposed to carry out. An application for central Government support towards the project is at present under active consideration.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many courses there are for training teachers of conductive education; and how many teachers are involved;

(2) how many people have received training to become teachers of conductive education; and what proportion of them have received combined training in therapy, nursing and teaching.

Mr. Dunn: There are no institutional courses approved by my right hon. Friend which provide training in conductive education. On-the-job training may be provided for teachers at schools which use some form of conductive education but no details of any such provision or of the number of teachers involved are available centrally.

Four-term School Year

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set up a committee to examine the prospects, merits and viability of a four-term school year.

Mr. Dunn: No. As I explained in my reply of 8 April at column 41, the Association of County Councils has invited comments on the report of a working party which it published in January.

Clinical Academic Posts

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of clinical academic posts which have been frozen or withdrawn over the past five years.

Mr. Walden: Information on numbers of academic posts frozen or withdrawn is not collected by Government Departments. A survey report by the University Hospitals Association and the National Association of Health Authorities, published in September 1985, indicated that a total of 279 clinical academic posts were abolished or frozen in the three academic years 1981-82 to 1983-84 in England and Wales, with 49 posts unfrozen and 78 new posts established, giving a net loss over the three years of 152. Of the new posts established, 31 were under the University Grants Committee's new blood scheme; a further 65 such new posts were established in 1984-85 and 1985-86. There has also been a significant increase in the numbers of clinical academic posts funded, in whole or in part, other than from university general funds.

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about difficulties in recruiting clinical academic staff and as to the causes of those difficulties.

Mr. Walden: Parity between the pay of university clinical staff and their counterparts in the NHS has existed since 1968. The delay in translating the 1985 NHS doctors and dentists pay award to clinical academic staff in universities resulted in a number of letters from staff at universities with medical schools which claimed that the situation was affecting recruitment. That correspondence ended in February when the Government agreed that clinical academics' pay, should in principle be linked to NHS doctors' pay, which is settled following DDRB recommendations; and that the universities will not be given less favourable treatment than the hospital and community Health Service in any decisions to provide additional funds to meet additional costs arising from DDRB pay awards.

Students (Benefits)

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on the effects of benefit changes on students.

Mr. Walden: A total of 56 letters have been received since 18 June when my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Social Services announced the benefit changes which are proposed for implementation later this year.

Student Grant

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on the present level of the student grant.

Mr. Walden: A total of 2,243 letters have been received since the beginning of the year.

Pre-Vocational Courses

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received the report of the working party on criteria for pre-vocational courses; pre-16; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The report was submitted last month to my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales by the chairman of the working party, Mr. R. S. Johnson, director of education for Leeds.

The report's key recommendations are that: all single subject courses, by whomsoever offered, should be governed by the GCSE national criteria; and that grouped and integrated pre-vocational courses should be governed by the new criteria proposed by the working party.

We are issuing the report to all interested parties inviting comments, by 31 October, on the proposed arrangements for the approval and monitoring of single subject courses and on the proposed criteria for grouped and integrated courses. We shall then invite the Secondary Examinations Council to prepare final version of the criteria, in consultation with the working party, for our final approval. We aim to publish the final approved versions of the criteria in spring 1987 and intend that these should govern pre-vocational courses offered in the compulsory years of secondary education from September 1988.

We welcome the emphasis placed in the criteria on the curricular principles of breadth, balance and relevance. We believe it is vital that all fourth and fifth year secondary pupils continue to acquire the knowledge, understanding and skills associated with the main curricular requirements. These are an essential foundation for subsequent learning, training and work. We are grateful to the working party for producing its report and to the Secondary Examinations Council for hosting and servicing it.

Copies of the report are being placed in the Library.

Pre-school Places

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for the number of pre-school places per 1,000 of the under-five population in education authorities grouped by political control on the classification used by the Secretary of State for the Environment in his reply to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 15 January, Official Report, column 577;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table listing education authorities by the number of pre-school places they provide per 1,000 of the under-five population.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 8 April, 1986 c. 53-55]: The headings to the tables given did not adequately explain the definitions used. Information on the number of places is not available. The number of children aged under five years attending maintained nursery and primary school per 1,000 of the three and four-year-old population in January 1985 was as follows:—

Number of pre-school children per 1,000 of the population aged three and four at January 1985.

Teacher-Pupil Ratio

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table listing education authorities by teacher-pupil ratio in secondary schools, primary schools and overall for the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the teacher-pupil ratio in secondary schools, primary schools and overall of (a) all the councils under Conservative control and (b) all the councils under Labour control for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 2-6]: The headings to the tables given did not adequately explain the definitions used. In January 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools, the overall pupil-teacher ratio for each local education authority, and an indication of the political control of each authority are given below:

SOCIAL SERVICES

Departmental Experts

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many independent experts have resigned from committees of his Department since March; and what reasons each has given for resignation.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Care (Research)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure in each of the past five years on research into the evaluation of health care within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible to provide information in the form requested. The Department has supported a number of studies to evaluate health care within the National Health Service as part of its programme of research on health and personal social services. This programme amounted to:

	£ million
1981-82	13·4
1982-83	12·0
1983-84	11·5
1984-85	10·6
1985-86	*11·1

* Estimated figure.

Examples of studies within this programme include:

Evaluation of the Dornier Lithotripter: Department of Community Medicine and United Medical and Dental Schools of Guy's and St. Thomas's hospitals.

Evaluation of long stay accommodation for elderly people: Health care research unit, University of Newcastle upon Tyne.

Costs and benefits of cardiac transplantation programmes at Harefield and Papworth hospitals: Brunel university and Cambridge university.

An evaluation of the role of the hospital community liaison nurse: South Glamorgan health authority.

Evaluation of the Worcester development project for the mentally ill: University of Birmingham and University of London.

Single Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on what action he proposes to take to reduce the backlog of claims for single payments in Scotland.

Mr. Major: There has been an increase in single payment claims in Scotland recently resulting from a number of "take-up" campaigns being mounted by local authorities and other agencies. Extra staff are being deployed on this work.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private tenants who are currently in receipt of housing benefit are unemployed.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that in December 1985, the latest date for which information is available, about 260,000 private tenants who were in receipt of housing benefit were unemployed.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from local authority associations about the uprating of housing benefit in the current year.

Mr. Major: Prior to the uprating statement in February, local authority representatives indicated to the Department that they would prefer the July uprating of the needs allowances to be linked to the cash increase in retirement pensions. They also asked for there to be no taper changes, and for the rules concerning benefit periods to be eased during the transition to annual April upratings. No representations have been received since then.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 1 July to the hon. Member for Fulham on the question of housing benefit uprating, when in the past the annual uprating of the needs allowance has produced a reduction in entitlement, as stated in the answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 381; and what is his assessment of the amount by which the weekly increase in the needs allowance in the current year falls short of the level at which it would have been set if the traditional uprating formula had been applied.

Mr. Major: The last occasion when some claimants experienced a reduction in housing benefit entitlement when the needs allowances were uprated according to the traditional formula was last November when the cash increase in the needs allowance for a pensioner couple was lower than the cash increase in the retirement pension. As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 12 May, at column 381, the traditional formula could not be used for this July's uprating because the measurement period covered only May 1985 to January 1986.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much housing benefit is paid each year to tenants of private landlords of property not subject to the fixing of fair rents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Information is not available centrally on housing benefit paid to tenants of privately rented property according to type of tenure.

Supplementary and Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit while registering as available for work on 1 April;

(2) what was the number of men over the age of 60 years who were in receipt of supplementary benefit or unemployment benefit but were not required to register for employment as at 1 April;

(3) how many people were in receipt of unemployment benefit on 1 April.

Mr. Major: All claimants for unemployment benefit, irrespective of their age, are required to be available for work and to sign at an unemployment benefit office (UBO). Supplementary benefit claimants aged 60 or more are not required to be available for work and are usually paid by order book. Registration at a jobcentre for employment has been voluntary since October 1982, except for those under 18 years. The information requested, at the latest available dates, is in the table.

	Date	Numbers (thousands)
		Unemployment Benefit	Unemployment Benefit + Supplementary Benefit	Supplementary Benefit
All claimants signing at UBOs	February 1986	751	206	1,727
Men age 60 or over signing at UBO	November 1985	41	2	12
Men age 60 or over but under 65 paid by order book	December 1985	—	—	124

Low Income Families

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the reasons for the further delay in publishing the 1983 low income families tables.

Mr. Major: The reasons for the delay include the delayed start in the processing of the data from which the tables are derived and technical difficulties in connection with ensuring consistency with earlier figures in the series, for example, arising from the introduction of MIRAS and housing benefit in 1983. The tables will be published shortly.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct the chairman of the National Health Service management board to make a priority of reducing waiting lists.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 18 June at column 575.

Staff (Birkenhead)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of staff in each of the Birkenhead offices of his Department; if he will distinguish between the complement of staff allowed and the number of staff actually in post; and if he will make a statement on what changes he plans in the size of the staff over the coming year.

Mr. Major: The number of staff allocated, and the number of staff in post, on 1 July 1986 for each of the Birkenhead offices is as follows:

	Staff Allocation	Staff in Post
Birkenhead (North) ILO	202	*191
Birkenhead (South) ILO	126	126·5

Abbreviation: ILO—integrated local office.
* 200 anticipated by 1st August.

There are no current plans to change the number of staff allocated to these offices over the coming year.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the reliability of battery-powered wheelchairs.

Mr. Newton: I am unaware of any recent representations to Ministers about the reliability of battery-powered wheelchairs supplied by the Department. All new contracts for batteries placed by the Department are for those of the semi-traction type, which are more suitable for wheelchairs than the starter/lights/ignition type supplied previously.

Conductive Education

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of children in Britain suffering mental or physical disability; and how many of them have experienced conductive education.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available centrally to enable reliable estimates to be made.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide assistance to the organisation Rapid Action for Conductive Education.

Mr. Newton: We have received no application for assistance from the organisation Rapid Action for Conductive Education, but any such application would be considered in the light of the usual criteria for assisting voluntary organisations.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of adults in Britain suffering from Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis and strokes; and what estimate he has of the numbers of them who would benefit from conductive education.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available centrally to enable such estimates to be made.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide a statutory right to conductive education for those mentally and physically disabled children who could benefit from it;

(2) what research his Department has carried out on conductive education; and what funding he has given to research or projects carried out by outside organisations;

(3) if he will provide special funding for the development of conductive education for mentally and physically disabled children.

Mr. Newton: Officials from this Department and the Department of Education and Science are currently discussing with the Spastics Society possible support for a study of current provision and an evaluation of the implications of wider development of conductive education in this country. Should this project go forward, we will then consider in the light of the outcome what further steps might be appropriate.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to monitor the progress of mentally or physically disabled children who are undergoing conductive education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not collect information on individual children who may be mentally or physically disabled. It is known that a number of schools and units use forms or derivatives of conductive education but details are not available centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the specific children's disabilities for which conductive education has been found particularly appropriate.

Mr. Newton: Conductive education has been used to assist children suffering with disorders of movement. We are not aware, however, of firm evidence which might indicate that conductive education is particularly appropriate in the case of specific disabilities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on conductive education.

Mr. Newton: We have received approximately 70 letters on the subject of conductive education during the period 1 April to 30 June 1986.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications of the increase in the price of the annual report required by section 22 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 for sales and readership of the report; what were the sales of the 1983 report; and what are the current and estimated out-turn sales of the 1984 report.

Mr. Newton: The increased price of the two-part 1984 report reflects the cost of presenting the required information in a form that adds considerably to the report's usefulness in the field of research and development of equipment for the disabled and thus ultimately to the disabled themselves. The narrative element of the report is now availalble, as part I, at a cost lower than that of the whole report in previous years, while the more detailed content of part II is expected to appeal to researchers. The comparative figures of sales are:

1983 report: 386 copies sold
1984 report: Part I: 362 copies sold to date
Part II: 271 copies sold to date

The indications are that total sales will be generally in line with those of previous years.

Immunisation

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what methods are being used to strengthen the uptake of health authority immunisation against measles, pertussis, tetanus, poliomyelitis and rubella.

Mr. Whitney: Last August, the Department asked health authorities to draw up programmes for increasing the uptake of childhood immunisation, particularly against measles and whooping cough, and to designate a person to take responsibility for immunisation programmes.

The Health Education Council, with special Government funding, is running a publicity campaign to promote immunisation against whooping cough. This will continue throughout the current whooping cough epidemic. The National Rubella Council, which is funded by the Department, is continuing its campaign to improve uptake of immunisation against rubella among schoolgirls and adult women of childbearing age.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total budget of the Health Education Council; and what part of that budget is allocated for immunisation education.

Mr. Whitney: The Health Education Council's budget for 1986-87 is £9·6 million and its budgeted expenditure on immunisation education is approximately £51,000. The scope for additional effort in the field of whooping cough immunisation is being assessed with the council.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by his Department on research into the safety of immunisation and the frequency of contra-indications to immunisation.

Mr. Whitney: The National Biological Standards Board which is funded by the Department and is responsible among other things for ensuring the purity, potency and safety of vaccines, each year carries out research connected with its standardisation and control. In the last financial year approximately £750,000 was spent on this research.

The following research projects supported by the Department include work on the frequency of contra-indications to immunisation.

Project	Cost £
1. Professor D.L.Miller/Dr. E. Ross Middlesex Hospital Medical School National Childhood Encephalopathy Study (funding ceased)	280,000
2. Dr. P.E. M. Fine London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine Investigation of the impact of immunisation programmes on the pattern of infectious diseases (funding ceased)	40,000
3. Dr. C. Miller Central Public Health Laboratory, Colindale, London Rubella Monitoring and Research Programme	350,000
4. Professor R. M. Anderson Imperial College of Science and Technology Quantitative investigations of different policies for vaccination against pertussis, measles and rubella	88,000

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether local authorities which empower nurses to immunise at home, and the nurses so empowered, will be fully indemnified for any accident that may occur in connection with the immunisation.

Mr. Hayhoe: Nurses undertaking vaccination and immunisation at home, where so employed by their health authorities to do so, are fully indemnified by their employers providing that they operate within the policies of those health authorities.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider the introduction of a requirement that children should show proof of measles immunisation prior to admission to school; and if he will also consider this strategy for immunisation against other vaccine-preventable diseases.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to make immunisation compulsory by this or other means. The Department will continue to urge health authorities to encourage in various ways voluntary immunisation among children.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the expense of the recent case on behalf of a 16-year-old boy, vaccinated at the age of 14 months against diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus, he will consider introducing a disability no fault compensation scheme.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the right hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 28 January at columns 493-94 and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 21 November 1985 at column 288.

Rubella

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, further to his answer, 14 May, Official Report, column 496, he will procure an estimate, based on a sample of children with congenital rubella syndrome, of the cost of their hospitalisation, surgical requirements and of treatment and subsequent care during their lifetime.

Mr. Whitney: A study to obtain the information requested by the right hon. Member might be a suitable subject for research, although we would need to consider carefully what benefits would emerge from such a study for the future planning of health service provision. We would certainly consider any proposal submitted to the Department for research along these lines, but I cannot guarantee that it would necessarily command a high priority compared with other claims on the Department's research budget.

"Growing Old in Britain"

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes in his policy towards the elderly he intends to make in response to the British Medical Association's Report on "Growing Old in Britain", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I understand that the British Medical Association report, "All our Tomorrows: Growing Old in Britain", has been put forward primarily as a discussion document for the medical profession and the general public. The BMA has made it clear that it has so far taken no decisions of policy on the matters raised in the report. If firm proposals for action by the Government emerge from the consultation process, we will consider them.

Hypothermia

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further measures he proposes to take to seek to reduce the incidence of hypothermia amongst the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 19 May, at columns 55-56, we are considering the results of a study by officials of hypothermia statistics. We are also considering the provision to help with fuel bills during exceptionally severe weather in the light of last winter's experience.

Pharmaceutical Whitley Council

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement following the meeting of the management side of the pharmaceutical Whitley council on 25 June with particular reference to the reasons why the two parts of the offer cannot be taken separately.

Mr. Hayhoe: Remuneration and conditions of service are matters for the Whitley councils. I understand that at the meeting of the Pharmaceutical Whitley council on 25 June it was agreed that the management side's clarification of its final offer of 10 April should be sent to the staff side in writing. Staff side would then put this letter, together with the final offer, to a ballot of its members. The management side letter was sent on 30 June. A response from the staff side is awaited.

Medicines Inspectorate

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the numbers and grades of staff lost from the medicines inspectorate within the last 24 months (a) by transfers to other posts within the Department of Health and Social Security and (b) to posts outside the Civil Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the past two years one officer at grade 6 transferred to other pharmaceutical work within the Civil Service. One officer at principal pharmaceutical officer grade transferred on promotion to another post within medicines division. Two officers at principal pharmaceutical officer grade left the Civil Service. Three officers at pharmaceutical officer grade 1 left the Civil Service.

NHS (Wages and Salaries)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the total funds made available for the National Health Service goes in wages and salaries; and what information he has about how this figure compares with other European Community countries.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Bexley Health Authority

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received from Bexley health authority regarding the future financing of the authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: None.

War Pensions

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what way, and for how long, the war pensions are affected of a person in receipt of (a) a war disability and (b) war retirement pension, who is sent to prison.

Mr. Major: Payments of war disablement pension are normally suspended during imprisonment following conviction. If the war pensioner is married, half the basic pension plus the dependency allowance is normally paid to his wife. On release the pension is usually restored and arrears of one year's basic pension (or arrears for the period of imprisonment if less than a year) are paid, less any amount paid to his wife during the arrears period.

I assume that by "war retirement pension" the right hon. Member has in mind service pensions and service retired pay. These are not part of the war pensions provisions, but are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. I understand that his normal practice is to allow pensioners to retain these pensions during imprisonment.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details available to him of the waiting list for each specialty at hospitals in Coventry.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list for admission to NHS hospitals in Coventry at 31 December 1985 (provisional)*

Specialty	Number
Walsgrave General Hospital
Neurology	30
Cardiology	66
General surgery	1,232
ENT	650

Specialty	Number
Urology	332
Thoracic surgery	135
Neurosurgery	454
Gynaecology	828
Psychogeriatrics	35
Total	3,762
Coventry and Warwickshire Hospital
Traumatic and orthopaedic surgery	1,122
Oral surgery	231
Total	1,353
Gulson Hospital
Radiotherapy	14
Total	14
Whitley Hospital
Rheumatology	12
Total	12
Paybody Hospital
Ophthalmology	1,153
Total	1,153

* It should be noted that in certain specialties a hospital may maintain a waiting list which is common to more than one hospital within a district health authority.

Speech Therapy Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current provision of speech therapy services in the National Health Service as compared to (a) the National Health Service provision in 1979, (b) the private sector provision (c) the population's need for speech therapy and (d) the provision in other industrialised countries.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986]: In 1984, the latest year for which information is available centrally, there were about 286,000 attendances by in-patients and 541,000 attendances by out-patients at speech therapy departments at National Health Service hospitals in England. These represent increases of 44 per cent. in the numbers of in-patient cases treated and 39 per cent. in the number of out-patient attendances since 1979. At 30 September 1984, there were 2,150 (whole-time equivalents) speech therapists employed by district health authorities in England. That represents an increase of 42 per cent. over the 1,510 (whole-time equivalents) employed in 1979.

There are no generally agreed criteria for measuring need for speech therapy and no firm figures to show the prevalence of speech impairment in the population. However, speech therapists continued to extend the services they offer and the conditions they treat. The figures provided above show the importance health authorities attach to the improvement of their speech therapy services.

There is no information held centrally on the provision of speech therapy services in the private sector or in other industrialised countries.

Spectacles

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of patients entitled to complex lenses at cost price; and, of these, how many have actually received them at this price.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986]: The overall number of those entitled to help towards the cost of lenses defined as "complex" is not known. However, it is estimated that of the 2 per cent. of patients who were supplied with complex lenses under the general ophthalmic service in the year beginning 1 April 1985, some 5,700 (or 18·5 per cent.) purchased them at cost price.

Information is not available centrally on the number of patients for whom complex lenses were dispensed under the hospital eye service.

DEFENCE

Civilian Manpower

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the number of civilians employed at his Department's bases in the United Kingdom for each of the past seven years.

Mr. Lee: The number of civilians employed by the Ministry of Defence, including United Kingdom based and serving in the United Kingdom; United Kingdom based but serving overseas; and locally engaged overseas, is published in the statistical volume of the annual defence White Paper. The information requested which excludes United Kingdom based staff serving overseas and locally engaged staff is as follows:

Ministry of Defence Civilian Staff

Thousands

Financial Year	1 April
1980-81	233·6
1981-82	223·7
1982-83	211·2
1983-84	203·2
1984-85	193·7
*1985-86	168·6
1986-87	†164·8

* Excludes ROFs after transfer to independent Companies Act status on 2 January 1985.
† Estimate.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian employees at his Department's bases in the United Kingdom were made redundant last year; and what was the total redundancy payment made to these people.

Mr. Lee: The total number of staff made redundant in the Ministry of Defence during the period 1 January—31 December 1985 was 550. I am unable to provide exact details of the costs of these redundancies as some provisional payments are still to be finalised. However, the estimated cost is £2,805,682.

Commando Carriers

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has for the conversion of existing merchant ships into commando carriers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has for the construction of a commando carrier as a replacement for HMS Hermes.

Mr. Lee: The concept of an aviation support ship to provide the commando lift capability previously provided by HMS Hermes in her secondary role as commando carrier is under consideration within the context of our overall amphibious shipping studies.

Research and Development

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest annual figure for expenditure on military research and development and military equipment, respectively; what proportions of these expenditures were in the south of England, defined as south of a line from Bristol to the Wash; and what were the comparable figures for 1965 and 1975.

Mr. Lee: In 1986-87 MOD plans to spend £398 million, £1,940 million and £6,711 million in connection with the procurement of defence equipment on research, development and production respectively. Most of this is work carried out under contract, which could not without disproportionate effort be broken down by geographical region. A majority of the procurement executive's own units are however located in the south of England as defined by the hon. Member.

Tigerfish Torpedo

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the bringing into service of the Mk. 24 Tigerfish heavyweight torpedo.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 1 July at column 521-22 to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames).

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average useful life of a nuclear warhead on a United Kingdom missile.

Mr. Stanley: It would not be in the public interest to provide this information.

Fylingdales Installation

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the new phased array radar installation at Fylingdales will have the capacity to counter strategic ballistic missiles on their elements aimed at western Europe or north America.

Mr. Stanley: As I said in reply to the hon. Member on 26 June at column 321 the function of this radar is to provide early warning of a strategic ballistic missile attack on either the European or North American members of NATO. It does not have an anti-ballistic missile role.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 121-2, and 26 June, Official Report, column 321, on what criteria it has been determined that the existing radar installations at Fylingdales are owned by the United States Government, whereas the ownership of the modernised radar systems will be shared between both Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: In accordance with the memorandum of agreement dated 15 February 1960 concerning the establishment of a ballistic missle early warning station in the United Kingdom (Cmnd. 946), the ownership of the system is shared between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government. The radar equipment is the property of the United States Government, while the land and fixed supporting facilities belong to the Ministry of Defence. No change in these arrangements is envisaged as a result of the modernisation programme.

Royal Wedding

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost to his Department of providing security and ceremonial services at the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1986, c. 167]: The present estimate of the totalcost is some £12,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 9 July 1986

PRIME MINISTER

Commercial Information (Confidentiality)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list the bodies to which outside members are appointed where the Official Secrets Act is used to secure the confidentiality of commercial information received from sources outside Government and placed in the hands of the outside members; and if she will list the purpose of each such body.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, when appointments are made to the boards of non-departmental public bodies, Departments are responsible for bringing to the attention of candidates appropriate rules of conduct which take into account the nature of the body and its relationship to other organisations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Recorderships

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Attorney-General what criteria are applied by the Lord Chancellor when he decides not to renew recorderships.

The Attorney-General: Under section 21 of the Courts Act 1971 recordership is a part-time judicial office which is held for a specified term (usually about three years) and is renewable by the Lord Chancellor until the age of 72. Until then, the Lord Chancellor will normally renew the appointment provided that he is satisfied as to the recorder's continuing fitness for it, particularly with reference to his judicial performance and behaviour, and whether or not he has complied with the terms of his appointment. In making these decisions, the Lord Chancellor always acts after receiving advice in writing from officials and relevant presiding judges. This advice is based on consultations with the judiciary and the profession. The Lord Chancellor has in fact never decided not to renew a recordership except in accordance with such advice from officials and presiding judges. His overriding consideration, as with all judicial appointments, is always the maintenance of public confidence in the competence and independence of the judiciary, and in the integrity and impartiality of the administration of justice.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa (Famine)

92. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any new Commonwealth initiatives for the relief of famine in Africa.

Mr. Raison: I am not aware of any specifically Commonwealth initiatives.

South African Refugees

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans for increasing educational provision for refugees from South Africa.

Mr. Raison: We have put proposals to the Commonwealth Secretariat, which, if accepted by other Commonwealth Governments, would result in a new Commonwealth financed fellowship programme, which could include assistance for refugees.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Service Commissioner (Report)

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the annual report of the Health Service Commissioner for 1985-86.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Health Service Commissioner has, as in previous years, made a single report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Wales, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland have laid the report before the House today. It will be published tomorrow (HC 481) and copies will be available from the Vote Office.

Hospitals

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies have been carried out on the effects of hospital run-down on patients and staff and in the build-up of alternative services.

Mr. Whitney: For some years many of the studies commissioned by the Department in the fields of mental illness and mental handicap have been concerned with the effectiveness of community oriented services. They have compared the new forms of care for patients with more traditional services and looked at ways in which problems can be overcome.

Amongst other studies on services in these areas, these have included:

Evaluation of new services and of joint service planning for residents of Darenth Park.

The experience of direct care staff involved in the transfer of residents from Leybourne Grange to living in the community.

Evaluation of community care for mentally handicapped people in Wales.

Several studies based on the development of services for mentally ill people at Worcester and the replacement of the existing services provided by Powick hospital.

A building evaluation by the Department's building directorate.

A study of long stay patients in Goodmayes hospital.

Evaluation of the transition for patients at Friern hospital, from psychiatric hospital to district based services.

All these studies seek to assist in the complex tasks of planning and the provision of services, as care for those with mental illness or mental handicap becomes more firmly located in primary care settings.

Research Budget

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table, taking his Department's budget for research in 1981-82 as an index of 100, showing what has been the relative change in the index for each subsequent year.

Mr. Whitney: The Department funds a programme of research which includes social security, health and personal social services, computers, building and equipment for the National Health Service. National Health Service authorities also carry out research and we look to the much larger programme arranged by the Medical Research Council for bio-medical research.

The table requested is as follows:

	1981-82 = 100
1981-82	100
1982-83	95
1983-84	88
1984-85	77
1985-86	*78

RAWP Process

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for how many years he proposes to continue the resource allocation working party process.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government remain fully committed to the principle of securing equal opportunity of access to health care for people in equal need. The current review of the resource allocation working party formula is examining the scope for improving the measurement of need, to ensure that as regions approach their resource allocation working party targets these targets represent relative need as fairly as possible.

The long-term resource assumptions issued to health authorities in 1983 were aimed at achieving broad equity between regions by 1993-94. (There are wider disparities between districts, which will take longer to redress). Even when broad equity between health authorities is reached, there will remain a need for some continuing redistribution of resources to take account of population movements and changes in population needs.

Invalidity Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will extend invalidity allowance to include men aged 65 years and women aged 60 years and under in receipt of unemployability supplement or invalidity benefit; if he will estimate the cost of such a change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to extend invalidity allowance in the way outlined in the question. The estimated cost of such an extension is about £3 million in 1986-87.

Association of Crossroads Care Attendant Schemes

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reply is being sent to the director of the Association of Crossroads Care Attendant Schemes in reply to her letter of 20 June; if he will publish the correspondence between his Department and the director since 14 April in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I have today replied to the letter of 20 June from the director of the Association of Crossroads Care Attendant Schemes Ltd. and hope to meet her shortly. A number of letters have been exchanged since 14 April between the director and the Department on various subjects, and I do not believe it would be appropriate to publish such correspondence in the Official Report.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases he has before him for investigation as to whether a local authority is in breach of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act; how many cases there have been investigated since May 1979; and what is the shortest, median and longest period of time taken by his Department to conclude investigations of such cases since May 1979.

Mr. Newton: At present six complaints of alleged failure by a local authority to comply with section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 are under consideration.

Forty-one previous such complaints have been considered since May 1979. The shortest time taken to complete the necessary investigations was four weeks; the longest two years and four months; and the median is five months.

Pharmaceuticals (Product Licences)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the number of applications for parallel product licences for pharmaceuticals he has (a) granted and (b) received since March 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since the product licences (parallel importing) scheme was first introduced in May 1984, 2,940 licence applications have been received, 1,264 licences have been granted and altogether 2,302 applications (that is 78 per cent.) have been cleared. The working of the scheme itself is kept under continuous review.

During the period 1 March 1986 to 27 June 1986, 439 applications for product licences (parallel importing) were received and 360* licences were granted. Some 50 new applications are currently being submitted each week.

Note: * The licences granted include some in respect of applications received before 1 March 1986.

Medicines Inspectorate

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the capability of the Medicines Inspectorate to inspect overseas production facilities.

Mr. Hayhoe: Twenty-five per cent. of the Medicines Inspectorate on-site time is spent in overseas production facilities. There are no proposals in the 1986-87 annual programme for increasing this figure.

Geriatric Patients (Accommodation)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is the policy of his Department to provide accommodation where necessary to geriatric-type patients of less than 65 years of age.

Mr. Whitney: It is not clear whether my hon. Friend had primarily in mind younger physically disabled people or people suffering prematurely from dementia. In either case our policy is that a full range of services should be available in every health district or local authority area, including special accommodation, whether in hospital or elsewhere, where this is appropriate.

Sporting Accidents

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the number of fatal accidents and serious injuries, separately, for each of the last 10 years, in respect of (a) boxing, (b) rugby, (c) football, (d) motor racing and (e) horse racing.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the number of occasions in the last 10 years when, on a death certificate, the stated categories of sporting activity have been mentioned. The figures prior to 1982 are not strictly comparable with later years. It is regretted that no information is available centrally about non-fatal serious injuries.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the United Kingdom working group on breast cancer screening will make its final report.

Mr. Hayhoe: I expect to receive its final report this autumn.

Captain Balnave

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will expedite the payment to Captain Balnave of 23 Malvern road, Southsea, Portsmouth, awarded to him on appeal.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Assistance Applications (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department's Manchester offices are currently able to process applications for assistance within 14 days; what representations he has received relating to delays in processing applications; if he has any plans to seek to change the obligation to process applications within 14 days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Generally the Department's Manchester offices process claims for benefit within 14 days of their being referred to an adjudication officer. The exception at the moment is claims for single payments, which can be subject to delays. The offices have received a substantial rise in the number of such claims as a result of recent "take up" campaigns in the area.

I shall be replying in detail, in the next few days, to the five specific cases raised with my by the right hon. Member. No other specific representations have been made to me.

Current regulations provide that, so far as practicable, claims should be decided within 14 days of their reference to an adjudication officer. There are no plans to change this.

Hospital Staffing

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the outcome of the talks on hospital medical staffing which the Minister for Health has been holding with representatives of the Joint Consultants Committee, chairmen of regional health authorities and others.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am today publishing a consultative document on hospital medical staffing which has been agreed, as a basis for consultation, between the three parties to the talks. I believe that these proposals will lay the foundation for resolving the long-standing problems of the medical staffing of hospitals. This will be in the interests of both patients and doctors alike. Copies of the consultative document are being placed in the Library.

Invalid Care Allowance

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, following his statement on 23 June that invalid care allowance will in future be paid to married women, whether he is now able to announce his decison on the arrears that will be payable.

Mr. Fowler: On 23 June I told the House that invalid care allowance would in future be payable to married women, but that we would look at the question of arrears in the light of the impending judgment by the European Court in the case of Mrs. Jacqueline Drake. The judgment delivered on 24 June held that the exclusion of married women from invalid care allowance is contrary to the European Community's equal treatment directive, but said nothing about arrears. We have, however, decided in the interests of fairness that, provided the qualifying conditions are met, arrears should be payable back to December 1984, the date of implementation of the directive, on claims received before the end of 1986.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans for a comprehensive revision of forestry planting.

Mr. John MacKay: The policy on forestry planting remains as set out in the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) on 10 December 1980, at columns 927-28. There are no plans at present for a revision of that policy.

Students (Discretionary Awards)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the availability and take-up of discretionary awards for 16 to 18-year-olds in full-time education in Scotland, with special reference to the proportion of students in receipt of an award and the average value of awards granted, for each of the last three years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Education authorities in Scotland may at their discretion make awards to young people aged 16 and over to enable them to undertake courses of full-time education. In general, assistance is given in respect of courses other than those at first degree or postgraduate level, which attract awards from the Scottish Education Department.

In determining the amount payable in any particular case, education authorities must apply the rates and scales prescribed in the Education Authority Bursaries (Scotland) Regulations 1985.

A higher school bursary may be awarded to young persons aged 16 and over who stay on at school. Those who leave school and undertake full-time courses at further education establishments may be awarded a category A bursary (if aged 16 or 17) or a category B bursary (if aged 18 or over).

The following table sets out for each type of bursary the number and percentage of young people assisted and the average awards granted in each of the last three years for which the information is available.

Year	Number of awards	Total number at school aged 16 and over	Percentage of column 3 assisted	Average value of awards granted £

Local Government Finance

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the new closing date for submissions on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) asked for comments in Scotland to be sent in by 31 July 1986. This general closing date remains unchanged.

Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all directives issued in respect of Chapelcross nuclear power station since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 314]: No directives have been issued in respect of the Chapelcross licence.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received since 1979 from the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in respect of Chapelcross power station; which of these have been published; and what action has been taken to implement any recommendations in these reports.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 314]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 June, at columns 313-14. The implementation of recommendations made in the published quarterly reports is pursued by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and recorded as appropriate in subsequent reports.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual production of titanium and plutonium at Chapelcross in each year since 1979; and what has been the destination of this production in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 314]: The hon. Member is aware that the nuclear reactors at Chapelcross are available to meet defence requirements for nuclear materials. It would not, therefore, be in the national interest to reveal details of their production.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish, in tabular form, for each year since 1979 the number of mature students in higher education, the proportion they formed of total student numbers, and the total amount of mandatory or discretionary grant awards made at constant 1985-86 and at cash prices, for those students.

Mr. Walden: The number of home full-time and sandwich initial entrants aged 21 or more are given in the following table. Information in respect of maintenance expenditure for such students is not collected.

Mathematics and Science Teachers

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many mathematics and science teachers are on scale 2 posts and above; and what are the comparable figures for teachers of other subjects.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information derived from a survey of a sample of maintained secondary schools in England carried out by the Department in 1984 is as follows:

Full-time teachers	*All teachers teaching named subject		Teachers for whom named subject was most important teaching subject†

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish information available to him as to which local education authorities have tertiary colleges, indicating the names of these colleges within each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Richmond-upon-Thames
Richmond-upon-Thames College, Twickenham

Dudley
Halesowen College

Wolverhampton
Bilston College

Knowsley
Knowsley Central Tertiary College

Wigan
Leigh College
Wigan College

Yeovil College

In addition, New College Swindon operates under further education regulations but is not described as a tertiary college.

A further three tertiary colleges are due to open in September 1986 in South Bristol (Avon), Newcastle-under-Lyme (Staffordshire) and Consett (Durham).

Mr. Ron Davies: asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which education authorities have submitted plans for reorganisation which include tertiary colleges.

Mr. Dunn: Proposals for secondary reorganisation including tertiary colleges from Gateshead, Sheffield, South Tyneside, Sunderland, Essex and Oxfordshire local education authorities are currently before my right hon. Friend. In addition, proposals from Bury and Manchester have been approved and are awaiting implementation.

Mr. Ron Davies: asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his target staff:student ratios for (a) university higher education, (b) public sector higher education, and (c) non-advanced further education in the public sector.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend does not have a target for SSRs in the university sector, but has been pleased to note the improvements achieved in the last few years—to 1 : 10 : 3 in 1984.

The overall target SSR for the public sector of higher education recommended by the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education is 1 : 12. Good progress is being made towards this: by 1984 the SSR had reached 1 : 10·8, compared with 1 : 8·4 in 1979.

The derivation of a national SSR target for non-advanced further education (NAFE), and the pace of achieving it, are among the subjects under consideration by a joint group of DES, Welsh Office Education Department and local authority representatives, which is conducting a study of efficiency in NAFE.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the criteria used for planning the allocation of funding in both sectors of higher education; and if he will make a statement on the educational objectives served by the two systems of allocation of funds.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is advised on the planning and funding of higher education by the University Grants Committee and the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education. The UGC described the criteria used in its present planning exercise in letters to universities on 9 May 1985, 19 November 1985 and 20 May 1986. The approach adopted by the NAB was described in a note sent to local education authorities and colleges in December 1985. My right hon. Friend's predecessor wrote to the UGC on 30 January 1985 and to the NAB on 20 December 1985, offering guidance to inform their respective planning exercises. Copies of all these letters are in the Library.

On broader objectives, I refer the hon. Member to the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" published in May 1985.

In-service Training

Mr. Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will set out the national and local priorities, the subject priorities, the categories of training priorities, and the balance of funding between them under the terms of the proposed in-service training arrangement outlined in the draft circular of 12 June;

(2) what funds will be available for in-service training under the new arrangements proposed in the draft circular issued on 12 June for the year 1986-87;

(3) if he will express the funds available to finance the new proposed in-service training arrangements outlined in the draft circular of 12 June as a percentage of the estimated salary bill per teacher.

Mr. Chris Patten: As my right hon. Friend told the House on 10 June, at column 190, funds to be made available through the intended new scheme will be decided as part of the overall settlement of local authority expenditure for the coming year. He will then decide which areas should qualify as national priorities under the scheme.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the work of the Natural Environment Research Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Walden: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 28 July to 1 August 1986.

Welsh Plant Breeding Station

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to make any financial cuts in the Welsh plant breeding station at Gogerddan, Aberystwyth, in the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will provide an estimate for every year since 1978 of the number of people identified in statistics for the United Kingdom employed labour force as full-time employees and self-employed people who also have at least one part-time job;

(2) if he will provide estimates for every year since 1978 of the number of people in the United Kingdom with more than one part-time job.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not available in the exact form requested.

The regularly published employed labour force series does not identify persons with more than one job.

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis but allows the above analysis. Available estimates are presented in the following tables.

Table 1

Estimates of full-time† employees and self employed in the United Kingdom who also have a part-time† job*

000's

Year	Full-time employees	Self employed
1979	238	30

Year
1979	91
1981	127
1983	160
1984	253
1985‡	281

Notes:

* Estimates relate to the spring of each year. Figures for 1984 and 1985 exclude those on Government schemes, whereas earlier years include those on schemes if reported as in employment.

† The definition of full and part-time is based on the respondent's own assessment, not on the number of hours worked.

‡ Preliminary estimates.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will provide estimates for every year since 1978 of a list of the number of people in the United Kingdom who have at least one part-time or full-time job.

Mr. Trippier: The only consistent time series for the United Kingdom is the quarterly estimates of the employed labour force published in Employment Gazette. However, some people who have a second job as an employee are counted twice and their numbers are not separately identifiable. The estimates since 1978 are as follows:

Employed Labour Force in the United Kingdom in June each year

Year	000's
1978	24,999
1979	25,375
1980	25,306
1981	24,323
1982	23,894
1983	23,602
1984	24,065
1985	24,396

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis but is able to identify those who have a second job. Available estimates of persons in employment are presented in the following table.

Labour Force Survey Estimates of Persons in Employment in the United Kingdom*

Year	000's
1979	24,770
1981	24,152
1983	23,311
1984	23,617
1985†	23,823

* Estimates relate to the spring of each year. Figures for 1984 and 1985 exclude those on Government schemes, whereas earlier years include those on schemes if reported as in employment.

† Preliminary results.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what further funds will be made available specifically for technical and vocational education initiative related in-service training as a result of the expansion of technical and vocational education initiative into a national programme announced in Cmnd. 9823.

Mr. Trippier: TRIST will not receive further funding as a result of TVEI expansion. It will be replaced in 1987 (subject to enabling legislation) by a new scheme of specific grants to local authorities administered by the Education Departments. As pointed out in paragraph 3.14 of the White Paper, the resources available under the new in-service training scheme are to be spent on training to meet needs of the greatest national and local priority, including the extension of TVEI.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Earnings and Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will publish the annual figures earnings and labour costs per unit of output since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

Annual figures since 1979 for average earnings and for unit labour costs are given in tables 5.6 and 5.7 respectively of the July 1986 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Persons (Arrests)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of persons aged under 18 years and of no fixed abode who were arrested in Greater London in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally an could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Babies (Prisons)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies were received into prison accompanying their mothers in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Eighteen in the year ending 30 June 1986. Twenty four babies joined their mothers in prison at a later stage and 59 babies returned with their mothers to prison after being born in an outside hospital. One baby was born in Holloway.

Water Cannon

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation his Department has carried out on the Amac One water cannon vehicle; and what involvement his Department's officials had in design discussions with, and assistance to, the manufacturers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Our officials have not evaluated any AMAC vehicle nore have they given any advice or assistance on design to the manufacturers.

Reward System

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards exist to stop possible abuse of the reward system by (i) members of the public, and (ii) police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is an offence for any person in any way to counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime. It is open to a person who believes that a reward has been improperly offered or paid to bring that matter to attention.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his meeting on 30 June with the Joint Committee Against Racialism on the matter of racial attacks; and whether any of its recommendations are to be implemented.

Mr. Hurd: I had a constructive and helpful meeting with the Joint Committee Against Racialism. I share its view that racial attacks require particular attention from the police. We discussed the ways in which the police are giving increased attention to this problem, and ways of further improving the effectiveness of that response. I am considering a number of specific suggestions put forward by the committee.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the audit and logging procedures currently used with the police national computer; and whether, in cases of abuse, these procedures would identify the officer who performed the check and the number of requests made by that officer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All police national computer transactions have always been recorded centrally on magnetic tape by the computer. These records indicate the time of the transaction as well as the terminal from which it originated. It has recently become possible to record centrally also the identity of the originator of any inquiry and the reasons for the inquiry.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those constabularies that have, or intend to have, an interface with the police national computer; and if he will indicate whether the linkage is to a computer used for command and control or criminal information or both.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following police forces in England and Wales have a direct link to the police national computer through their own force computer system(s):

Force	Command and control	Criminal information systems
Avon and Somerset	Yes	—
Bedfordshire	Yes	—

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of accesses in, and the maximum and minimum number of entries, in the last year to current number of entries, for each index of the police national computer over the last year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The total number of accesses and the maximum and minimum number of entries in the year to June 1986 and the current number of entries for each substantive index of the police national computer are as follows:

Index	Number of Accesses	Maximum Number of Entries	Minimum Number of Entries	Current Number of Entries
1. Stolen and Suspected Vehicles	19,489,664	390,692	349,916	380,925
2. Vehicle Owners		38,146,538	35,646,695	38,146,538
3. Chassis (Engine Numbers)	948,899	644,411	534,633	644,411
4. Fingerprints	210,253	3,655,730	3,516,722	3,655,730

Index	Number of Accesses	Maximum Number of Entries	Minimum Number of Entries	Current Number of Entries
5. Fingerprints Scene of Crime	16,224	6,628,252	6,240,783	6,628,252
6. Criminal Names	1,108,803	5,119,354	4,977,206	6,628,252
7. Wanted (Missing Persons)	1,549,034	112,922	104,123	104,123
8. Disqualified Drivers	675,263	321,068	298,986	314,163
9. Convictions	18,539	1,170,432	478,391	1,170,432
10. Major Investigations	87,461	118,974	103,000	118,944

There have also been the following joint accesses:

to indices 6 and 7—1,450,986
to indices 6, 7 and 8—5,657,324
to indices 4 and 6—459,947

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the current number, the maximum number and minimum number of entries for each of the sub-categories of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer over the last year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of entries in each of the sub-categories of the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer as of 21 June, together with the maximum and minimum number of entries for the previous 12 months, is as follows:

Sub Category	21 June 1986	Maximum in last 12 months	Minimum in last 12 months
Lost or stolen	289,705	289,705	259,120
Obtained by deception	575	595	533
Found or apparently abandoned	24,435	25,873	21,554
Removed into police custody	11,997	12,225	10,233
Removed by police from one street to another	344	563	183
Repossessed by finance company	93	112	76
Suspected of being involved in a particular incident, for example: crime	3,341	3,520	3,299
Owned or used by police	6,102	6,220	6,102
Of interest to the police, for example: owned by known criminals or by missing persons	30,827	35,391	30,827
Seen or checked by the police in note-worthy circumstances: for example at night in an area where a series of crime is under investigation	10,824	13,666	10,813
Details not to be passed over open radio for example: police vehicles used in observation duties	4,283	4,369	3,845

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the current number, the maximum number and minimum number of entries for each of the sub-categories of the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer over the last year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The current, maximum and minimum number of entries for each of the sub-categories of the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer for the 12-month period ending June 1986 are as follows:

Sub-category	June 1986	Maximum	Minimum
Wanted persons	30,838	30,838	27,762
Failed to appear in court	20,079	20,228	19,468

Drugs

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the trend in the street price of illegal drugs, including cannabis, heroin and cocaine over the last three years; and if he will seek to monitor such changes as an indication of the extent to which importation and distribution of illegal drugs are being prevented by the work of the Government Departments concerned.

Mr. Mellor: The information collated by the national drugs intelligence unit suggests that since the beginning of 1984 there has been little change in the mean prices of illicit heroin and cannabis resin, whereas that of cocaine appears to have risen slightly. Street prices are one of a number of indicators which we monitor as part of our continuing assessment of the drug misuse situation.

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the cost of rectifying the faults in the building of new kitchens at Wormwood Scrubs;

(2) what was the nature of the problems encountered in the construction of new kitchens at Wormwood Scrubs.

Mr. Mellor: A proposed new kitchen was built as part of a redevelopment programme started in 1982.

Subsequently the decision to retain the chapel, the demolition of which was envisaged under the original redevelopment plan, together with population pressures restricting the amount of accommodation at the prison that could be taken out of use at one time, led to the abandonment of the scheme and the formulation of an alternative. Under the new plan the kitchen, which has never been used for its intended purpose, will be used instead as a laundry and for prison industries.

Community Radio

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cable based community radio stations now operating under the experimental arrangements begun in 1978; what arrangements exist to ensure that they observe acceptable standards of objectivity and decency; and when the results of this experiment are to be reviewed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since part I of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 came into force on 1 January 1985 all licensable cable programme services, including those established under the arrangements in 1978, have been subject to regulation by the Cable Authority and have ceased to be regarded as experimental. We understand from the authority that of those cable radio services established under the 1978 arrangements Milton Keynes and Thamesmead are still operating. In common with all licensed services the authority is required by section 10 of the Act to do all that it can to secure that these services include nothing which offends against good taste or decency and that all news given (in whatever form) in programmes which originate in the United Kingdom is presented with due accuracy and impartiality.

Radio Thamesmead

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria were used in granting Radio Thamesmead a special events licence; and how the use of that licence will be supervised.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Radio Thamesmead applied for an experimental special event licence to broadcast to the site of the Thamesmead town show from 24-26 August. The application satisfied the criteria set out in the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 28 January 1986, at column 486, relating as it did to a recognised event of not more than two weeks' duration at a single site. Equipment used under any special event licence may be inspected, and transmissions monitored, with a view to ensuring that the conditions included in the licence are followed.

Roy Percy Steptiford

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why no reply has been received by Ashford, Sparkes and Harward, solicitors in Tiverton, acting for Roy Percy Steptiford, to their letter, dated 30 April to his Department's Prison Department; and why neither reply nor acknowledgement has been received to the follow-up letter, dated 10 June, asking why no reply had been received to the earlier letter; and what action he proposes to take in this matter, and when.

Mr. Mellor: Inquiries into the matter raised by Messrs Ashford, Sparkes and Harward in their letter of 30 April 1986 took longer than foreseen, but a full reply has now been sent. We regret the failure to acknowledge the solicitors' letters in this case and will examine carefully the implications for our procedures for handling such correspondence.

Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review by the Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales of county electoral divisions in Clwyd to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales had hoped to submit final proposals on new county electoral divisions in Clwyd to me in June 1987. However, it has not yet received draft proposals from Clwyd county council and therefore cannot say whether it will be possible to adhere to this timetable.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the effect of privatisation of water authorities on drinking water.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's proposals for privatising the water authorities in England and Wales were set out in the White Paper (Cmnd. 9734) published in February. This dealt, amongst other things, with the quality of drinking water. My Department has to date received 337 representations on the White Paper, which include comments on this aspect as on others.

Land Sales

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to direct the sale of land by public bodies and statutory authorities other than local authorities, once that land has been included on the land register for a year.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has powers under part X of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 to direct public bodies, as defined in schedule 16 to that Act, to take steps to dispose of their interest in any land which is entered on the land register. Disposal of land surplus to the requirements of Government Departments is the responsibility of the relevant Minister.

For last year's public expenditure survey Departments drew up plans with the general aim of disposing, wherever possible, of land then declared to be surplus by 1 April 1988. These plans are being revised in the course of this year's survey. Nationalised industries have a commercial incentive to dispose of surplus assets, including land.

Expenditure Limits

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make orders under section 48(5) of the Local Government Act 1985 to set limits for expenditure in any year by the London boroughs grant scheme and similar schemes elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: No. My right hon. Friend has decided that orders are not necessary for 1986-87. Where collective schemes have been established they are already operating on the basis of agreed budgets. My right hon. Friend would, however, reconsider this decision should any scheme propose to increase its budget significantly in the course of this financial year. For the moment, my right hon. Friend has come to no conclusion on whether orders will be needed for 1987-88.

Community Programme

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement as to the cost of and the results gained from the two pilot comprehensive community programmes in Bradford and Gateshead funded under the urban programme.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 30 June, at column 367.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details by year for total European regional development fund moneys for the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Tracey: The amount of grant-aid awarded to local and public authorities carrying out infrastructure works under the European regional development funds is as follows:

1975	—
1976	—
1977	—
1978	—
1979	27,600
1980	159,600
1981	—
1982	78,000
1983	—
1984	—
1986	—

The figures exclude ERDF grant-aid committed to the Mersey basin programme, which is expected to benefit the Trafford area. They also exclude grant awarded to schemes under the fund's industry section, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Privately Rented Housing

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the Government's policy towards the privately rented housing sector and the Rent Act.

Mr. John Patten: Our policy continues to be to encourage a healthy and responsible private rented sector which can play a greater role in meeting housing needs. We want to improve the quality of accommodation available to those seeking rented homes, while allowing landlords reasonable returns on their investments. As my right hon. Friend, the Member for Wanstead and Woodford told the House on 12 June 1985, at column 890, when he was Secretary of State for the Environment, we hope to introduce legislation to encourage the supply of more homes for renting in the private sector, but probably not during the lifetime of this Parliament.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now allow local authorities to spend in excess of 20 per cent. of their capital receipts.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham East (Mr. Moynihan) on 20 November, at column 246, and to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 18 April, at column 508. Only housing receipts are subject to a prescribed proportion of 20 per cent.; the proportion for other receipts is generally 30 per cent.

Housing Starts

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of public sector housing starts in England and Wales during the current year; what is the likely estimate of the total number of such starts for the year; and if he will give the comparable figures for 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Joh Patten: The provisional number of public sector housing starts in England in January to May 1986 and the corresponding figure for 1985, together with the annual figures for 1984 and 1985, were published in table 2 of my Department's press notice No. 363 issued on 3 July; a copy is in the Library. In January to May 1984 there were 17,700 public sector starts in England. It is not the practice to make forecasts of housebuilding.

For information on housebuilding in Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

94. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place a paper in the Library setting out details of Anglo-South African trade and of the British jobs dependent on that trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: The published trade statistics are already in the Library and show that South Africa remains a major trading partner of the United Kingdom. Furthermore, my hon. Friend will have noted from my recent answers to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 23 June 1986, at column 41, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend East (Mr. Taylor) on 24 June, at column 142, that a large number of jobs are involved in that trade, with certain sectors particularly vulnerable to any disruption.

European Community (Internal Market)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives Her Majesty's Government will be taking in the Presidency of the Council of the European Community towards an improved internal market.

Mr. Alan Clark: It will be a major priority of the United Kingdom Presidency to tackle barriers to trade within the Community. In particular we will be seeking to make maximum progress in implementing the new Presidency acion programme, 1 July 1986 to 1 July 1987. The programme includes some 149 individual proposals for consideration by the Council during this period, details of which I gave in my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 25 June, at columns 174-78. Priority areas for action include the creation of a free market in financial services and the transport sector; the liberalisation of capital movements; freedom of establishment for the professions; the removal of technical barriers to trade, for example, in the field of product standards; and the removal of physical barriers to the free movement of goods through simplification of frontier formalities.

Schools (Micro-computers)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of micro-computers for schools.

Mr. Pattie: My Department continues to take a close interest in the development of the use of micro-computers in schools. I wish to see the United Kingdom maintain and extend its excellent record in this area.

We are therefore willing to provide support for further development on a selective basis, though the direct responsibility for computer provision rests with the local education authorities and individual schools. At present, we are providing £3·5 million over three years to enable LEAs and schools to purchase more educational software and a further £1 million over the same period to investigate the use of interactive video technology, building in such cases on the successful example of the micros in schools schemes. We have also recently provided each middle and secondary school in the United Kingdom with a free modem, enabling them to explore the use of databases through a microcomputer. We will consider further support as opportunities and needs arise.

Competition Policy

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding competition policy.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend and I receive regular representations on many aspects of competition policy. On 5 June my right hon. Friend announced a review of law and policy on mergers and restrictive trade practices and invited interested parties to contribute their views in the first instance by the end of July.

Clothing and Textiles

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he accounts for the decline in both clothing and textile production in the first quarter of 1986; and what steps he is taking to seek to reverse this.

Mr. Peter Morrison: According to the latest provisional figures, clothing production in Q1 1986 was 8 per cent. below Q4 1985 and under 1 per cent. below Q1 1985. For textiles, production was less than 1 per cent. below Q4 1985 but 2 per cent. above Q1 1985. It is therefore too early to treat the fall in the first quarter of 1986 as a genuine decline in either industry.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in view of rising imports, falling exports and an increased trading deficit in the textile and clothing industry for the quarter ended 31 March, he will launch a new financial initiative to seek to stimulate the industry and preserve employment by large-scale investment in the latest generation of British-made textile and clothing machinery.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Schemes of investment assistance aimed specifically at the present clothing and textile industry are not permitted under present European Community policy. However, companies in the industry can apply for assistance under the Department's national schemes of support and also through its regional schemes aimed at projects safeguarding and creating new jobs. In April this year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced a scheme to assist universities, polytechnics and colleges with the purchase of advanced clothing and textile machinery with a view to improving the facilities for training entrants to the industry.

British Steel

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the financial results for British Steel for each of the last six years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The British Steel Corporation's annual accounts, published yesterday, show a profit—loss on ordinary activities after interest but before exceptional items as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	−660
1981-82	−327
1982-83	−383
1983-84	−174
1984-85	−114
1985-86	+ 76

The figure for 1984-85 reflects the cost of the miners' strike, estimated to be £180 million.

This run of results demonstrates extremely encouraging progress and reflects great credit on the chairmen, Board and work force of the corporation.

DEFENCE

Amphibious Forces

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his decision as to the future of the United Kingdom's amphibious forces.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to what was said by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 1 July during the debate on the defence Estimates at column 859.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Britain's amphibious vessel force, including assault ships HMS Intrepid and HMS Fearless.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to what was said on this matter in the debate on the defence Estimates on 1 July by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement at column 859 and by myself at column 916.

NATO Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear warheads are currently deployed in Europe by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what has been the trend in numbers deployed since 1945.

Mr. Stanley: In 1979, NATO Defence Ministers agreed to reduce by 1,000 the number of NATO nuclear warheads stockpiled in Europe and, additionally, to withdraw one warhead for every cruise and Pershing II warhead introduced into Europe as a result of their decision to modernise NATO's long range intermediate nuclear forces (LRINF). In 1983, at their meeting in Montebello, the Ministers decided to reduce the stockpile by a further 1,400 warheads. These two actions together, when fully implemented, will bring the NATO nuclear stockpile in Europe to its lowest level for over 20 years. The number of NATO nuclear warheads deployed in Europe is classified, but the number of NATO LRINF and SRINF systems with nuclear or nuclear capable variants is set out in figures 14 and 15 of annex A to Volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-1).

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the arrangements for meeting the expenses of the sale of Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Lee: Parliamentary approval for preliminary expenses in 1985-86 was given in a winter Supplementary estimate for class I, vote 6 (HC 9). It was intended that expenses in 1986-87 would be met by receipts from the sale and parliamentary approval for expenditure in the current year has been sought in Supply Estimates for class I, vote 6 (HC 284-I). A Supplementary Estimate will, if necessary, be presented later in the year to seek substantive provision for such expenses as may be incurred. Pending approval of these Estimates, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

ENERGY

Severn Tidal Power Group

19. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he plans to publish the feasibility study of the Severn Tidal Power Group.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1986, c. 333]: The Severn Tidal Power Group is publishing its report today, and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I am determined that we shall fully explore the possibilities of any energy resource which has the potential to extend the diversity of our energy supplies. No Government have done more to support research into renewable sources, including record spending on wind, geothermal hot dry rocks, and the tidal resource.

Tidal energy is one of our most promising renewble energy resources. The Severn barrage could theoretically provide 5 per cent. of the United Kingdom's current electricity requirement. We must quickly discover the extent to which it is technically viable and could make an economic and significant contribution to electricity supply.

I am therefore delighted to announce that, together with interested parties, my Department is to launch a further programme, costing nearly £5·5 million, aimed at reducing uncertainty on costs, performance, and regional and environmental issues.

This will include:

—advanced investigations and site exploration of a Severn barrage on a line near to Cardiff and Weston. My Department, the CEGB, and the Severn Tidal Power Group will share equally the £4·2 million cost;

—a grant from my Department of up to £400,000 towards the cost of studies into a Mersey barrage proposed by the Mersey Barrage Company. This will be reduced by the amount of any support received from other sources, such as the European regional development fund. The Merseyside and North Wales electricity Board will be participating in the studies, and the CEGB will also contribute substantial amounts of expertise; — generic studies funded by my Department, including construction techniques and the potential of small sites around the United Kingdom, costing approximately £300,000.

This collaborative programme should reduce uncertainty to the point where it will be possible to make decisions on whether or not to plan for construction.

Oil Embargo

96. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those countries against which the United Kingdom maintains an oil embargo.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Her Majesty's Government's guidance to companies exporting North sea crude oil is that they should do so only in the markets of our partners in the European Community and the International Energy Agency, or where there is an existing pattern of trade outside these areas (in practice, Finland and certain Caribbean destinations only). Exports to all destinations outside these three groups are precluded by this policy.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the numbers, type and date of cases under the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 in which a section 42 certificate has been issued since 1976; and if he will state the religion of the complainant and name of the respondent in each case.

Mr. Scott: The recorded number of section 42 certificates signed by Northern Ireland Office Ministers in each year since 1976 is as follows:

	Number
1976	0
1977	1
1978	3
1979	0
1980	1
1981	3
1982	0
1983	2
1984*	3
1985	1
1986†	1

*These three certificates proved to be defective and three fresh certificates were issued in July 1985.

†To 25 June.

All of the complainants involved are believed to have been Roman Catholics. Nine cases involved either the Northern Ireland Office or Northern Ireland Departments, whilst the other six involved public bodies in Northern Ireland.

Section 42 certificates may also be signed by other Government Ministers with departmental responsibilities in Northern Ireland.

Action for Jobs Campaign

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the action for jobs campaign in the Province.

Dr. Boyson: The aim of the action for jobs campaign in Northern Ireland, which was launched on 24 June, is to provide comprehensive information about the wide range of employment training and enterprise programmes which are available in the Province. Between them, these programmes are providing more than 15,000 jobs and 34,000 training places this year. Full details of all the measures are provided in the new booklet, "Action for Jobs in Northern Ireland" which is being distributed widely throughout the Province and publicised in a major advertising campaign. A copy of this booklet has been placed in the Library.

Companies

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many companies were (a) registered and (b) wound up in the Province during the last year for which figures are available; what were the equivalent figures for each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The figures for 1986 and 1985 are for the 12 months ending 31 March; the other figures are for calendar years.

Year	New Companies registered	Companies wound up	Companies no longer in operation struck off the Register
1986	990	117	698
1985	953	109	430
1984	906	120	323
1983	820	123	267
1982	907	69	189
1981	629	67	256
1980	608	58	87
1979	735	50	451
1978	812	58	—
1977	752	58	187
1976	616	62	343
1975	568	41	174

The increasing number of new companies being registered demonstrates that a strong spirit of enterprise exists in Northern Ireland. Government action is focused on encouraging this spirit and on strengthening the small business sector and promoting its expansion and development.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Internal Market)

95. Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the ad hoc group on the internal market will report to the European Economic Community Council.

Mr. Brooke: The report of the ad hoc group on removal of fiscal barriers was presented to the council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 16 June. The outcome of the Council's discussion of the group's report is recorded in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 20 June at column 646.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any special arrangements have been made for the taxation of the profits arising from the operation of the Channel fixed link.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Agreement has been reached at official level between the two Governments that the United Kingdom and French concessionaires should each be liable to tax on its share of the profits only in the country in which it is resident. This means that the United Kingdom concessionaire will be exempt from French tax on the profits arising to it from the operation of the link, in much the same way as United Kingdom shipping companies and airlines are exempt from French tax under the United Kingdom/France double taxation convention. A provision to this effect will be included in a protocol to the convention, subject to parliamentary approval in the two countries.

Among other provisions to be included in this protocol are two which may be relevant to the link. Interest, which is ordinarily subject to a maximum withholding rate of 10 per cent. under the existing convention, will in general be exempted from tax in the country from which it is paid; and approved pension funds will become entitled to relief under the convention on their investment income.

Expenditure Increases

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer, 11 June, Official Report, column 198, if he will now authorise the undertaking of an analysis of the relative impact on the least well-off in the United Kingdom of a £1 billion increase in expenditure on (a) measures to reduce unemployment, (b) child benefit, (c) introduction of a reduced tax rate band, (d) personal allowances and (e) a cut in the standard rate of income tax by 1 pence to 29 pence.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

EC Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will tabulate information available to him on the assessed base, in mecu and pound sterling, for each of the 12 member states of the European Economic Community for the year 1986, together with the unadjusted rate of that base levied, to three places of decimals, together with the equivalent sum, in mecu and pound sterling, to be paid by Her Majesty's Government to the European Economic Community, on the basis of the Council budget, expressing that sum as an approximate percentage of income likely to accrue from domestic value added tax in 1986;

(2) if he will state the approximate sum, without adjustment, which would need to be paid by Her Majesty's Government in respect of own resources value added tax assessment levied at a rate of 1·4 per cent. of the base, together with the approximate percentage that sum constitutes of the likely income from value added tax in the United Kingdom during 1986.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The Economic and Finance Council met in Brussels on 7 July. I chaired the meeting, which was the first of the United Kingdom Presidency of the Community. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury, represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the economic situation in the Community, and agreed that the policy guidelines set out in the 1985-86 annual economic report need not be changed. The Council also took note of the Commission's budgetary guidelines for individual member states for the forthcoming year.

The main business of the Council concerned the 1986 Community budget and the reference framework, in the light of the Commission's rectifying letter and the judgment of the European Court of Justice, which upheld the Council's contention that the European Parliament had acted illegally. The Council agreed, by a qualified majority, on conclusions relating to the budgetary situation in the current year. The main points of these conclusions were:

(a) following the European Court's judgment, a new 1986 budget should be established as quickly as possible;

(b) in the circumstances, the reference framework spending limits for 1986 could be raised;

(c) the Budget Council should determine the precise figures. In doing so, the Budget Council should limit the increase for agricultural spending in 1986 to amounts which can be justified mainly by the exceptional circumstance of the abnormally large depreciation of the dollar, and should examine the scope for economies in all areas of expenditure.

These conclusions were conveyed to the Budget Council, which met immediately after the Finance Council.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Incomes (Rating)

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the rating of agricultural land or buildings for farm incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I estimate that, after allowing for tax relief, the rating of agricultural land and buildings might bring about a net reduction in total farm incomes of some £250 million. This represents approximately 22 per cent. of forecast farming income in 1985.

However, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has made clear, the Government have no plans to re-rate agricultural land and buildings.

Lamb Prices

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he estimates to be the effect on long-term lamb prices of his order restricting the movement of sheep in north Wales and Cumbria.

Mr. Jopling: It is clearly too early to make such an assessment. But there are encouraging signs so far on prices and I would hope that there will be little or no long-term impact.

River Pollution

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, by water authority, the number of cases of river pollution resulting from farm silage effluent that were reported by his Department's farm waste unit in each of the years 1980 to 1984.

Mrs. Fenner: The number of pollution incidents resulting from farm silage effluent reported by each water authority in England and Wales to my Department's farm waste unit in each of the years 1980 to 1984 were:—

Water Authority	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Anglian	21	22	12	13	32
Northumbrian	22	2	3	14	15
North-West	178	292	65	145	121
Severn Trent	76	57	43	122	117
Southern	8	21	17	22	38
South-West	14	41	23	83	56
Thames	19	22	32	56	44
Welsh	6	31	15	75	74
Wessex	12	48	145	25	46
Yorkshire	20	41	18	20	30
TOTAL	376	577	373	575	573

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of river pollution resulting from fish farming operations have been reported to his Department in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: No specific cases of river pollution resulting from fish farming operations have been reported to my Department.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the mechanism for members of the Food Advisory Committee who wish to receive permission to disclose information received in the course of their duties which is not otherwise to be disclosed; to whom applications for permission are to be made; and on how many occasions in each of the last five years such permission has been (a) sought and (b) granted;

(2) what is his policy towards instances of unauthorised disclosure of information by members of the Food Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Members of the Food Advisory Committee who wished to disclose information received in the course of their work for the committee would seek authority from the committee's administrative secretary. No such authority has been sought in the past five years. In the unlikely event of an unauthorised disclosure I would expect to deal with this by a disciplinary procedure.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he uses the Official Secrets Act as the basis for securing the commercial confidentiality of commercially sensitive information submitted to the Food Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Members of the Food Advisory Committee are told on appointment that where appropriate they must observe the confidentiality of information passed to them as part of their duties on that committee. It is the Official Secrets Act that makes it an offence to disclose such information without authority.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in discussions with the British Library to ensure that all information submitted to the Food Advisory Committee relating to safety is placed there; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Agreement has been reached with the British Library for the placing there of toxicological data which are cited in the published reports of the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food consumer products and the environment and which are included in reports of the Food Advisory Committee. My officials are in the process of writing to organisations about this.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current composition of the Food Advisory Committee; and if he will give the background and source of nomination of each member.

Mrs. Fenner: A copy of my Department's press notice No. 318 of 8 November 1985 which contains details of the current membership of the Food Advisory Committee has been placed in the Library of the House. The members of the committee were appointed personally in the light of their individual expertise; they were not appointed on the basis of nomination from particular organisations.

Pelagic Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to publish the findings of his study into the use of freezer vessels for pelagic fishing.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) on 12 June, at column 489.

Cereal Producers

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to include all cereal producers, including integrated cereal/livestock producers, in the United Kingdom arrangements for the European Economic Community cereals co-responsibility levy; if he will also make it his policy not to grant any examptions to this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986]: The Council of Agriculture Ministers agreed that the cereals co-responsibility levy should be payable on Community-grown cereals which are exported to non-Community countries, bought into intervention or which undergo first stage processing. The Council also agreed that operations exempt from the levy should be decided by management committee procedure. In accordance with this the Commission implementing regulations exempt from levy those first stage processing operations carried out by a producer on his agricultural holding where the product obtained is used on that holding for animal feed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

14. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Economic Community Council will next discuss action against South Africa to remove apartheid.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle), Foreign Ministers of the Twelve regularly discuss the situation in South Africa, most recently in The Hague on 26 and 27 June. They are expected to do so again later this month.

20. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of European Economic Community political co-operation on events in South Africa.

27. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effective measures have now been taken by European Economic Community member states against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: The policy of the Twelve towards South Africa, as set out in the agreement adopted at Luxembourg on 10 September 1985, the EC/Front Line States joint communiqué adopted in Lusaka on 4 February and, most recently, the agreement reached at the meeting of the European Council in The Hague on 27 June, is designed to hasten the process of peaceful reform and to encourage the South African Government to begin a dialogue with genuine representatives of the black population. We believe that the position of the Twelve is a factor which the South African Government have to take into account.

21. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action against South Africa was agreed by the European Economic Community at the end of June; and if he will make a statement.

22. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have so far been agreed by European Economic Community member states against South Africa; and what further action is to be taken.

32. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by the European Economic Community Council in view of the situation in South Africa; and what further measures are proposed.

38. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will propose at the next European Economic Community Council further measures against South Africa.

74. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures are to be taken by European Economic Community member states against South Africa.

80. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures are to be taken by the European Economic Community member states against South Africa as a result of the meeting at the end of June.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Members to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 1 July.

23. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from British financial institutions on the desirability or otherwise of financial sanctions on South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Like many other organisations and individuals, representatives of financial institutions continue to make known to us their views on the question of measures against South Africa.

28. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with South Africa.

68. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. Mackenzie).

33. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the South African Government on the recent passing of legislation which gives the security forces the power to detain people for 180 days without trial.

54. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent Government representations to the South African Government.

60. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made on the situation in South Africa.

71. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has taken any steps to persuade the South African Government to end the state of emergency.

Mrs. Chalker: On 25 June we made representations to the South African Government in Pretoria and London expressing deep concern at the restrictions imposed under the State of Emergency and at the detention without charge of community, church and trade union leaders. The Netherlands Government, acting on behalf of the Twelve, made a similar demarche to the South African authorities on 13 June.

35. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to make an official visit to South Africa.

91. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to seek to make an official visit to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently visiting Southern Africa in accordance with the mission entrusted to him at the recent European Council meeting at the Hague.

39. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his officials have met the Archbishop of Canterbury's envoy, Mr. Terry Waite, to obtain his views on the crisis in South Africa following his recent visit there.

Mrs. Chalker: Mr. Waite called on my right hon. and learned Friend and me on his return from South Africa to discuss his impressions of the visit.

40. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Economic Community Council will next discuss the situation in South Africa.

69. Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the European Heads of Government at their recent meeting supported mandatory economic sanctions.

79. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many European Economic Community member states are now in favour of economic measures against South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

81. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations he has had with other European Community Foreign Ministers concerning their and the Community's policies towards South Africa.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which European Economic Community member states now support Her Majesty's Government's opposition to economic sanctions against South Africa; and what further action the European Economic Community Council intends to take.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle).

43. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to co-ordinate action against South Africa by the European Economic Community Council and the Commonwealth.

Mrs. Chalker: In view of our unique position as member of both the European Community and the Commonwealth, we naturally have in mind views expressed in one forum when policy towards South Africa is discussed in the other.

44. Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the operation of the European Economic Community Ministers' code of conduct of European firms operating in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government attach great importance to the EC code of conduct, which was revised and strengthened by European Governments last year. Individual member states are responsible for encouraging adherence to the code by their national companies. We are satisfied that the vast majority of British companies comply with the requirements of the code.

49. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to trade which the United Kingdom could lose with Nigeria and the other African nations if sanctions against South Africa are not introduced.

Mrs. Chalker: In framing policy towards South Africa we are giving due consideration to all factors.

51. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Government have had with the front-line states concerning sanctions against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend attended the meeting between the Twelve and the front-line states in Lusaka from 3 to 4 February at which there was agreement on the importance of the measures which had been adopted at Luxembourg by the European Community states. Since then the Government have continued to consult closely with the front-line states, in particular during my recent visits to Africa and as the hon. Member will by now be aware, my right hon. and learned Friend is currently discussing the South African issue with the Government's of Zambia and Zimbabwe.

78. Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent contacts he has had with the Government of South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have had continuing contacts with the Government of South Africa, most recently in connection with my right hon. and learned Friend's intention to visit that country to carry out the mandate given him by the European Council.

93. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the progress he expects to be made before Her Majesty's Government will relax or withdraw measures which have been taken against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: As I have made clear on many occasions, our objective is to encourage dialogue between the South African Government and acknowleged opposition leaders in the context of a suspension of violence. The steps we might take to help this process are under constant review.

11. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has reveived advocating the use of economic sanctions against South Africa.

70. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations asking for sanctions against South Africa he has received since May; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick).

Falkland Islands

17. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made concerning a multilateral fishing régime around the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

85. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to stop the excessive fishing around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: The United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation expects to circulate later this summer a technical study of the South West Atlantic fishery. This is an essential preliminary step to the establishment of a multilaterally-agreed coservation and management regime.

26. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding proposals for the resettlement of Falklanders.

Mr. Eggar: None. The attachment of the Islanders to their way of life and homes in the Falklands has repeatedly been made clear.

Romania

18. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Romania.

Mr. Renton: Relations with Romania are good though there are naturally matters about which our two Governments disagree. My right hon. and learned Friend visited Bucharest in February 1985. I myself was in Romania in May of this year, and we hope to welcome the Romanian Deputy Foreign Minister to London in the autumn for political consultations.

Afghanistan

19. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to discuss Afghanistan with the Soviet Foreign Minister on 14 and 15 July.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend will be discussing a full range of arms control, regional, human rigts, and bilateral issues with Mr. Shevardnadze. He will certainly wish to raise with Mr. Shevardnadze the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

57. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has, during the British presidency of the European Community, to ensure continuing European recognition of, and help for, the Afghan people.

Mr. Eggar: During our presidency, we shall work to ensure that the plight of the Afghan people is not forgotten, nor their need for sustained humanitarian assistance.

Economic Sanctions

24. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his criteria in deciding whether to impose economic sanctions against any country.

Mrs. Chalker: Such decisions can only be taken in the light of the specific circumstances applicable at the time. There are no set criteria.

45. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will publish an assessment of the effectiveness of every case of the imposition of international economic sanctions in recent times.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

USSR (Human Rights)

25. Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during his meetings with the Soviet Minister for Foreign Affairs later this month, he will seek clarification of Soviet policy towards those citizens of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics who wish to emigrate in accordance with international treaties to which the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is a signatory.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen). The Soviet Union has clear international commitments, of which we shall remind them, to allow those of its citizens who wish to emigrate to do so.

41. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to raise human rights questions with the Soviet Foreign Minister on 14 and 15 July.

53. Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he proposes to take on East-West relations in the course of the visit to London of the Soviet Foreign Minister on 14 and 15 July.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen).

Arab-Israeli Dispute

29. Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has during the British presidency of the European Community to contribute to the continuing search for a settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute.

46. Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to take any initiative regarding the middle east peace discussions during his period as President of the European Economic Community Foreign Ministers.

59. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, now that he has assumed the presidency of the European Community Council, he has any proposals to put to the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to resolve the Israel/Palestine question.

Mr. Renton: We and our European partners will continue to do all we can to support realistic initiatives towards a just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute.

Angola

30. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to implement the United Nations arms embargo on Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no such embargo.

Cyprus

31. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of Cyprus; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend last met the President of the Republic of Cyprus on 7 April, when they discussed the UN Secretary General's initiative on Cyprus.

Arms Control

34. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he is contemplating in the field of verification of arms control agreements.

Mr. Renton: We are actively seeking solutions to verification issues which are a key element in several current arms control negotiations. We are constantly reviewing the scope for new initiatives in this field.

37. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the policy of the Government towards proposals that the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union should reach a bilateral nuclear arms control agreement.

Mr. Renton: As we have frequently stated, if the Soviet and US strategic arsenals were to be very substantially reduced, and if no significant changes had occurred in Soviet defensive capability, we would want to review our position and consider how best we could contribute to arms control in the light of the reduced threat. That remains the position.

64. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on arms control in the light of recent proposals by Mr. Gorbachev.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 30 June, at column 390.

86. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to have with Mr. Shevardnadze on arms control treaties.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 18 June, he looks forward to discussions on arms control with Mr. Shevardnadze, as do I. However, it would not be appropriate to go into further detail at this stage.

Nepal

36. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 309, what information he has now received concerning the persecution of Christians in Nepal.

47. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 309, what further information he has obtained about the treatment of Nepalese Christians.

Mr. Eggar: We have received further details of the incident referred to on 11 June by my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson). On 5 April an Indian priest and two Indian nuns were arrested in eastern Nepal. They have since been released from detention on bail. The Indian church authorities have complained about their treatment during detention. The matter is now the subject of court proceedings in Nepal.

Zimbabwe

42. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what detailed assessment he has made of the impact on the economy of Zimbabwe were sanctions to be imposed on South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: As I made clear during my visit to Zimbabwe last month, our great concern about the damage to the economies of Zimbabwe and other countries of the region which could follow the imposition of sanctions against South Africa has been an important consideration in determining our policy towards South Africa. We will continue to follow this aspect of the matter very closely.

Middle East

48. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a peace settlement in the middle east.

Mr. Renton: We regret the lack of progress towards peaceful solutions for the region's conflicts and will continue to look for ways to support realistic efforts by the parties to solve their differences.

Immigration

50. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with other Governments concerning uncontrolled immigration from Asia into Europe via East and West Berlin.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom, as one of the four powers (with the US, France and the Soviet Union) responsible for Berlin, is in close touch with the French and US Governments, the German authorities in the city, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Soviet authorities on this matter.

USSR (Foreign Minister)

52. Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he will discuss with Mr. Shevadnadze, the Soviet Foreign Minister, when he visits London later this month; and whether these will include the issue of the reunification of divided families.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen), and to the reply I gave to my hon. and learned Friend, the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on 11 June, at column 315.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

55. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross).

87. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the precedent conditions for a meeting between Ministers and the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 1 July at column 468.

South Africa (Eminent Persons Group)

56. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the findings of the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group.

84. Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the report of the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the right hon. Member and the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore).

73. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the report of the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group has been considered by the European Economic Community Council in its discussions on South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In discussing South Africa the European Council took account of recent developments including the outcome of the mission by the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group.

Punjab

58. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise at his next meeting with Commonwealth Heads of Government the matter of human rights and civil liberties in the Punjab.

Mr. Eggar: No. The main threat to human rights in Punjab comes from terrorists who kill innocent people in order to attain a political end.

Nuclear Test Ban

61. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the United States Government to reach a nuclear test ban with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Renton: We welcome President Reagan's willingness to discuss verification issues with a view to ratification of the threshold test ban treaty and peaceful nuclear explosions treaty. Nuclear testing issues, including a comprehensive test ban treaty, are regularly discussed by us with the United States.

Sri Lanka (Terrorism)

62. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the High Commissioner of Sri Lanka to discuss terrorism.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so. Sri Lanka faces a serious terrorist problem. Both Sri Lankan Government and Tamil representatives are aware of our view that the only route to a lasting peace is through a negotiated settlement recognising the needs and interests of all communities. We therefore welcome recent moves to establish a basis for further direct talks and urge all those involved to maintain their efforts to reach a peaceful settlement.

South African Military Attachés

63. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now arrange for the expulsion of South African military attachés from the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 5 March at column 178.

European Community (Foreign Policy)

65. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the steps he intends to take to improve foreign policy co-operation among member European Economic Community states; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a common European Community foreign policy.

Mrs. Chalker: The new treaty provisions on foreign policy co-operation embodied in title III of the Single European Act are the result of a United Kingdom initiative. They embody for the first time in an international agreement the commitment by the Twelve to consult each other so as to ensure that their combined influence is exercised as effectively as possible by co-ordinating their positions and taking joint action. Pending ratification of the Single European Act by all twelve member states, I shall encourage our partners to act in political co-operation in the spirit of the new treaty provisions.

Helsinki Agreement

66. Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise the subject of emigration and freedom of movement in the context of the Helsinki agreement at his forthcoming meeting with the Soviet Foreign Minister in London.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) and to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Woodall).

Chile

72. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet representatives from the civilian National Assembly of Chile.

Mr. Eggar: No; but FCO Ministers and officials continue to be in contact with a wide range of Chilean opinion, and to have meetings with leaders of the democratic opposition parties.

89. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Chilean authorities concerning the escalation of violence in Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As I told the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) on 11 June, we emphasise repeatedly to the Chilean authorities our conviction that early dialogue with the democratic opposition is essential if Chile is to achieve a peaceful and orderly return to democracy.

Contadora Process

75. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he makes of the progress to date of the Contadora process.

Mr. Eggar: The Contadora process is widely recognised as having played an invaluable role in reducing tensions in the region, and in achieving agreement on the objectives on which a negotiated settlement in central America should be based. We share that assessment, and urge the central American states to reach quickly a comprehensive and verifiable agreement based on those objectives.

Mr. Oliver Tambo

76. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give an account of the recent meeting between the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) and Oliver Tambo, acting President of the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made in the House on 25 June.

West Germany

77. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and West Germany in the light of the visit by the West German President.

Mr. Eggar: President von Weizsaecker's memorable state visit marked in a clear and inspiring manner the special nature and importance of the relationship between our countries. As the president noted in his address to Members of both Houses of Parliament on 2 July, it is a partnership which rests on a solid basis, marked by frankness and trust; and it is a precious asset as we face the tasks of the future, above all in constructing a more united Europe and overcoming the divisions between East and West.

European Communities (Ministerial Meetings)

82. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the meetings of Ministers held so far since the United Kingdom assumed the presidency of the European Communities.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom assumed the presidency of the European Community on 1 July 1986. Meetings of EC Ministers responsible for finance and for the budget were held on 7 July.

Central America

83. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with the United States Government concerning their policy in central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, had detailed discussions with Ambassador Philip Habib, President Reagan's special envoy for central America, in London on 18 June. The discussions were, of course, confidential.

Brazil (Debt)

88. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with the Government of Brazil concerning their debt problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Debt features prominently in our regular contacts with the Government of Brazil. Brazil's debt problems continue to cause us serious concern.

Namibia

90. Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the South African Government about withdrawing their troops from Namibia by 1 August 1986 deadline.

Mrs. Chalker: We take every opportunity to urge on the South African Government the pressing need for them to withdraw from Namibia in order to allow Namibians to choose their own Government through the early implementation of the UN plan.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had with the governors of the Commonwealth Institute or with governors of the Commonwealth prior to his appointment of a review team in respect of his 1984 financial management initiative.

Mr. Eggar: The Executive Committee of the Governors of the Commonwealth Institute was informed on 21 November 1984 of the Government's intention to review the institute. The review team was appointed on 25 March 1986. During the interim, the Executive Committee was kept fully informed.

Cyprus

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, now that he has assumed the Presidency of the European Community Council, he has any proposals to put to the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to resolve the continuing occupation of the Republic of Cyprus by Turkish forces.

Mr. Eggar: No. The United Nations Secretary-General is best placed to bring about a peaceful, just and lasting settlement in Cyprus. This would naturally deal with the problem of foreign troops in the Republic. The EC Council of Ministers fully supports the Secretary-General's efforts.

Single European Act

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the changes proposed in the Community rule regarding article 57 of the treaty of Rome under the Single European Act, he has any plans to seek an amendment to that article so as to delete the reference therein to the first stage of consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The reference to the "first stage" in the third sentence of Article 57(2) is to be deleted as a result of the amendment in Article 6(7) of the Single European Act. Although the "first stage" is still referred to in a large number of provisions of the treaty including Article 57(1), these references no longer have any practical effect since the Community's initial transitional period (including the first stage) ended on 31 December 1969.

Spain

4. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Spanish relations in the light of the recent visit by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar).

Mr. Eggar: Anglo-Spanish relations are excellent. Our trade is booming and tourism continues to expand. As I informed the House on 25 June, during my recent official visit to Spain I had wide ranging discussions including with the Interior Minister Sr. Barrionuevo. I have since followed up some specific points about the safety of British tourists with the Association of British Travel Agents. Apart from tourism, I also discussed co-operation with the Spanish authorities in the fight against drug trafficking.

TRANSPORT

Dalton-in-Furness Bypass

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the current position regarding progress on the Dalton-in-Furness bypass on the A590.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to announce the chosen route for the A590 Dalton bypass within the next few months. Some modifications to the route already protected against development are likely.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many non-United Kingdom registered heavy goods vehicles have entered the United Kingdom in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics of non-United Kingdom registered vehicles entering the United Kingdom are not available. However, the Department publishes figures of the number of foreign registered goods vehicles leaving Great Britain for mainland Europe in table 1 of the Statistical Bulletin "Roads Goods Vehicles on Roll-on Roll-off Ferries to Mainland Europe". The latest issue is Bulletin 86(13). A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage (a) of all traffic accidents and (b) of motorway accidents involved non-United Kingdom registered heavy goods vehicles in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Percentage of personal injury accidents involving non-United Kingdom registered heavy goods vehicles:

Great Britain: 1981-1985.

	On motorways	All accidents
1981	1·07	0·07
1982	1·17	0·08
1983	1·11	0·08
1984	1·45	0·10
*1985	1·53	0·11

* Provisional.

The number of non-United Kingdom registered heavy goods vehicles visiting the United Kingdom nearly doubled over this period.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider introducing specific requirements or conditions regarding the ability of drivers of non-United Kingdom registered heavy goods vehicles to communicate adequately using English in emergency situations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The international conventions which govern the admission of foreign vehicles and drivers to the United Kingdom and vice versa do not entitle participating states to introduce any such requirements.

Buses (Concessionary Fares)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authorities have used their power under the Transport Act 1985 to require all bus operators to participate in a uniform scheme of concessionary fares from deregulation day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not available. The Act is designed to encourage voluntary agreements between authorities and operators, thus making it possible to establish a uniform concessionary fare scheme without resort to compulsory powers.

M25 (Widening)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the total cost of increasing the size of the M25 motorway to four lanes in either direction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Widening the whole motorway would be costly and disruptive. No estimate has been made. There is no evidence at present that it is likely to be necessary.

M25 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the number of vehicles expected to use the M25 motorway each year for access to Heathrow airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures were produced by the British Airports Authority for the Heathrow terminal inquiry in 1983. They predict the following airport related trips for an annual throughput of 38 million passengers at the airport in 1995:

	vehicles per 24 hour day
Junctions 13-14	23,800
Junctions 14-15	11,100
Junctions 15-16	19,400

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to increase traffic flow on the M25 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to make an announcement soon when we have decided what measures to take.

Motorways (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the total mileage of motorways in England which have concrete safety barriers; and what is this figure as a percentage of the total mileage of motorway central safety barriers;

(2) whether he intends to increase the use of concrete safety barriers on the central reservatons of motorways;

(3) what information he has concerning the comparative costs per 100 yd of concrete safety barriers for the central reservatons of motorways and other types of safety barriers currently used.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no concrete barriers on the central reserves of motorways in England. The use of concrete barriers on central reserves is currently restricted to roads with speed limits up to 50 mph. There are no plans at present to use them on higher speed roads. The average cost of installing 100 yd of double-sided steel safety fence of the type used commonly on the central reserves of motorways is about £3,000. The comparative cost for concrete safety barriers is estimated to be between £7,500 and £8,000. None of these figures include the costs of traffic delays incurred when installation is on an existing road. I shall write to my hon. Friend to give more detailed information about the restrictions currently applying to concrete barriers.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 10 July 1986

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Alan Bristow (Honours)

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions has now received a report from the Metropolitan police about the allegations made by Alan Bristow in relation to the award of honours; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has now received and considered the report from the Metropolitan police. He has concluded that there is no evidence sufficient to justify the institution of criminal proceedings against any person.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya (Bombing)

Q26. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 24 June to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, column 86, why she will not seek the necessary permission to enable her to reveal the source of the advice from the United States of America to the effect that F111 aircraft were more accurate and precise than carrier-based aircraft.

The Prime Minister: It would not be appropriate.

Strathclyde

Q56. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Strathclyde.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Flecknoe

Q93. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Flecknoe near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

National Health Service

Q94. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister whether she will make it her policy to continue to put more real resources into the National Health Service as part of her investment plans; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: This Government have increased spending on the National Health Service by 24 per cent. in real terms, including a planned increase of 3 per cent. in real terms in this financial year. Further real increases are planned in each of 1987-88 and 1988-89. The plans will be reviewed in the public expenditure survey.

EC (Agricultural Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library the monthly reports issued by the Commission to the European Council on trends in agricultural spending in accordance with the agreement arrived at at the European Council on 4 December 1984; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Commission's monthly report on trends in agricultural expenditure will be made available in the Library when an English translation is received.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister what was the outcome of the representations she made to the European Economic Community Commission regarding its failure to submit monthly reports on agricultural spending to the Council as provided in the 4 December 1984 agreement; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following our representations the Commission has established a procedure whereby a report on the development of agricultural expenditure will now be sent to the Council at the beginning of each month.

Nuclear Power (Safety)

Mr. Craigen asked the Prime Minister if, following the discussions on Chernobyl at the European Council, she will consider arranging wider inter-governmental discussions with a view to securing a tightening-up of international co-operation and safety arrangements.

The Prime Minister: The International Atomic Energy Agency is the main forum where international co-operation on nuclear safety can be discussed. The Government's priority will be to work towards a fruitful outcome of the meetings arranged by the agency, including a special session, at ministerial level, of the general conference to be held on 24 to 26 September.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister why she considers that publishing the number of certificates signed under section 27 of the Data Protection Act would not be in the interest of national security.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to publish information on matters affecting national security. I have therefore nothing to add to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 9 June 1986.

Housing Benefit and Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Raynsford asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 26 June, Official Report, column 266, is she will state the total cost of rent rebates, rent allowances, rate rebates and mortgage interest tax relief, respectively, in 1979 and 1985; and if she will estimate how many people with incomes in excess of £20,000 a year are receiving each rebate, allowance or relief.

The Prime Minister: The information requested on expenditure on housing benefits and revenue forgone on mortgage interest relief is as follow:

(£ million)

	*1979-80	*1985-86
Great Britain
Rent Rebates	640	2,290

	*1979-80	*1985-86
Rent Allowances	160	780
Rate Rebates	450	1,520
United Kingdom
Mortgage interest tax relief	1,450	4,750
Option mortgage relief	190	—

* Housing benefit information relating to 1979-80 comprises expenditure under the former DOE rebate schemes and that for similar help through supplementary benefit. Housing benefit figures for 1985-86 are provisional.

It is most unlikely that anyone with an income in excess of £20,000 a year is receiving housing benefit, but information is not available to make a reliable estimate. The estimated numbers with such incomes with mortgage interest tax relief are 110,000 in 1979-80 and 900,000 in 1985-86; similar estimates relating to option mortgage relief in 1979-80 are not available.

Parachute Jumping

Mr. Dickens asked the Prime Minister if, in view of recent fatalities and accidents, she will consider introducing legislation to provide for a minimum level of competence for those permitted to take part in parachute jumps from aircraft; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Statutory responsibility for the regulation of parachuting rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. Under article 41 of the Air Navigation Order 1985, no one may jump from an aircraft without the Civil Aviation Authority's permission. The Civil Aviation Authority is advised by the British Parachute Association, which exercises day-to-day control of the sport and sets basic training requirements for all parachutists. These requirements were recently reviewed and tightened.

Armed Forces (Pensions)

Mr. Speller asked the Prime Minister (1) how much money was saved from the total estimated cost of armed forces pensions during the 1985-86 financial year as a result of the Government's decision to stage top salary pay awards for senior officers of the armed forces during that year; and if she will base their pensions on the salaries actually in payment;

(2) how much money was saved from the total estimated cost of armed forces pensions during the 1984-85 financial year as a result of the Government's decision to stage pay awards to members of the armed forces during that year; and if she will base their pensions on the salaries actually in payment;

(3) if she will list the total cost of armed forces pensions in the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86; and what is the estimated total cost for the current year;

(4) how much money will be saved in the total cost of armed forces pensions during the current financial year as a result of the Government's decision to delay the effective date of the 1986 pay awards to members of the armed forces from 1 April to 1 July; and if he will base their pensions on the salaries actually in payment.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million.
	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Estimated total savings each year arising from the decision to base pensions on staged pay awards (Note 1)	4·545	0·195	3·433
Total Cost of Pension benefits	818·143	892·262	*972·0

* Estimate.

Note 1 that is difference in cost between pensions based on staged pay awards and the full awards recommended by the review bodies had these been awarded from 1 April of the years in question.

All new pensions beginning in the three financial years in question have been or will be based on salaries in payment at the time of retirement in accordance with the principles set out in my written answer to the hon. Member for Chiselhurst (Mr. Sims) on 13 April 1984, at col. 383.

Visits Abroad

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will list the official visits abroad made by her since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 10 December 1985, at columns 575-77, and to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 7 July 1986, at column 5.

In 1986 I have made the following overseas visits:

January
France

March
Italy

May Korea
Japan
Israel

June
Netherlands

Engagements

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 July.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 July.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 10 July.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 July.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister is she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 July.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Overseas Visitors (Statistics)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers (a) in total and (b) by nationality who were refused leave to enter in each quarter since January 1985 (i) were detained at least overnight, (ii) were temporarily admitted and (iii) absconded following the grant of temporary admission.

Mr. Waddington: Information is not fully available in the form requested. The information in the following table relates to the number of passengers who were detained at least overnight in 1985. It includes both passengers refused entry and those required to submit to further examination. A person detained in more than one place will have been counted in each place of detention and there is an element of double counting in the table. This information is not available quarterly and not available for 1986 to date.

This information is not available by nationality.

Information is also not available on the total number of passengers who absconded following refusal of leave to enter. However, in 1985, 388 persons absconded following a grant of temporary admission but not necessarily after being refused leave to enter. The corresponding figure for the first quarter of 1986 was 167.

This information is not available by nationality.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers were (a) admitted, (b) required to submit to further examination and (c) refused leave to enter in each month since January 1985.

Mr. Waddington: The table gives the information at present available on admissions into the United Kingdom of non-EC nationals subject to immigration control, and those refused leave to enter and removed, for each month since January 1985. The numbers of passengers refused and removed, including EC nationals, are also given; corresponding estimates of the numbers of non-British EC nationals admitted to the United Kingdom are available only annually. No information is available on the total number of passengers required to submit to further examination.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the names of those animal rights organisations which expressed support to him regarding the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill [Lords].

Mr. Mellor: The measures in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to increase the protection of animals used in scientific research, have received substantial support from leading animal welfare bodies as well as from many other organisations, including those representing the veterinary profession.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any (a) legislative and (b) non-legislative proposals to combat the rising number of racial attacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Public Order Bill contains a new offence of disorderly conduct, which is relevant to racial harassment, and also strengthens the law against incitement to racial hatred.

The Government want all practicable action to be taken to deter racial attacks, and to identify and deal with those who commit these crimes. I welcome the "Guiding Principles concerning Racial Attacks" issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers last October, which set out advice on the monitoring of, and response to, racial attacks. These guidelines emphasise the need for a vigorous and sympathetic response from the police.

Earlier this year the Metropolitan police issued best practice guidelines on the recording and monitoring of racial incidents. These set out minimum requirements including, for example, follow-up visits to victims, to be adopted throughout the Metropolitan police, and a variety of additional measures which are being adopted on an experimental basis in different parts of the Metropolitan police area, according to local circumstances.

Training for both probationers and police managers has been developed so as to encourage a better understanding of the minority communities. Racial attacks receive special attention in the community and race relations training provided for officers who are given particular community liaison responsibilities.

The Home Office research and planning unit programme for 1986-87 includes a study of the nature and incidence of racially motivated incidents in selected areas and a study of possible improvements in the police response to such incidents and of victims' perceptions and needs. Both studies are due to be completed next year.

The Sub-Committee on Race Relations and Immigration of the Home Affairs Select Committee is conducting an inquiry into racial attacks. The Government will examine the report of the inquiry with great care.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the use of the new convictions index held on the police national computer; whether the index will be linked to the criminal names index; what are the projected size of the convictions index, the anticipated access rates and performance of the index; and when the index will be fully operational.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The convictions file, which will be linked to the criminal names file, is intended to help the police with their operational duties, including the provision of information to the courts. When it becomes available in 1987, it is expected to contain details of 2·5 million convictions recorded since 1981. It is not possible at this stage to provide an accurate estimate of the extent to which the police will use this new facility, which is expected to have a response time of about five seconds.

Martial Arts Weapons

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he is satisfied with the operation of the guidelines issued by the Martial Arts Commission in conjunction with his Department governing the sale of potentially offensive martial arts weapons; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to ban the sale of the following items of martial arts weaponry (a) Ninja swords, (b) climbing hooks, (c) foot claws, (d) spears, (e) Ninja throwing darts and (f) Ninja throwing stars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The possession of an offensive weapon in a public place without lawful authority or reasonable excuse is already a criminal offence under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953. The definition of "offensive weapon" is sufficiently wide to cover all the items listed. The Act provides for a penalty of up to two years imprisonment or an unlimited fine, or both. We believe that the guidelines issued by the Martial Arts Commission in consultation with the Government have left traders in no doubt about their responsibilities concerning the sale of all types of martial arts equipment to the young and the impressionable. We do not have any current plans to bring forward further legislative controls, but we shall continue to keep a very close watch on the situation.

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convictions have been secured in each of the past five years for the carrying of martial arts weaponry contrary to the provision of the Prevention of Crime Act 1953; and what information he has as to the range of penalties imposed;

(2) what information he has as to the average age of those convicted for carrying martial arts weaponry under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information collected centrally on offences under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 does not include the type of weapon involved.

Video Recordings Act 1984

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the provisions of the Video Recordings Act 1984; and with what result.

Mr. Mellor: The main provisions of the Video Recordings Act came into effect on 1 September 1985 for certain types of video work. No figures of prosecutions are yet available for 1985.

Strip Searches (Haringey)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the numbers, age groups and ethnic origins of all (a) women and (b) girls under 18 years strip searched at Haringey, London, police stations during the years 1984, 1985 and up to the latest date for which information is available; and how many charges have been laid as a result of any materials found during these strip searches.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on strip searches is recorded only on individual custody records and is not collated in this or any other form.

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been submitted to the police by (a) women and (b) girls under 18 years who have been strip searched during the last two years; if all these complaints have been investigated; and if any have been referred for disciplinary considerations or to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not available.

Mobile Police Stations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mobile police stations there are in the Metropolitan police area; and how many officers per station there are, by rank.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police have two mobile police stations which are used at sporting, ceremonial and other occasions involving large crowds, and for major criminal investigation. The number and rank of officers posted to these stations varies according to the circumstances.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to meet Mr. Chris Mullin to discuss recent evidence relating to the convictions for the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mellor: No, but we are considering a number of points in the book which he has recently published.

National Reporting Centre

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the national reporting centre, activated in connection with the prison officers' dispute, is still in a state of activation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The national reporting centre has not been opened in connection with this dispute, since there has not been any need to co-ordinate the provision of mutual aid. The acting president of the Association of Chief Police Officers opened the national information centre at New Scotland Yard on 1 May, as my right hon. Friend announced to the House in his statement that day. It was closed on 9 May, and has not been reopened.

Hippy Convoy

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire about the total cost to provide funds for the police operation to disperse the hippy convoy.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 413]: I understand from the chief constable of Hampshire that the additional costs to the Hampshire police authority of police operations relating to the convoy on 9 June amounted to some £78,000 and that other police authorities whose forces assisted the Hampshire police incurred additional costs of some £34,000. 51 per cent. of the expenditure will be met by the Home Office through police grant.

Carter Street Police Station

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disciplinary proceedings have been taken in the last five years against police officers based at Carter street police station, SE17 for misconduct relating to the public; and what was the outcome of such proceedings.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1986, c. 622]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that in the five years up to 30 June 1986 no charge under the discipline code has been laid against any officer based at Carter street police station.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to his answer of 30 June, column 368, he will update to the latest date for which figures are available the figures on the cost of police action at Wapping, the number of officers deployed and the police man hours spent.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 57]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the additional cost of police overtime incurred in policing the News International dispute at Wapping from 28 January to 5 July is estimated at about £1·174 million. The maximum number of officers deployed on any one occasion remains 1,870. Over 662,000 police man hours have been spent in policing the dispute.

Additional costs of about £260,000 have also been incurred on catering at Wapping from 28 January to 29 June.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to review his current regional aid policies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have arranged for a review of the administrative aspects of our regional assistance schemes to be carried out by my Department. This is progressing satisfactorily and I expect it to be completed before the end of the year.

South Africa

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new guidelines he has issued to companies on how to implement the new version, November 1985, of the EEC code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa; and if he will place a copy of the guidelines in the Library.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer to the reply give to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 7 July, at column 7.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the capital investment, at 1986 prices, in Rolls-Royce in each year since 1971; and, of this, for each year, what amount has been Government funded.

Mr. Pattie: Following is the information derived from Rolls-Royce's annual accounts.

	*1986 prices £ million	Actual £ million
1972	36·5	8·1
1973	35·1	8·5
1974	60·5	17·0
1975	93·3	32·6
1976	57·8	23·4
1977	35·3	18·7
1978	58·7	30·0
1979	85·7	49·6
1980	64·3	43·9
1981	36·6	28·0
1982	44·6	37·0
1983	34·6	30·0
1984	18·6	17·0
1985	48·9	48·0

* May 1986 retail prices index.

The unescalated figures for 1981-85 are those as shown in the published accounts adjusted in respect of the application of statement of standard accounting practice No. 21.

Capital investment has been taken to mean fixed assets for example, plant, machinery, building and so on.

The Government's only direct contribution during the period in question were regional development grants. These amounted in total to £10 million. An annual breakdown is not readily available.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the net asset value, in 1986 prices, for each year since 1970, of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Pattie: Following is the information.

	*1986 prices £ million	Actual £ million	Adjusted for revaluation of land and buildings £ million	Net of adjustment £ million
1971	526	109	—	—
1972	549	122	—	—
1973	351	85	—	—
1974	349	98	—	—
1975	507	177	—	—
1976	548	223	—	—
1977	549	259	—	—
1978	536	274	—	—
1979	418	242	—	—
1980	460	458	144	314

	1986 prices* £ million	Actual £ million	Adjusted for revaluation of land and buildings £ million	Net of adjustment £ million
1981	579	584	141	443
1982	433	497	138	359
1983	194	303	135	168
1984	212	325	132	193
1985	261	403	147	256

* May 1986 retail prices index.
(i) The net asset figures have been adjusted for the revaluation of land and buildings which took place in 1980 and 1985.
(ii) The substantial reduction in net assets 1971 to 1973 is largely accounted for by the balance sheet adjustments which followed settlement with the receiver.

Mattresses (Fire Resistance)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that all mattresses on sale in the United Kingdom meet the fire resistance specification developed by the National Bedding Federation.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I welcome this initiative by the National Bedding Federation. By the end of this year the great majority of mattresses on sale in this country will be resistant to ignition by smouldering cigarettes. This advance in safety has been made voluntarily by the industry itself. I have agreed to support it by approving the NBF specification as a sound modern standard for the purposes of the general safety requirement which we shall be introducing in legislation, as foreshadowed in our July 1984 White Paper on the "Safety of Goods" (Cmnd. 9302), as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits. The effect of this approval will be that all suppliers of mattresses, imported as well as made in this country can be confident that they are meeting their legal obligation to supply safe goods if the mattresses pass the British Standard cigarette test. Conversely, if they fail the test they clearly will not provide the level of safety approved by the Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Allowances

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will make a statement about the four-yearly review of the Members' office, secretarial and research allowance and the arrangements for the 1986-87 uprating.

Mr. Biffen: I have today written to the chairman of the TSRB, inviting the TSRB to carry out the four-yearly review of the level and structure of the allowance (the terms of the letter are as follows). The TSRB will be making arrangements to ensure that the views of individual Members are taken into account.

In respect of the 1986-87 uprating, the House agreed in it resolution of July 1984 that the allowance be uprated from 1 April each year by the increase in the maximum point of the pay scale (excluding allowances and overtime) for a senior personal secretary in the Civil Service in receipt of Inner London weighting. A restructuring of the Civil Service secretarial grades in March 1986 had the effect of subsuming a number of proficiency allowances within the pay scale. This has distorted the operation of the formula for the uprating of the allowance, and I have asked the TSRB to take this anomaly into account in its current review. Meanwhile, I shall be putting to the House shortly an amending resolution to bring the operation of the formula in 1986-87 into line with the general 6 per cent. increase in Civil Service salaries. Certain of their Lordships' allowances are similarly affected; a similar resolution will be introduced in another place.

Parliamentary Allowances

When you wrote to me on 16 May 1984 conveying the TSRB's recommendations about the uprating of certain Parliamentary allowances, including the MP's secretarial, research, and office equipment allowance, you also advised that there should be provision for a periodic review of allowances to determine whether they continued to be appropriate in the light of changing circumstances. The TSRB suggested that such a review should be undertaken every four years, with the first falling due in 1987. In the debate in the House on 20 July 1984 on the uprating recommendations I said that the Government accepted the TSRB's proposal that every four years there should be such a review.

2. I am writing to you to ask the Review Body to conduct a review of MP's secretarial, research and office equipment allowance. The Government does not consider that a wider review of the allowance structure is called for at this time. The Review Body would certainly need to look at how well the uprating formula recommended and implemented in 1984 has worked in practice, and I would be grateful if in addition the review could consider the fundamental structure and level of the allowance in the light of current circumstances. I have consulted the Leader of the House of Lords and we should like the Review Body to look also at the allowance for peers' secretarial costs, postage and certain additional expenses and the secretarial allowance for Ministers and other paid office holders in the House of Lords.

WALES

Jobcentres (Managers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many managers of jobcentres there are in Wales; and how many of these are Welsh-speaking.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are 98 jobcentres in Wales, of which 20 are managed by Welsh speakers. There are a further 11 with staff who are Welsh speaking but where the manager is not.

Lambs (Subsidy)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidance and advice to those farmers whose lambs do not qualify for subsidy as a result of the delay in marketing due to the current ban when the ban is lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food said in his statement on 20 June, at column 1321, if it should prove necessary the Government would be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers.

Sheep (Sales Ban)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring he is carrying out on ewes in areas subject to the ban on sales; what are the results of such monitoring; if he will lift the ban on sales of ewes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have today made an order under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to come into effect at midnight to release further areas in north Wales from restrictions related to all sheep. This is based on the results of recent intensive monitoring of radiation levels in the area. The de-restricted areas include that part of Anglesey north of the A5 and west of the B5111 and A5114, that part of Clwyd which lies to the east of the B5113 north of the B5381 and west of the river Clwyd and that part of Powys east of Lake Vyrnwy bounded by the B4391, B4580, B4393 and the B4396.

A map showing areas in Wales to be released and results of tests related to those areas are being published today and a copy is being placed in the Library of the House. The test programme is continuing.

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the fallout levels in the lowland areas of North Wales, the area of Ynys Môn (Anglesey) and other areas traditionally used for raising early spring lambs and livestock which were contaminated with caesium 137 and caesium 134; if young livestock from those areas were slaughtered and sold to the public before his Department imposed the ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 26 June by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Robinson).

There is no evidence that lambs with high radiocaesium levels had entered the food chain and the measures the Government have taken are specificially designed to prevent this happening.

Results of monitoring lambs published on 3 and 10 July have been placed in the Library of the House.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many admissions have been made into National Health Service hospitals in Wales, in each year since 1979, of patients who had previously been seen privately by consultants.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Paymaster General if he will give the numbers of persons unemployed by age groups in (a) the Barnsley area and (b) the Barnsley West and Penistone constituency area for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The tables show the numbers of unemployed claimants by age groups in the Barnsley travel-to-work area and the Barnsley, West and Penistone parliamentary constituency for April of each year from 1984 to 1986. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for these areas are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people under the age of 25 years are unemployed in Coventry, the west midlands and nationally; of those, how many have been unemployed for more than one, two, three, four and five years respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the Coventry local authority district, the west midlands region and the United Kingdom who, on 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available had been unemployed for the durations requested.

* These figures are affected by industrial action in 1981 and consequent emergency computer procedures.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Paymaster General how many people in the last 12 months have been prosecuted or are being prosecuted for falsely claiming unemployment benefit; how many inspectors are involved in this work; and if he will show prosecutions on a regional basis.

Mr. Lang: Number of prosecutions authorised in the 12 months ending 31 March 1986: 2,177.

Number of inspectors involved in the work as at 31 May 1986: 639.

Number of prosecutions authorised by each region in the 12 months ending 31 March 1986:

	Number
Northern	131
Yorkshire and Humberside	494

Pension Age (Equalisation)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the reduction in registered unemployment as a consequence of equalising the age of entitlement to state pension at 60 years.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 12]: It is not possible to predict with any accuracy the change in registered unemployment which would result from the equalisation of the age of entitlement to state pension at 60 years. In part it would depend on the direct effect of men over 60 choosing to retire, thus generating vacancies which may be filled from the unemployment count. Our best estimate of the full direct effect on the unemployment count is a reduction of between 200,000 and 400,000. However, the final effect is likely to be a lesser reduction because of wider labour market effects such as an increase in wage pressure, and the loss of skilled workers, and because the means used to finance the reduction in pension age would also have important effects on the economy as a whole.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish, 30 June, Official Report, column 381, if he will list, in tabular form, the change in funding of universities in cash and constant 1985-86 prices for each year since 1980-81 to 1986-87, with estimates for 1987-88 and 1988-89, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home students fees, for redundancy and for early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant, changes in local authority rates and additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Walden: The percentage change in public funding of the universities in cash and real terms for each year since 1980-81 is as follows:

UGC Recurrent, Equipment and Capital grants plus home fees

Academic Years

	1980-81 to 1981-82	1981-82 to 1982-83	1982-83 to 1983-84	1983-84 to 1984-85	1984-85 to 1985-86	1985-86 to 1986-87

* Using the GDP deflator.

Previous questions, including the one to which the hon. Member refers, which sought information about funding changes excluding selectively listed funding elements have been answered in terms of funding by the University Grants Committee in its recurrent and equipment grant. It must be borne in mind that arbitrary exclusions can produce artificial figures. But on the basis, excluding the funding elements selectively listed by the hon. Member, the percentage changes in cash and real terms each year since 1980-81 are as follows:

UGC Recurrent and Equipment Grants excluding selectively listed funding elements

Academic Years

	1980-81 to 1981-82	1981-82 to 1982-83	1982-83 to 1983-84	1983-84 to 1984-85	1984-85 to 1985-86	1985-86 to 1986-87

Real Terms*	−11·4	−2·5	−0·5	−1·3	−0·2	−2·9

* Using the GDP deflator.

The Government have announced their willingness to increase financial provision for the universities in 1987-88 and later years if they demonstrate progress towards better management, improved standards of teaching, selectively in research funding and the rationalisation of small departments. We will be discussing the way forward with the University Grants Committee and the vice-chancellors over the next few months before public expenditure plans are finalised in the autumn.

Rose Bruford College of Speech and Drama

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future of Rose Bruford college of speech and drama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Since 4 April 1986, when the secretariat of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education issued its consultative proposals for student numbers in 1987-88, my right hon. Friend has received 12 representations about Rose Bruford college, including eight from right hon. and hon. Members.

Primary Schools (Leicester)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response his Department has made to the letter dated 22 May from the assistant director of education of Leicestershire county council regarding possible extra minor works funds in 1986-87 for a mobile transfer at St. Peter and St. Paul's Church of England primary school, Syston, and an extension at St. Francis Roman Catholic primary school, Melton Mowbray.

Mr. Dunn: I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the official letter sent on 2 July 1986 to the director of education for Leicestershire.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is in a position to approve the bid from Leicestershire county council for a small extension and adaptations to Saltby Church of England primary school; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The available resources for aided works for 1986-87 have been fully allocated and there is no prospect of additional resources being made available during the current financial year for building work at Saltby Church of England primary school.

Innumeracy

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of innumerate people in the United Kingdom; what steps he is taking to eliminate innumeracy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: A survey conducted in 1981 by Social Surveys (Gallop Polls) Ltd. which tested the numeracy skills of a sample of the adult population suggested that 10 per cent. could not handle simple addition. Higher percentages had difficulty with more complex tasks. This survey also found young adults to be the most able group, and the national child development study survey of 1981 found that 5 per cent. of the 23-year-olds asked said that they had had numeracy problems since leaving school.

The Government have accepted that low attaining pupils have special needs where mathematics is concerned. The Department of Education and Science is funding three major research projects related to low attainers and mathematics at a cost of £1 million over a six-year period. We have also made available to all local education authorities training material designed to promote good practice in teaching mathematics to low attaining pupils. The Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office jointly fund the adult literacy and basic skills unit to help develop provision to overcome numeracy problems amongst adults. The provision of basic skills tuition for adults remains one of our highest priorities. Grant has been raised from £360,000 in 1979-80 to £2,170,000 in 1986-87 — a sixfold increase. Projects have considered the numeracy levels required to meet the everyday functional needs of adults, as well as the skills required for vocational training entry tests. Developments in new approaches to provision have succeeded in attracting many people who have previously not sought help with their numeracy problems.

Policies to combat numeracy problems in Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Teachers (Pensions)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the reasons for the delays in calculating the increases for the pensions of retired teachers; if he will take action to overcome this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following the 1985 teachers' pay settlement, the pensions and lump sums of some 16,000 teachers who retired between 1 April 1985 and March 1986 fall to be revised to take account of retrospective salary increases. The timing of the pay settlement has meant that the work of revising these awards has overlapped with the calculation of new awards for teachers retiring at the end of this summer term. Calculation of these new awards has to be given priority to ensure that payments can be made immediately they fall due.

More than 4,000 revisions have so far been completed. Every effort will be made to deal with the remainder as quickly as possible and it is expected that the exercise will be completed by the end of November.

16-year-olds

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals his Department has for monitoring the factors affecting the staying-on rate at 16 years and any influence that the youth training service has upon those rates; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department already monitors the staying on rate at age 16 and assesses the factors which are likely to influence it. The youth training scheme is one such factor. In addition, the Department is funding, jointly with the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Employment, the England and Wales youth cohort study. This will provide a variety of information on the different routes taken by 16 to 19-year-olds through education, training and the labour market and will assist the assessment of the factors affecting the staying-on rate.

Student Numbers

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he is making to paragraphs 32 and 33 of the second report from the Education, Science and Arts Committee in respect of student numbers and awards; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is considering the recent report of the Education, Science and Arts Committee on the Department's expenditure plans. He will publish the Government's response in due course.

Departmental Staff (Study Facilities)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the provision of opportunities for study available to civil servants within his Department; and what steps he is taking to increase those facilities.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department encourages its staff to pursue studies with a view to obtaining academic and professional qualifications, or improving expertise and updating knowledge in work-related areas through courses and seminars mounted internally in the Department's training centre, courses and seminars mounted at the Civil Service college, where resources are available for training senior staff and specialist grades, and courses of study at external institutions including colleges of further education. These courses may be work-related or of general developmental benefit to individuals and their careers. Staff under 18 are required to participate in day release courses and are normally able to continue on day release after the age of 18 in order to complete a course already started.

Where external training is directly work-related study takes place in working hours. Where it is of general developmental value individuals study in their own time. In both cases financial assistance is available for the payment of fees and purchase of books and, in the case of general courses, time off with pay may be allowed for revision and the taking of examinations.

The objectives of the staff training centre and the scale and nature of training provision are reviewed annually to ensure that the skills and abilities of staff meet the varying and changing needs of the Department.

Student Costs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to develop a single index of student costs.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Student grant levels will continue to be determined with reference both to students' needs and to the amount the country can afford.

Inflation Deflator

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals his Department has to develop a service-based inflation deflator to be included with the public expenditure White Paper; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The public expenditure White Paper already includes information on the Government's spending plans expressed in real terms, excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator; we have no present plans to introduce in addition a deflator based on changes in education costs.

My right hon. Friend is considering the recent report of the Education, Science and Arts Committee on the Department's expenditure plans, which included among its recommendations and introduction of volume measures of past education expenditure to complement the existing cash and real terms figures. He will publish the Government's response to the report in due course.

Universities (Special Courses)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which United Kingdom universities make special courses available for doctors who wish to specialise in the care and treatment of elderly people; and what information he has as to how many students are presently enrolled in such courses.

Mr. Walden: This information is not readily available and will take some time to obtain. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministers (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the official visits abroad made by each Minister in his Department since May 1979.

Mr. Eggar: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information requested as soon as possible, and place copies in the Library.

South Africa

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the figures given in his answer to the hon. Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 15 April, Official Report, column 380, as to the number of residents in South Africa entitled to settle in the United Kingdom were calculated.

Mr. Eggar: The figures were based on estimates produced by Her Majesty's embassy in South Africa using a combination of South African Government immigration and census statistics and information available to Her Majesty's consulates there.

Sir Peter Marychurch

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had with staff associations before asking Sir Peter Marychurch to continue beyond normal retiring age as director of Government Communications Headquarters.

Mr. Renton: Sir Peter Marychurch informed the chairman of the Staff Federation at GCHQ on 4 June that he had agreed to continue as director beyond the normal retiring age. It is not the usual practice for there to be consultations with staff federations or unions in Government Departments on matters of this kind.

SCOTLAND

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those constabularies in Scotland that have or intend to have an interface with the police national computer and indicate whether the linkage is to a computer used for command and control or criminal information or both.

Mr. John MacKay: Of the eight police forces in Scotland, Fife constabulary and Grampian police currently have computer systems which are interfaced with the police national computer. Lothian and Borders police and Tayside police plan to have such a link in due course. Details of the force systems which are, or will be, so linked are as follows:

Force	Command and Control	Criminal Information system
Fife	Yes	—
Grampian	Yes	—
Lothian and Borders	Yes	—
Tayside	Yes	Yes

The Scottish criminal record office computer system, which is not yet in operation, will also be interfaced with the police national computer.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the Scottish Development Agency's budget is directed into industry on the basis of the latest full year figures available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A large proportion of the agency's expenditure is directed into industry. It is difficult to establish the exact figure, but in the financial year 1985-86 the agency's expenditure on industrial investments and grants, together with the provision of industrial sites and premises, totalled some £53 million.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to privatise any parts of the Scottish Development Agency operation.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No. The Government will, however, continue to encourage the agency in its efforts to maximise the contribution which the private sector can make to its development objectives.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution the Scottish Development Agency is making to the Glasgow garden festival in total; and how this will be allocated in each relevant financial year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The net cost to the agency is estimated at £16·5 million. The allocation to financial years is estimated to be as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	1·5
1985-86	5·2
1986-87	9·3
1987-88	12·3
1988-89	(7·3)
Post Festival	(4·5)

These figures are based on current estimates and commitments in connection with net festival costs and associated land acquisitions and are expressed at outturn prices. Figures in brackets indicate an estimated excess of receipts over expenditure. The timing of certain receipts from disposals following the festival is not allocated by financial year.

Macaulay Institute

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the final proposals for the new Macaulay Institute.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) of 4 June 1986, at column 576.

Hunterston A Power Station

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide information on the thermal output and fuel discharged by the Hunterston A station in the fiscal year 1985-86.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that during the year in question the thermal output of Hunterston A was 9,249,875·1 Mwh (Thermal) and 9,694 tonnes of fuel were discharged.

Therapists

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified specialist speech therapists, physiotherapists, occupational therapists and music therapists there are in each of the appropriate authorities in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested for each group of staff employed within the NHS in Scotland at 30 September 1985* is set out in the following table. The figures for occupational therapists employed by local authority social work departments at the beginning of October 1985 are also shown. The numbers for other groups employed by local authorities are not separately collected. All figures are shown as whole-time equivalents.

* Provisional figures

Handicapped Persons

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to what care facilities and other services for profoundly handicapped children and young adults are provided for in the budget of each of the health and social work authorities in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed information of the kind requested about the budgets of health boards and social work authorities is not held centrally.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision is made for daytime nursery care of very young and profoundly handicapped children in each of the health board areas in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Local authorities are responsible for providing daytime care for handicapped children. The information is not available in the form requested, but the following table shows the total number of children aged under five who attended day nurseries and local authority special schools in each regional and islands area in 1985:

Region	Day Nursery number of children attending	Special Schools number of children attending
Borders	Nil	Nil
Central	18	7
Dumfries/ Galloway	Nil	15

Shetland	Nil	Nil
Western Isles	Nil	1
	180	273

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of provision for mentally handicapped adults in the Strathclyde region.

Mr. John MacKay: Provision in the health service for this group is primarily in hospital of which 12 in Strathclyde provide at present approximately 2,200 beds. Further health service provision is made through community mental handicap nursing services, group homes and hospital day care, but detailed information on these is not held centrally. Places in residential establishments and in day care centres provided by the regional authority and through the voluntary sector are as follows:

Residential provision

	Homes	Beds
Local authority	19	263
Other	28	273

Day Care provision

	Centres	Places
Local authority	41	2,983
Voluntary	2	115
TOTAL	43	3,098

Note: Figures as at 31 March 1985.

In addition, various other forms of supportive service, including respite care, are made available through the social work department and by a member of voluntary agencies.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level and nature of provision for mentally handicapped people in each region and island council area in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Health service provision for the mentally handicapped includes community nursing services, group homes and hospital day care, but detailed information on these is not available centrally. Hospital care in 1984, the latest year for which full information is available, was provided as follows:

	Hospitals	Beds
Borders	3	99
Dumfries and Galloway	1	26
Fife	2	475
Central	1	1,066

	Hospitals	Beds
Grampian	2	713

Residential and day care services for adult mentally handicapped people are provided by social work departments and through various voluntary and private agencies. Figures as at 31 March 1985 are given in the tables:

Various services to enable the mentally handicapped to be accommodated within the community are provided by statutory agencies, but comprehensive information on them is not held centrally.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many profoundly handicapped children and young adults there are in each of the health board areas in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available in the form requested, but the numbers of profoundly mentally handicapped young persons resident in Scottish mental handicap hospitals at 31 December 1984 were as follows:

	0-14 years	15-24 years	25-34 years

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of waiting lists for each specialty for every hospital in Greater Glasgow and Lanarkshire, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as possible and will arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average waiting time for National Health Service in-patient treatment in each health board in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: The mean waiting times (in days) for all in-patient treatment up to 1984 (the latest year for which statistics are available) were as follows:

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Argyll and Clyde	83	89	98	93	77	103	95

Western Isles	34	45	49	46	48	57	43
Scotland	67	79	75	73	67	98	85

The figures for 1985 are not yet available.

The general increases in 1979 and 1983 show the effects of industrial action in the preceding years. Mean waiting times follow the same pattern as numbers on waiting lists, though usually at a year's interval. Waiting lists began to increase in 1982, as a result of industrial action, but the waiting times did not show the effect until 1983. Since then both size of waiting lists and waiting times have reduced overall and I expect this reduction to continue.

Higher Education

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton) on 2 July, Official Report, column 540, he will give figures for Scotland of the number of people and a percentage between 16 and 21 years in higher education domiciled in Scotland and excluding those normally resident elsewhere in the United Kingdom or overseas.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is shown in the following table for the age group 16 to 20: information for the age group 16 to 21 is not readily available.

Scottish domiciled students aged 16 to 20 in full-time higher education in the United Kingdom

	Population ages 16-20 000's	Students 000's	Per cent.
1979-80	440	36·5	8·3
1980-81	445	38·7	8·7
1981-82	457	39·9	8·7
1982-83	457	41·0	9·0
1983-84	454	41·7	9·2
1984-85	453	41·9	9·2

Notes:

1. Students aged as at 31 December.
2. Domicile is defined by where a student is normally resident outwith term time: Scottish domiciled students therefore exclude those normally resident elsewhere in the United Kingdom or overseas.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of available staffed beds in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member's question on the same subject on 8 July, which was answered in terms of average available staffed beds.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount paid in prescription charges by National Health Service patients in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: The total prescription charges paid for each of the years from 1978 to 1984, the last year for which figures have been published, were as follows:

	Amount £ million
1978	2·72
1979	4·17
1980	7·95
1981	10·21
1982	11·84
1983	12·86
1984	13·97

The figures exclude prescription charges paid to hospitals by out-patients. These figures are not available centrally.

Urban Aid Projects

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all urban aid projects approved in 1985-86 and 1986-87 by local authority; whether each one is new or represents an extension to an existing project; what are the capital and the running costs in each case; and what was the date the sponsoring local authority was notified.

Mr. Ancram: I am arranging for this information to be extracted from departmental records. I shall write to the hon. Member and shall also have a copy placed in the Library.

Childhood Cancers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any increase in the incidence of childhood cancers has been observed in west Thurso, west Central Edinburgh and south west Perth.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 672]: Apart from the high incidence of leukaemia in the 0 to 24 age group already noted by my right hon. and learned Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) on 9 June, at columns 33-34, there was no increase in the incidence of childhood cancers in these areas between 1968 and 1983.

ENERGY

Nuclear Fuels

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is gross tonnage of irradiated fuel and included fission products now in store at Wylfa; how this figure compares with the target amount of irradiated uranium materials held at each nuclear power generating site in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the CEGB.

British Gas (Privatisation)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the value of preferential shares to be issued on the sale of British Gas to (a) senior managers and (b) members of the British Gas Board.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The value of the Government's preferential offers to all British Gas employees, including senior managers and board members, was described in my right hon. Friend's announcement on 18 June, at columns 537-39.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state his latest planned timetable for the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My right hon. Friend and I expect the sale of British Gas shares to take place in the autumn.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total estimated value of shares to be offered to British Gas employees on privatisation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The total value of British Gas shares to be offered for sale, to employees and the public, will be disclosed when the flotation takes place. The specific offers to employees were described in my right hon. Friend's announcement on 18 June, at columns 537-39.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total cost of fees to be paid to the New York finance company for its part in the sale of British Gas shares.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: It is not the Government's practice to publish the fees paid to individual firms for providing advice on privatisation exercises, as these are commercially confidential. Any commissions payable on the sale of shares in particular countries will be shown in the prospectus.

Miners (Re-employment)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has as to the number of miners dismissed as a result of activities during the miners strike who have not been re-employed, as to how many of those originally dismissed who have been reinstated and as to how many of those dismissed who currently have their cases under review by the Coal Board;

(2) what information he has as to the number of dismissed miners in (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales, who have taken their cases to industrial tribunals, as to how many have won their cases, as to how many have subsequently been reinstated by the board and as to how many of those successful at industrial tribunal have been paid compensation in full.

Mr. David Hunt: Questions on the dismissal and re-employment of miners are matters for the management of the National Coal Board.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all coal-fired power stations presently out of commission but not dismantled, giving their capacity in megawatts sent out in each case.

Mr. Goodlad: All CEGB coal-fired power stations that have been decommissioned and still remain under the board's control (that is the site has not been sold) have been either dismantled or are being dismantled. Power stations in Scotland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Miners' Strike

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now estimate the total cost of the miners' strike.

Mr. David Hunt: The costs of the coal dispute in 1984-85 are quoted in paragraph 5.09 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1985-86, and paragraph 77 of the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd. 9702) gives the carry-over effects in 1985-86.

Miners (Redundancy Payments)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average redundancy payment made in 1985 to redundant mineworkers.

Mr. David Hunt: The average lump sum payment under the Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme during the financial year 1985-86 was about £11,000. In addition continuing weekly payments are normally available under the scheme to beneficiaries aged 50 or over on redundancy, up to a maximum of some £109 per week. These benefits are additional to any redundancy lump sum payable by the employer under the terms of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Family Income

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much a married man with a non-working wife and (a) two children and (b) three children needs to gross before being better off than the same man who is unemployed and in receipt of all benefits available; what effect a reduction of the basic rate of tax to 25p would have; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant his reply, 9 June 1986, c. 76]: A married man with two children aged four and six, paying rent of £16·50 and rates of £6·30 each week, would need to earn at least £38·26 a week to be better off in work than unemployed after taking into account social security benefits at November 1985 levels. A married man with three children aged three, eight and 11 with the same housing costs would need to earn £43·63 a week.

In both cases, if these pay rates were maintained for the whole tax year and the couples had no other sources of taxable income, there would be no tax payable. Reducing the basic rate would thus have no effect on these families.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer of 25 April, Official Report, column 245, what instructions the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has given to his senior officers, when briefing uniformed officers on plain clothes observation duties, regarding references in such briefings to paragraph 1.92 of the Home Office consolidated circular on crime and kindred matters in so far as it forbids the counselling, incitement or procurement of the commission of a crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I can add nothing further to my replies of 25 April, at column 245, and 13 June, at columns 341-42.

Details of instructions issued on the RUC by its Chief Constable are confidential.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests to visit (a) Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station and (b) police stations in the police division containing Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station, were received by the Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Constable for the morning of Saturday 7 June; from (i) hon. Members and (ii) other dignatories.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986, c. 114]: I understand the Chief Constable received one such request. This was on behalf of two hon. Members and concerned Antrim RUC station.

DEFENCE

Service Pensioners

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service pensioners, in each of the last three years, who have been sent to prison, have been allowed to retain their pension; and how many have had it stopped.

Mr. Freeman: With the exception of certain very grave offences (for example, an act of treason) where pensions are liable to total forfeiture, the practice of automatically withholding a service pension during a period of imprisonment ceased with effect from 1 December 1984. Prior to 1 December 1984 figures are not separately maintained and to provide them would require disproportionate effort.

Household Division (Colour Bar)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will hold an inquiry into the alleged colour bar being operated within the Household Division.

Mr. Freeman: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 June, at column 292.

Contracts (North-West England)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the numbers of defence contracts being undertaken in the north-west area during 1986-87.

Mr. Lee: The information is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mallet Blow Exercises

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he was consulted about the use of American FB111 aircraft in the Mallet Blow exercises to be held on 4 to 8 August.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Portuguese Navy

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the United Kingdom's share of the 300 million deutchmarks contributed by certain North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries towards the purchase by the Portuguese Navy of three frigates from German shipyards; if any United Kingdom shipyards were considered for this contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In 1983 the British Government offered £5 million towards the purchase of United Kingdom equipment for the Portuguese frigate programme. We understand that the Portuguese will be taking a decision later this year on how they would wish to take up this offer, though a purchase of United Kingdom hulls has never been a serious option. We are hopeful that final negotiations on the detail of the programme will be speedily concluded to allow work to go ahead on this major enhancement to an important NATO Ally's naval capability.

TRANSPORT

Decca Transmission System

55. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the future of the Decca transmission system and the continued availability of navigator-receiver facilities for fishermen.

Mr. Moore: The Government have had many representations in recent years about the Racal Decca navigator system. I fully appreciate the importance of these services for fishermen.

Bypasses

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in regard to the attraction of private investment into the construction of bypasses on trunk roads where traffic relief can be achieved for local communities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport has considered a number of options for attracting private investment into new construction schemes on trunk roads, but none has yet been found satisfactory. Any further proposals put forward would be given serious consideration. My right hon. Friend is writing to my hon. Friend about improvements to the A11 at Red Lodge in his constituency.

Community Transport

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to discuss the role of community transport with appropriate voluntary organisations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport is in close and regular touch with the community transport sector at both national and local levels through the National Advisory Unit for Community Transport and through Community Transport United Kingdom and its local branches.

Air Traffic (London)

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the implications for his Department in terms of additional staffing of the recommendations contained in the document, "Air Traffic Distribution in the London Area" (CAP 522), recently published by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the extra cost to his Department of implementing the recommendations made by the Civil Aviation Authority in their document "Air Traffic Distribution in the London Area" (CAP 522).

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I are still considering the CAA's recommendations. I do not expect any extra cost to the Department from such recommendations as we decide to implement.

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for scheduled flights to regional airports, and, in particular, to Manchester, Inverness and Dundee, of the recommendations relating to traffic movements contained in the Civil Aviation Authority's report "Air Traffic Distribution in the London Area", (CAP 522).

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I are taking account of such implications in our consideration of the CAA's advice.

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to respond to the proposals from the Civil Aviation Authority regarding "Air Traffic Distribution in the London Area", (CAP 522); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. My right hon. Friend and I are still considering the CAA's advice and intend to make an announcement in due course.

Airline Industry (Self-regulation)

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to allow the airline industry to continue on a self-regulating basis, so far as the allocation of traffic movements at peak periods is concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have always favoured such self-regulation where it is appropriate and feasible; and will continue to do so.

M25 (Traffic Survey)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received and studied the report on the survey of traffic using the M25; and if he will make a statement on its findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants have studied peak-hour congestion problems on the south-west sector of the motorway. They were asked to advise whether the best solution would be remodelling junctions, improving traffic management, widening carriageways or a combination of these measures. An announcement will be made shortly when we have decided what measures to take. Traffic flows on the remainder of the motorway are being kept under review.

Sea Pollution (Plastics)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what efforts are being made by Her Majesty's Government to control the amount of persistent plastics entering the sea from coastal tipping and ships' garbage.

Mr. Moore: The United Kingdom has recently ratified annex V of the MARPOL 73/78 convention. This annex contains regulations for the prevention of pollution by garbage from ships. The United Kingdom ratification brings to 44 per cent. the proportion of world tonnage covered by international ratifications. Before international entry into force can take place the tonnage figure must reach at least 50 per cent.

The regulations of the annex contain a total prohibition on the disposal into the sea of all plastics.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Nets (Mesh Sizes)

11. Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the European Economic Community Commission proposal to increase the minimum mesh size in the North sea and the west of Scotland demersal fisheries from 80 mm to 90 mm from 1 January 1987.

Mr. Gummer: The Council of Ministers decided in 1984 on this increase for the North sea, subject to further consideration being given to possible derogations for sole, plaice and whiting. The Government believe that decision was fully justified, and that there remains an overriding need to improve conservation of the white fish stocks in the North sea. However, we are currently seeking as far as possible to reconcile that aim with the needs of particular groups of fishermen.

We need more study before reaching a decision on the Commission's more recent proposal for the west of Scotland.

Lamb (Sales)

12. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the sale of lambs for the first five months of 1986.

Mr. Gummer: Although the actual number of sales of lamb are not available, the number of sheep and lambs slaughtered in the United Kingdom in the first five months of 1986 was 4·213 million.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing information available to him on (a) the average price of lamb over the last 12 weeks and (b) the average price of lamb in the comparable 12 weeks in 1985.

Mr. Gummer: The following table gives the information requested:

Great Britain
Average market prices for lambs and other clean sheep (pence per kg)

Week commencing	1986	1985	Week commencing
14 April	266·05	245·64	15 April

Sheep

13. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of controls on the movement and slaughter of sheep that he announced on 20 June.

Mr. Jopling: It is too early to assess the effect of these controls. However, in the areas of Cumbria and north Wales, which were released from restriction on 4 July, marketings and prices of lambs have been encouraging.

26. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement giving details of his plans to compensate sheep farmers for losses arising from the ban on the movement and slaughter of sheep in certain areas.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy).

32. Mr. Parry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the restriction of movement of lambs in Cumbria and north-west Wales where high levels of radioactive caesium have been detected.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) and for Ogmore (Mr. Powell).

Chernobyl (Monitoring)

14. Mr. Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the timing of his statement on 20 June, he plans to review his Ministry's arrangements for monitoring following the Charnobyl disaster.

Mr. Jopling: No. I am satisfied that the comprehensive monitoring programme undertaken by me Department since the accident at Chernobyl has been sufficient to enable appropriate and timely action to be taken in order to ensure the safety of food supplies.

19. Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the results on the radioactivity levels of grass following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Jopling: Results of analyses of grass samples were inluded in the data published by the Department of the Environment on 15 May and by my Department on 20 June 1986. These have been placed in the Library of the House.

Food Prices

15. Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current rate of increase of food prices.

17. Mr. Hannam asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the movement of food prices since May 1979.

Mrs. Fenner: Between May 1979 and May 1986, the food component of the retail prices index rose at an average annual rate of 6·6 per cent. and the rate is currently 3·1 per cent. This contrasts with an average rate of increase in food prices of 16·4 per cent. per annum during the period February 1974 to May 1979 when the previous Administration held office.

North Sea Herring

16. Mr. Dixon asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the EEC Commission regarding the quota allocation of North sea herring to Norway in the 1986 quota negotiations; and what will be his policy towards this in the next round of quota negotiations.

Mr. Gummer: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have told this House on several occasions, we have expressed our dissatisfaction to the Commission more than once at the way the negotiations for North sea herring were conducted with Norway.

Recently a joint working group of Community and Norwegian scientists has produced a report on this stock and this will form a basis for further discussions on its sharing. We are closely studying this report.

New Fishing Vessels

18. Mr. Pollock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to increase the cash allocations to the Sea Fish Industry Authority in respect of assistance with the building of new fishing vessels.

Mr. Gummer: We are currently reviewing the financial provision in respect of grants towards the construction of new fishing vessels and I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Food Labelling

20. Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to lay before Parliament regulations for fat content labelling of food.

Mrs. Fenner: Comments on the proposals for fat content labelling regulations issued in February are still being assessed. We hope to lay regulations before Parliament later this year.

Cereals (Co-responsibility Levy)

21. Mr. Bermingham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the anticipated pattern of operation of the cereals co-responsibility levy in the United Kingdom.

41. Mr. Freud asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the operation of payment of co-responsibility levies on cereals.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the replies given earlier to the hon. Members for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) and for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett).

30. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the National Farmers Union about the response of cereal producers to the proposed levy for research, development, promotion and export; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: None. However, the National Farmers Union has stated that it regards the outcome of the poll of cereal growers as providing clear support for industry funding of all three of the proposed projects.

53. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the co-responsibility levy on cereals does not discriminate against small and medium livestock producers.

Mr. Gummer: The cereals co-responsibility levy applies to all grain that undergoes first processing, is exported to non-Community countries or is purchased into intervention. Only the processing of grain by a producer on his own agricultural holding for use on that holding irrespective of size is exempt from levy.

Sugar Beet Growers

22. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the prospects for the United Kingdom sugar beet growers.

Mr. Gummer: I regularly receive representations from producers' representatives and others about the prospects for sugar beet growers in the United Kingdom. I consider those prospects to be satisfactory.

Sheep (Radiation)

23. Mr. Strang asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the number of sheep in England and Wales which have registered levels of caesium 134 and caesium 137 in excess of 1,000 Becquerels per kilo since the accident at Chernobyl.

Mr. Jopling: Latest results of testing in England and Wales are being placed in the Library of the House today and tomorrow. On the basis of these results and data aleady published by this Department and the Welsh Office, 54 sheep in England and 68 sheep in Wales (including 20 young lambs specially selected from one flock for testing for scientific purposes) have been found to contain combined levels of caesium 134 and caesium 137 in excess of 1,000 Bq/kg.

29. Mr. Torney asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action he proposes to ensure the future safety of the consumer from eating siblings of the sheep that are at present affected by radiation from the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Jopling: Controls on the movement and slaughter of all sheep from areas where meat has been shown by testing to contain elevated levels of radioactivty will continue for as long as necessary to ensure that when the sheep are marketed their meat will be below the recommended action level.

Surplus Butter

24. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the objective of the European Economic Community decision to provide further subsidies to enable surplus butter to be fed to cows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No such decision has been taken. But a proposal is currently under discussion which would introduce a subsidy on the incorporation into animal feed of intervention butter purchased before July 1983. The aim of this is to reduce the oldest stocks for which no other outlets are likely to be available.

49. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much butter was stored in intervention (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Community on the latest date for which figures are available; and what percentage increases these figures represent over the previous year.

Mr. Gummer: As at 26 June 1986 there were 228,136 tonnes of intervention butter stored in the United Kingdom and 1,288,081 tonnes of intervention butter stored in the European Community, as a whole. These figures are, respectively, 29 per cent. and 33 per cent. higher than the corresponding figures on 27 June 1985.

Farm Forestry

25. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the industry to promote farm forestry.

Mrs. Fenner: Towards the end of last year, the Agriculture Departments initiated consultations on the interdepartmental report "Woodland as a Farm Crop". Subsequently the National Farmers Union has produced its own policy document on the subject "Farming Trees". We look forward to discussing the union's proposals with it in due course.

Agriculture Policy

27. Mr. Cash asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what priorities in agriculture policy he proposes during Britain's current presidency of the European Community.

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what agriculture policy initiatives he will propose during the United Kingdom's tenure of the Presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Jopling: As President of the Council, I shall work for decisions on long-term reform of the beef and veal regime, socio-structural measures, and the quantities of New Zealand butter to be imported under the special arrangements in 1987 and 1988.

Farming Industry (Indebtedness)

28. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any proposals to reduce the current state of indebtedness of the farming industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: No. The extent to which individual farm businesses have recourse to borrowing is a matter for decision by those managing such businesses. Support is provided to the farming industry in other ways.

Food Irradiation

31. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning irradiation of food.

Mrs. Fenner: The Department of Health and Social Security published the report of the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods on 10 April inviting comments by 31 July. My Department have received a number of representations from individuals concerning the labelling of irradiated foods which was the subject of an appendix to the report.

Milk Quota

33. Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has decided what the figure for the annual milk production per cow for the standard milk quota should be in the determination of the quota compensation formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In setting the prescribed quota per hectare for England and Wales I intend to use a yield per cow of 4,500 litres and a stocking rate of 1·8 cows per forage hectare. This gives a figure of 8,000 litres per hectare after rounding. Lower figures will be set for the less favoured areas. I intend prescribing 7,000 litres per hectare for disadvantaged land and 6,000 litres per hectare for severely disadvantaged land. I am also considering prescribing separate figures for certain breeds of cattle.

In all cases the prescribed quota will be approximately 11 per cent. below the corresponding prescribed average yield. This means that the standard quota for any particular holding will be normally some 11 per cent. below the yield which is considered reasonable for that holding having regard to the quality of the land and the climatic conditions.

Farm School Link Project (Suffolk)

34. Mr. Yeo asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay an official visit to one of the farms involved in Suffolk county council's farm school link project.

Mr. Jopling: I am always glad to see the development of schemes designed to engender a better understanding of farming and the countryside and if invited to see some of this work in Suffolk I or one of my ministerial colleagues will endeavour to take the opportunity to do so.

Lambs (Radiation)

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the question of radioactivity levels in lamb.

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received since he imposed restrictions on the movement of sheep as a result of caesium levels contained in lambs following fall-out from the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Jobling: I have received a number of representations from farming organisations and others affected by the restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep. Most of these relate to the timing of the controls and their effect upon the farming and ancillary industries.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas.

36. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in designating environmentally sensitive areas.

Mrs. Fenner: We are currently examining the proposals submitted by the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission. Once this examination is completed we shall consult my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment before making an announcement.

Cereal Surplus

37. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in formulating a policy in regard to the cereal surplus.

Mr. Gummer: Cereals policy is a matter for the Community as a whole, and there has been extensive discussion of the problems facing this sector over the past year. The measures agreed at this year's price fixing will go some way to bringing the sector into better balance, although much more still needs to be done.

43. Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present state of cereal surplus in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: There were 5·3 million tonnes of grain in intervention stores in the United Kingdom on 1 July 1986, the start of the new marketing year. Cereal surpluses are a matter for the Community as a whole. The Government will continue to press for measures to bring supply and demand for cereals in the Community into better balance.

Consumers Committee (Report)

38. Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the report from the consumers' committee calling for a new consumers' body to be established in relation to his Ministry.

51. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve consumer representation within his ambit of responsibility.

Mrs. Fenner: This recommendation in the report has been carefully considered, but my right hon. Friend the Minister is not convinced that the existing extensive arrangements for consulting consumers on matters of concern to his Department would be materially improved by the addition of such a body.

Beef Progeny Testing

39. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial assistance is provided by his Department for beef progeny testing.

Mr. Gummer: No direct financial assistance is given for this purpose, but the Ministry does fund certain other research directed towards beef improvement.

Food and Environment Protection Act 1985

40. Mr. Eastham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether regulations under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 will come into force in time for this autumn's spraying season.

Mrs. Fenner: As the hon. Gentleman will now know, regulations controlling pesticides have been laid in the House. We hope that the first of these regulations will come into force on 6 October 1986.

Budget

42. Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the balance of expenditure and commitments on the agricultural budget.

Mr. Jopling: The present Budget for 1986 as adopted by the European Parliament provides 22,009 mecu for expenditure under the common agricultural policy (CAP). The Commission has stated that this amount is insufficient to finance likely requirements and has proposed a supplementary budget which provides a further 1,015 mecu for CAP expenditure. The Commission has also suggested that it may be necessary to carry forward some expenditure into 1987, but it is too early to say whether this will happen.

Privatisation

44. Dr. Marek asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on his plans to privatise the National Seed Development Organisation and the Plant Breeding Institute.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I have received the report of Lazard Brothers and Company Ltd. on the possible privatisation of the National Seed Development Organisation and part of the Plant Breeding Institute. We are now considering the contents of the report and my right hon. Friend will make a statement as soon as decisions have been taken.

Food Quality

45. Mr. Caborn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his priorities in improving the quality of food.

Mrs. Fenner: There is already comprehensive legislation regulating the safety, quality and labelling of food. Regulations are kept under review so that appropriate initiatives can be taken in response to new developments.

Intervention Stores (Yorkshire)

46. Mr. Flannery asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the places in south Yorkshire used for storage of European Economic Community intervention stocks.

Mr. Jopling: Intervention stores in south Yorkshire are located at Tickhill, Kirk Sandall, Thorne and Sheffield.

Producer Confidence

47. Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the current level of producer confidence in the British agricultural industry.

Mr. Jopling: This year's CAP prices settlement built on the progress made in 1984 and 1985 in adjusting the CAP to bring it more into line with the needs of the market. At the same time the modest devaluation of the green pound and our avoidance of measures which would have discriminated against the United Kingdom enabled us to secure a settlement that not only contributes to the continuing adaptions which are needed but also provides a fair and balanced outcome for our producers. I believe that our farmers understand the need to make progressive changes and are working constructively to apply them.

Acid Rain

48. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department monitors the effects of acid rain on agriculture.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department does not monitor the specific effects of acid rain on agriculture. However, the Government maintain a national air pollution monitoring network, the results of which, supported by specific research findings, indicate that the levels of acid deposition in the United Kingdom have no discernible effect on agriculture.

Agricultural Rents

50. Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what general movement there has been in agricultural rents since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1984; and if he is satisfied with the operation of that Act.

Mrs. Fenner: The Ministry's annual farm rent inquiry showed that between mid-October 1984 and mid-October 1985 the average rent in England increased by 6·1 per cent., compared with an increase of 7·8 per cent. in the previous 12-month period.

It is still too soon to make any firm assessment of the effect of the Agricultural Holdings Act 1984 on the tenanted sector. I was, however, encouraged by the Central Association of Agricultural Valuers' 1985 survey of tenanted farms, which suggested that there had been an increase in fresh lettings since the passing of the 1984 Act.

Rhubarb

52. Mr. O'Brien asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a report showing the total of rhubarb imports for the past five years, and the amount from different countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that no figures are available as there is no separate trade classification for rhubarb. However, the inquiries I have carried out indicate that during the last five years, total imports of rhubarb have been small; the main supplier has been Holland.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any further representations about the allocating of milk quotas between landlords and tenants.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend and I have received further representations from hon. Members, representative organisations and individuals on quota value apportionment both in relation to the end of tenancy provisions in the Agriculture Bill and to the Community outgoers scheme.

We are in regular contact with landlord and tenant representatives and have also tabled amendments to the Agriculture Bill reflecting the concern expressed by hon. Members.

Ministerial Priorities

Mr. Evans asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state his latest priorities for agriculture and fisheries during the United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member, as far as agriculture is concerned, to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend, the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash); and on fisheries matters to the reply I gave on 12 June to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan).

Farm Safety

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he proposes to take to improve farm safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Responsibilities for farm safety rest primarily with the Health and Safety Executive.

Accidents on farms result largely from an inadequate understanding by farmers, their families and their employees of the hazards associated with agricultural buildings, machinery and livestock. It is for all those who are in charge of, or who themselves undertake, agricultural operations or who are responsible for children on farms to become much more safety conscious, to identify the danger points, to ensure that the proper safety precautions are followed at all times and to recognise the importance of adequate training in accident prevention.

We therefore welcome the initiative of the Health and Safety Executive in publishing its report on fatal accidents on farms "Agricultural Black Spot—A Study of Fatal Accidents", copies of which have, I understand, been placed in the Library of the House. This brings home in a readable and graphically illustrated form just how easy it is to become another farm fatality. I believe that this publication should be read by everyone who live or works on a farm.

Stilton Cheese

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the export figures for Stilton cheese in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what readings of caesium 137 and caesium 134 were recorded in rainwater from 2 May onwards; what information was available at that stage about the likelihood of these radioisotopes of caesium being transferred within weeks to the livestock that were maturing for slaughter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Data on levels of caesium 137 and caesium 134 in rainwater were included in the raw data published by the Department of the Environment on 15 May 1986, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

As soon as it became apparent that there had been high deposition of radioactivity in certain areas, my Department intensified testing of foods considered to present a risk. This testing initially concentrated on milk and vegetables, but it was later extended to meat, in which radioactivity takes longer to appear. When we became aware of an elevated reading in young lamb taken from Cumbria, testing of sheep from this area was stepped up to establish the extent of the problem and ensure that appropriate action was taken.

Agricultural Land (Planning Controls)

Sir John Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to seek to extend planning controls to agricultural land; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Questions of planning control are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, but it is not Government policy to seek to extend controls to agriculture unless control is warranted in particular types of case.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date in May, (a) he, (b) his junior Minister and (c) his officials were first informed that there was a problem relating to caesium 134 and caesium 137 in the Welsh and Cumbria Hills.

Mr. Jopling: Immediately after the information was received by my officials, I was informed on 22 May that radiocaesium in excess of 1,000 Bq per kg had been found in a 12-week-old lamb in Cumbria. The results of monitoring, including this reading, were included in my Department's press notice of 30 May. Monitoring of foodstuffs had been taking place since early May but was intensified in areas such as Cumbria and north Wales where deposition levels were likely to be high in order to determine whether there was a need for further action. At the same time, an investigation was undertaken of the rainfall deposition patterns across the country in collaboration with the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology to establish more precisely the areas and likely volumes of produce affected. The results of the further sampling became available from the middle of June when it became apparent that there was a general pattern of elevated levels of radiocaesium in areas of high rainfall on 2 and 3 May. Since there was a possibility that sheep from these areas could go on to the market within the next few weeks my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I decided to introduce restrictions in England and Wales on the movement and slaughter of sheep for 21 days from 20 June. We have since been able to release some of the areas from 3 July and today, while retaining restrictions in the remaining areas until 24 July.

Flood and Drainage Protection

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim), Official Report, 14 November 1985, columns 279-80, about flood and drainage protection, whether the value of increased milk production may not be used in benefit calculations in the investment appraisal of arterial drainage, flood protection and sea defence schemes.

Mrs. Fenner: No account is taken of the value of increased milk production in benefit calculations for arterial drainage, flood protection and sea defence schemes, as under the current EC regime there can be no production of milk from drained land that is additional to the national quota.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Food Irradiation

54 Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he expects to introduce measures controlling food irradiation.

Mr. Whitney: Food irradiation is already controlled by the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1967, as amended, responsibility for the enforcement of which is vested in the local and port health authorities. We have no plans at present for amendments to these regulations.

Board and Lodging

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of substandard board and lodgings reported by his Department's local inspectors during the year up to April; and in how many cases the local authority is recorded as having taken action, given (a) nationally, (b) by his Department's regions and (c) by his Department's local office areas;

(2) what instructions he has issued to his Department's local offices to report apparently substandard board and lodging accommodation to local authorities so that they can take appropriate action for the period after April 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The instructions issued to local offices in March 1985 (circular S 12/85) concerning the reporting to local authorities of apparently substandard houses in multiple occupation remain current although offices are no longer required to maintain statistics.

Returns have not yet been received from all local offices but the latest available information indicates that nationally the number of apparently substandard houses in multiple occupation reported to local authorities during the year ended April 1986 was 327 and that action to improve standards was taken in 165 cases.

The regional and local offices area breakdown of these figures is shown in the table (offices supplying 'nil' returns are excluded):

Aspirin (Children)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department first became aware of the dangers of giving aspirin to children under 12 years of age in the context of Reye's syndrome; what consultation was under-taken with the relevant authorities in the United States of America on these dangers; and what specific research was commissioned in the United Kingdom on this matter.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 13 June at columns 336-67. In addition, written and oral inquiries and other contacts were made between members of the professional secretariat of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and officials of the United States Food and Drugs Administration on issues arising from the American experience of Reye's syndrome and aspirin.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines at any time suggested to him or his officials, that the age below which aspirin should not be given because of the risk of Reye's syndrome, should be 16 years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the additional annual cost of paying the level of retirement pension payable in the United Kingdom to British retirement and widowed pensioners aged 75 years and over living in all those territories not covered by a reciprocal agreement with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The additional cost of paying pensions at today's rates for a full year to all British retirement and widowed pensioners aged 75 years and over living in countries with which the United Kingdom does not have a reciprocal agreement providing for pension increases is estimated to be approximately £46·4 million.

Low Income Families

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he plans to publish the 1983 low income families tables.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 8 July.

Nursing Learners

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, columns 63-64, if he will make a statement on why there was a 3·8 per cent. decline in the number of nursing learners in England from 1983 to 1984; and what steps he proposes to take to halt the decline.

Mr. Hayhoe: The 3·8 per cent. (3010 whole-time equivalents) reduction in nurse learners between 1983 and 1984 relates to all nurse learners whether they are undertaking basic nurse training or post-basic health visiting, district nurse or midwifery training. The greatest change occurred in those undertaking enrolled nurse training where the numbers dropped by 3,250 WTEs during the period. Recruitment to such training may have been affected by uncertainty about the future of enrolled nursing following the issue of a consultative document by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting proposing abolition of the grade. No decision has yet been made about this. However, the numbers undertaking registered nurse training increased by 230 WTEs.

Many factors affect the future demands for nurse training and the picture will obviously vary between localities and specialties. It is therefore the responsibility of each health authority to determine its policy for further recruitment of nurse learners within the priorities and resources available. The Government's policy of better manpower planning is encouraging health authorities to pay closer attention to the need to match their training programmes to realistic service plans. It seems that fewer qualified nurses are leaving the Health Service and this is reflected in the reduction in the numbers health authorities need to recruit into training.

The statutory body responsible for regulating nurse education and training (the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting) is currently consulting the professions about proposals for changes in the way nurses, midwives and health visitors are trained. When the council's firm proposals come forward for consideration by Ministers, one of the prime concerns will be to ensure that service needs can be met in any new arrangements which follow.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any further plans for changes in housing benefit regulations.

Mr. Newton: We have today laid before Parliament the Housing Benefit Amendment (No. 4) Regulations 1986, providing for a number of changes to take effect from 28 July 1986.

The regulations complete the legislative provision for the housing benefit proposals announced in my right hon. Friend's uprating statement to the House on 24 February by removing the requirement for a non-dependant deduction to be made in new cases in respect of non-householders on supplementary benefit aged 21 to 24 living within a household. This is the counterpart of the proposal already agreed by the House that non-householders in this age group who claim supplementary benefit or who reach the age of 21 on or after 28 July will no longer receive a non-householder housing addition. The effect is to protect the overall benefit position of households where the householder is on supplementary benefit or housing benefit.

The regulations also provide for the implementation of a proposal, which has been the subject of consultation to the Social Security Advisory Committee, to exclude from eligibility for housing benefit people who are accommodated by local social services authorities under various Acts. Such provision has always been regarded as part of local authority social services responsibilities, but a number of local authorities had begun to invite housing benefit claims since they were not specifically excluded by existing provisions.

The Social Security Advisory Committee's report on this proposal, which has also been laid before Parliament today together with the Secretary of State's response (Cmnd. 9833), endorses the Government's view that it is in principle reasonable that the cost to social services departments of providing local authority residential accommodation should not be subsidised through the housing benefits scheme. The committee was concerned, however, that the draft regulations would have the effect of removing help through housing benefit from people in group homes or similar accommodation who were seeking to return to an independent life in the community. The Government have accordingly amended the regulations to ensure that people living in group homes and similar accommodation continue to be entitled to support through the housing benefit scheme.

The regulations also modify the housing benefit rules to help elderly owner occupiers using home income plans to turn the capital value of their home into a regular income. At present, the whole of the income generated, including that part which is deducted at source as mortgage interest, is taken into account for housing benefit purposes. Under the new regulations, the mortgage interest deductions will be disregarded so that only the income actually received will be taken into account. This change should improve the position for some 7,500 pensioner owner-occupiers. The Social Security Advisory Committee has agreed that this beneficial change did not need to be referred to it.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 25 June, Official Report, columns 209-10, which of the objectives for the revised housing benefit subsidy arrangments were considered by his Department not to be met by the proposal to restrict direct subsidy to 80 per cent. of benefit expenditure.

Mr. Major: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), the proposal to include 20 per cent. of benefit costs in the rate support grant arrangements did not meet our objectives of providing an adequate incentive for authorities to control costs and a fair level of support for expenditure they properly incur.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report a borough breakdown of moneys paid to landlords on behalf of public and private tenants in housing benefit during 1985-86; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the highest individual weekly sum currently paid to a landlord in housing benefit;

(3) what percentage of the sum paid in housing benefit during 1985-86 was paid to private landlords;

(4) how many domestic hereditaments owned by private landlords house tenants in receipt of housing benefits.

Mr. Major: We do not collect information on direct payments of housing benefit to landlords, or on the number of dwellings owned by private landlords which are occupied by tenants in receipt of housing benefit. In 1985-86, an estimated £780 million was paid in rent allowances (including those paid direct to the landlord, but excluding in all cases any expenditure classified as rate rebates) for around 1·2 million private tenants. This represented about 17 per cent. of total housing benefit expenditure.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to send a reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, of 15 May on housing benefit and to which he said on 2 July, Official Report, column 1040, he had signed a reply.

Mr. Major: I have written to the hon. Member.

Medicines (Product Licensing)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what regulations govern the sale, marketing, prescription by doctors and use of drugs without a product licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The primary and subordinate legislation which allows medicinal products to be manufactured, sold or supplied without a product licence in particular circumstances is as follows:

The Medicines Act 1968: section 9 (exemptions for doctors, dentists, etc); section 10 (exemptions for pharmacists); and section 12 (exemptions in respect of herbal remedies);
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Foods and Cosmetics) Order 1971 (SI 1971 No. 1410) (as amended);
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Special and Transitional Cases) Order 1971 (SI 1971 No. 1450) (as amended);
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Special Cases and Miscellaneous Provisions) Order 1972 (SI 1972 No. 1200) (as amended);
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1974 (SI 1974 No. 498);
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Ingredients) Order 1974 (SI 1974 No. 1150); and
The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1981 (SI 1981 No. 164).

Drugs (Safety)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will classify the drugs whose safety has been discussed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in the last year according to whether the number of prescriptions issued annually for the drug was (a) over five million, (b) over two million, (c) over one million, (d) over half a million and (e) under half a million;

(2) in the last five years how many drugs have been discussed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; in how many cases: (a) the drug was voluntarily withdrawn by the manufacturer, (b) withdrawn by order of the Committee, (c) had the usage changed on the advice or instructions of the Committee and (d) no regulatory action taken at the time or subsequently;

(3) how many drugs, whose safety is currently being assessed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, have over 1 million prescriptions issued for them annually; and which are these drugs;

(4) if he will list the five drugs for which the monthly number of yellow card adverse reaction cards has increased most in the last six months; if he will give the latest figures for the monthly number of reports and the percentage increase;

(5) what procedures are adopted to ensure the integrity and independence of the Committee on Safety of Medicines when the safety of a drug is being discussed and members of the Committee have themselves or through their departments received money from the company manufacturing the drug;

(6) when the Committee on Safety of Medicines scrutinises the safety of a drug, which individuals, organisations and institutions are (a) informed and (b) requested to give their views or provide evidence; and, in particular, what information is given to the manufacturing company and what information is sought from it.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Drugs (Freedom of Information)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will request his officials to discuss with their counterparts in the United States Food and Drug Administration the advantages and disadvantages of their activities being governed by the Freedom of Information Act; if he will request them to prepare a report on their conclusions; and if he will place the report in the Library;

(2) if he will initiate legislation to exempt the committee proceedings of the Committee on Safety of Medicines from the Official Secrets Act;

(3) on how many occasions his Department has discussed with the Committee on Safety of Medicines the question of secrecy about the proceedings of the committee; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Zantac

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the United States Food and Drug Administration informed the Committee on Safety of Medicines of its intention to reprimand Glaxo for allegedly making unsubstantiated claims about Zantac; if the Committee on Safety of Medicines has discussed the marketing of the drug; and if the Committee has expressed to Glaxo any reservations about its marketing in general and its advertising in particular.

Mr. Hayhoe: Neither my Department nor the Committee on Safety of Medicines has heard from the United States Food and Drug Administration directly about the promotion in the States of the drug Zantac. I have seen no evidence to suggest that this drug is being improperly marketed in the United Kingdom. However, if the right hon. Member has any evidence to the contrary, I will be glad to consider it.

Pharmaceuticals (On-site Inspections)

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many inspection visits were carried out in overseas pharmaceutical production sites for each of the last five years within (a) the European Economic Community, (b) the United States of America and (c) other sites in countries not covered by the mutual arrangements under the pharmaceutical inspection convention.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the past five years medicines inspectors made the following inspection visits:

	EC Countries	United States	Other sites in countries not in Pharmaceutical Inspection Convention
1981	37	26	3
1982	29	31	9
1983	32	17	21

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in the number of people on supplementary benefit in Stoke-on-Trent, North between 1979 to 1985; and what percentage change this represents.

Mr. Major: Stoke-on-Trent, North is covered for social security purposes by the Department's Stoke (North) Office but its boundaries are not conterminous with those of the constituency.

The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from this office in May in each of the years 1979 to 1985, and the percentage changes.

		Percentage change
1979	11,421	—
1980	11,915	+4·3
1981	14,460	+21·4
1982	17,196	+18·9
1983	18,365	+6·8
1984	18,515	+0·8
1985	18,567	+0·3

The change between 1979 and 1985 was 62·6 per cent.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of persons in receipt of supplementary benefit in: (a) the Barnsley area and (b) the Barnsley, West and Penistone constituency area for each year since 1979 to date.

Mr. Major: Barnsley is covered for social security purposes by two of the Department's Offices, Barnsley, East and Barnsley, West, but their boundaries are not conterminous.

The Barnsley, West and Penistone constituency is covered by Barnsley, West only but its boundaries are not conterminous with those of the constituency. The table shows the number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit in (a) both Barnsley offices and (b) Barnsley West only, on 6 May 1986 and on comparable dates since 1979.

Year	Barnsley area	Barnsley West

1985	18,690	7,952
1986	19,565	8,231

Mr. W. Pearce

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will pay the attendance allowance awarded to Mr. W. Pearce of Birmingham 34 on 6 June.

Mr. Newton: Payment of arrears from 14 April to 5 July was made on 8 July in a girocheque sent by the local office. I regret the delay, which arose from a departmental error. I understand my hon. Friend the Parliamentary under Secretary of State for Social Security has today written to the hon. Member about Mr. Pearce's case.

Under-fives Initiative

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will happen to the groups and projects currently funded under the under-fives initiative, after 31 March 1987.

Mr. Whitney: The under-fives initiative was set up for three years. We would expect that those projects which have proved their worth to their local communities, during the course of the initiative, will attract funds locally to enable them to continue.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to how many children receive (a) nursery places and (b) other services from projects funded under the under-fives initiative;

(2) what information he has as to how many people are employed in projects funded under the under-fives initiative.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available at present. Some data are contained in the first monitoring report on the initiative by Mr. Willem van der Eyken, a copy of which I am placing in the Library. Further reports by him will cover these areas more fully.

Mrs. F. M. Latham

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 24 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. F. M. Latham of 25 Ryder Brow road, Gorton, Manchester.

Mr. Fowler: I have replied to the right hon. Member.

Mortality

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 1 May, Official Report, column 470, if he has any information showing standardised mortality ratios of men aged 15 to 64 years according to social class based on occupations recorded in the 1981 census, and at death registration prior to and following the census, where occupations have been coded into social classes according to both the 1970 and 1980 classifications of occupations.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Visiting Officers (Waiting Times)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the normal waiting time for claimants awaiting his Department's visiting officers; and what was the comparable figure in 1983-84.

Mr. Major: On average it takes 10 days from the time when a case has been referred to a visiting officer of LOI grade until action following the visit has been completed. This is the same as in 1983-84. LOII grade officers, who handle a larger proportion of routine visits, take an average of 23 days to complete action on a visit, compared with 17 days in 1983-84.

Local Offices (Glasgow)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the current caseload statistics at each supplementary benefit and national insurance office in the Glasgow area, showing the number of staff presently in post and the corresponding figures for 1984.

Mr. Major: Information is not available on all areas of work in the form requested. The following tables show supplementary benefit cases in action and contributory benefit cases actioned on 8 May 1984 and 6 May 1986; the staff in post figures are for 1 July 1984 and 1 July 1986.

Single Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to dispose of single payment claims within 14 days of their submission.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 8 July. Regulations provide that, so far as practicable, claims should be decided within 14 days of their reference to an adjudication officer. The Chief Adjudication Officer's guidance is that, "it may not be 'practicable' where . . . a large number of claims are received in a short time span". (Paragraph 13052 of the S Manual, a copy of which is in the Library)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide additional resources for staffing to process single payment claims.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton on 7 March at column 322, in which he announced a major improvement to DHSS Social Security manpower. Over 5,000 staff have been made available in addition to the normal complement. This addition allows for increased single payment activity as well as for other matters. Additional staff are also being deployed in some areas, including in Scotland, for non-benefit related work.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate what proportion of claimants have outstanding claims for single payments in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The routine count* of the number of people receiving supplementary benefit made on 6 May 1986, and the special count of single payment work made in Scotland on 2 July to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member on 7 July at column 69, suggest that 16 per cent. of claimants in Scotland had outstanding claims for single payments on the latter date. Similar information for the United Kingdom is not available.

* 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payment claims are outstanding in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information in respect of these areas is not available. However, claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected; urgent claims are given priority.

Statistical Bulletins

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for each of the statistical bulletins published by his Department, the title, date of publication, subject matter, number of pages, number distributed free of charge, and number sold and at what price.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows. The sales figures given are numbers sold up to 30 May 1986:

ENVIRONMENT

Agricultural Land and Buildings (Rating)

56. Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to re-rate agricultural land or buildings.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have no such plans.

Water Abstraction and Effluent Discharge

58. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the NFU fish farming committee to discuss the abstraction of water and discharge of effluent.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware of the fish farming committee's concerns about these matters and am considering them but I have no plans to meet the chairman in the immediate future.

Hedgerows

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current rate of destruction or additions to hedgerows in (a) Hertfordshire and (b) England in miles and as a proportion of the total.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some indication of the rate of destruction for hedgerow for England is given in the recent Ministry of Agriculture survey of environmental topics on farms, which indicates an annual loss of 400 miles in England. This represents one sixth of one per cent. of the estimated total mileage of 270,900 miles of hedge on farms. This survey does not provide a breakdown to county level statistics.

Recently the National Environment Research Council institute of terrestrial ecology has published "Landscape Change in Britain" which identifies hedgerow losses of some 17,500 miles between 1978 and 1984 for the whole of England, Wales and Scotland, but a breakdown to England for county level statistics has not been given.

The Department of the Environment has commissioned Hunting Surveys and Consultants to conduct a survey of changes in landscape features. The report of this two-year research programme is expected shortly. It will include hedgerow information, but not broken down to county level.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to extend the relaxation of planning controls for onshore oil exploration to the extraction of any oil found; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. Some measures were introduced in March to relieve industry of the burden of making a specific planning application for some small and temporary minerals exploration operations, but it is not our intention to relax planning controls on operations for the exploration or extraction of onshore oil.

Homelessness

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of homeless people in Coventry for each half year since 1979.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Urban Programme

Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to provide fuller information on the operation of the urban programme.

Mr. John Patten: Copies of a report on the operation and achievements of the urban programme in England in 1985 have been placed in the Library of the House. The report describes the purposes for which the resources were used and recent improvements in the management of the programme, and draws out examples of good practice.

Wildlife and Countryside Act (Gould Report)

57. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to initiate consultation on the Gould report on the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

It has taken some time to examine in detail the large volume of complex technical material in the report, and we are currently considering the results of this work. We expect to announce our preliminary conclusions and to begin consultation soon.

Written Answers to Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff

Mr. Madden asked the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission how many staff in the House of Commons are now employed on a temporary basis; how that number compares with the same period in each of the last five years; how many staff have been made redundant in each of the last five years; how many full-time posts are occupied by staff recruited through, or employed by private contractors; and what are the equivalent figures in each of the last five years.

Mr. Beith: The number of staff employed on a temporary basis on 1 April in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1982	20
1983	23
1984	28
1985	44
1986	27

There were no redundancies in this period. On occasions staff from a secretarial agency are employed for short periods. In the Refreshment Department shortfalls in staff are covered on a day-to-day basis by the employment of agency staff and in the summer eight additional agency staff are employed on the Terrace. None of the agency staff occupy a full-time post on a permanent basis. There has been no significant variation in these arrangements over the last five years.

Summer Recess

Mr. Deakins asked the Lord Privy Seal on how many occasions since 1970 the House has adjourned for the summer recess (a) before 23 July, (b) between 23 and 26 July, (c) between 27 and 31 July and (d) in August.

Mr. Biffen [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 377]: Since 1970, the House has adjourned on three occasions between 23 and 26 July; on six occasions between 27 and 31 July; and on seven occasions in August.

PRIME MINISTER

Commonwealth

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister what objectives are served by the United Kingdom's membership of the Commonwealth; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The major objectives of our membership of the Commonweath remain:

(i) the maintenance and reinforcement of the continuing strong links at all levels between member states and their peoples;

(ii) continued support for the Commonwealth as an organisation which can play a constructive and stabilising role in world affairs, notably in promoting democratic principles, international understanding and world peace;

(iii) the development of the association as a unique channel for encouraging co-operation and understanding between the industrialised and developing countries;

(iv) the maximisation of the political and economic benefits of our Commonwealth membership.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister expressed as a percentage of the total known contracts given by the United States Government for research into the strategic defence initiative, how much British companies have secured.

The Prime Minister: The latest available figures show that for the period September 1985-February 1986 the value of strategic defence initiative research contracts let by the United States Government was almost US$600 million. The total value of SDI research contracts awarded to the United Kingdom so far amounts to US$15·5 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Library (Stormont)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that the facilities of the Library at Parliament buildings, Stormont, are made available to bona fide students and research workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I understand that the Clerk to the Assembly has in the past made these facilities available to bona fide students and research workers and that he will continue to look favourably on such requests in the future. The Library also provides a service to Northern Ireland Departments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Steel Industry

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the output of each various category of steel from plants in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available and for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

English Industrial Estates Corporation

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the progress of the funding arrangements of the English Industrial Estates Corporation which he announced on 19 March, Official Report, column 191.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is too early to report on the progress of long-term funding arrangements that were only introduced on 1 April this year; but I can confirm that we are still confident that these new arrangements will allow EIEC to maintain its development programme in the assisted areas at the same level as recent years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Costs

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost for the latest years for which figures are available, of a pupil or student in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes, (c) primary schools, (d) secondary schools, (e) independent schools on the assisted places scheme for assisted placements, (f) special schools, (g) non-advanced further education, (h) advanced further education and (i) universities.

Mr. Dunn: The latest available information is as follows:

Net institutional expenditure per pupil/fte student—

1984-85 ENGLAND
Maintained Sector
Nursery Schools	1,290
Nursery classes in Primary Schools	865
Other classes in Primary Schools	760
Secondary Schools	1,085
Special Education	3,560
Higher and Further Education
—advanced	3,050
—non-advanced	2,200
Assisted places
—all pupils	1,480
1983-84* GREAT BRITAIN
Universities	4,895

* Latest available figure.

Note:

(1) The assisted places and universities costs related to the Academic Year; otherwise the figures are for the financial year.

Greek Cypriot Students

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present number of Greek Cypriot students studying in British educational institutions; and what was the number in 1979.

Mr. Walden: In 1984 and 1979 there were 990 and 1,640 students respectively in Great Britain whose usual domicile was Cyprus. The proportion of these who were Greek Cypriots is not known.

Retirement Options

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report information available to him on the various retirement options of date and enhancement offered by education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Local education authorities have discretion, under the Teachers (Compensation for Redundancy and Premature Retirement) Regulations 1985, to award an additional period of service of up to 10 years, depending on age and service, to a teacher aged 50 or over who is subject to the teachers' superannuation regulations and who is retired on redundancy or in the interests of the efficient discharge of the employers' functions. Information about the levels of enhancement awarded by individual local education authorities is not available nationally.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the proportion of the research funding of each of the universities of Wales and England which is derived from sources other than Government funding.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to table 4 of the Universities' Statistical Record publication "University Statistics 1983-84" volume three, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on allowances made by the University Grants Committee when deciding upon allocations of funding to the smaller universities in England and Wales.

Mr. Walden: No allowances were made for the size of universities.

University of Wales

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on changes in grant aid to the constituent colleges of the University of Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Walden: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria are employed in deciding what funds the constituent colleges of the University of Wales receive for teaching through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Walden: Since 1967 the University Grants Committee has made special grants to the University of Wales for teaching through the medium of Welsh and for bilingual administration. The level of these grants was determined in relation to proposals put forward by the university. In its recent grant allocations for 1986-87 the committee agreed to maintain these grants at the current levels.

A-Level GCE

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to replace the A-Level general certificate of education system with less specialised courses.

Mr. Chris Patten: No.

Natural History Museum (Admission Charges)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning compulsory admission charges due to be imposed at the natural history museum in 1987.

Mr. Walden: Admission charges are a matter for the trustees of the Museum. The trustees announced in February that they intend to introduce such charges in April 1987. I understand that they have yet to decide on the details.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Radio

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to write to each of the applicants for a community radio licence explaining what his policy now is on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend made a full statement of the position on community radio in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 30 June at column 366-67. Letters have already been sent to all those who applied for licences enclosing a copy of that statement.

Interception of Communications Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants he has issued under the Interception of Communications Act in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: The Interception of Communications Act 1985 came into force on 10 April 1986. Statistics of interception warrants issued from 1979 to 1984 are given in the White Papers "The Interception of Communications in Great Britain" (Cmnd. 7873) and "The Interception of Communications in the United Kingdom" (Cmnd. 9438). In accordance with the policy followed by successive Governments I do not intend to add to these statistics.

Entry Refusals

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been refused entry to the United Kingdom in each month over the past year; if he will provide information about the sex and country of origin of each such person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to passengers removed from the United Kingdom after having been refused leave to enter. The table gives the figures by nationality for the latest available 12 months. Information on the sex of these passengers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Commonwealth citizens and foreign nationals refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom April 1985-March 1986

Drugs

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to lay an order to bring into force that section of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 which prohibits the supply etc. of articles for administering or preparing controlled drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are consulting the enforcement agencies about the timetable for implementation of the various provisions in the Drug Trafficking Offences Act, and shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) persons against whom action was commenced as alleged illegal immigrants in 1984, 1985 and the first quarter of 1986, respectively; (b) persons who were detained as a result of such action in those years and (c) persons who were removed as illegal immigrants or, subsequent to commencement of action, deported voluntarily in those years; if he will identify such persons by country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not readily available but I am arranging for it to be collated and will reply as soon as possible.

British Citizens Abroad (Franchise)

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the provision of the Representation of the People Act 1985 which extends the franchise to British citizens abroad will come into force; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The relevant provision of the Act comes into force today. British citizens living and working abroad who have been resident in the United Kingdom and registered as electors within the last five years can now make annual declarations which will enable them to be registered as overseas electors. Declaration forms and leaflets explaining the registration process, which we have kept as simple as possible, are available from British consulates and diplomatic missions. Declarations must be made before 10 October for inclusion in next year's electoral register. For people who were previously resident in Northern Ireland the closing date for making a declaration is 15 September. Overseas electors will be included in the register for the constituency where they were registered before they went abroad and will be able to vote by proxy at any parliamentary or European Parliament elections which occur while the register is in force.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran and Iraq (Military Equipment)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, further to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 569, the United States Government have brought to his attention any evidence of infringement of his guidelines on the supply of military equipment from the United Kingdom to Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Renton: As I told the hon. Member on 18 June, it is not our policy to comment in detail on discussions with other Governments. However I can assure the hon. Member that action would be taken if evidence were provided of infringement of our guidelines.

Interception of Communications Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many warrants he has issued under the Interception of Communications Act in each year since 1979.

Mr. Renton: The Interception of Communications Act 1985 came into force on 10 April 1986. Statistics on interception warrants issued from 1979 to 1984 are given in the White Papers "The Interception of Communications in Great Britain" (Cmnd. 7873) and "The Interception of Communications in the United Kingdom" (Cmnd. 9438). In accordance with the policy followed by successive Governments, I do not intend to add to these statistics.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums the Falkland Islands are receiving or will receive from European Economic Community development funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The European Community has recently approved the allocation of 364,000 ecu (about £233,000) for an extension to Port Stanley senior school. This project will use up the balance of the allocation to the Falkland Islands under the Fourth and Fifth European Development Funds. Previous expenditure in the Falkland Islands under these Funds amounted to 422,000 ecu (about £270,000).

The Falkland Islands will also benefit from a share of the 12·04 million ecu (about £7·7 million) being made available to United Kingdom dependent territories under the sixth European development fund for commitment over the next five years.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Adley asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about current trends in incoming tourism to Britain.

Mr. Trippier: Following record levels of incoming tourism in 1985 the upward trend was sustained during the first quarter of 1986 when visits were up by 10 per cent. However, during April visits to Britain fell by 15 per cent. over the corresponding period last year, but spending was down by only 3 per cent. We have no firm predictions for the rest of the year but the British Tourist Authority reports that traffic is now picking up again. It is hoped that this will be reflected later this year in the numbers of visitors to Britain. The Government firmly believe that tourism has excellent prospects of long term growth and that the decline in visitors from north America is merely a temporary setback.

Population and Labour Force (Statistics)

Mr. Ron Leighton asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the growth of population and the labour force at 10-yearly intervals since 1956 in the European Economic Community countries, the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the following table:

Annual average percentage changes

	Total Population			Total Labour Force
	1955-65	1965-75	1975-84	*1955-65	1965-75	1975-84

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Cohen asked the Paymaster General how many cases involving (a) Waltham Forest residents and (b) Waltham Forest employers were taken to industrial tribunals in the last five years; how many are currently awaiting a hearing; and how many involve the local authority.

Mr. Lang: I regret that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. If there is a particular problem the hon. Member may care to write to me.

Self-employed People

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General what are the latest figures available for the number of self-employed in Derbyshire; and how this compares with 1979.

Mr. Lang: The latest available information comes from the 1981 Census of Population and is contained in the "County Report for Derbyshire", part 1, ref: CEN 81 CR10, a copy of which is in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General how many people have been unemployed for more than one, two and three years, respectively, in each year since 1979 in Walthamstow, Kemptown (Brighton) and Leicester, East.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table gives figures for 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available and for April 1984 and April 1985. The comparison is affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Unemployed Claimants by Duration

	Walthamstow Parliamentary Constituency
	April 1984	April 1985	April 1986
Over one year	1,467	1,617	1,745
Over two years	714	908	1,021
Over three years	329	515	641
	Brighton Kemptown Parliamentary Constituency
Over one year	1,824	1,906	1,971

	April 1984	April 1985	April 1986
Walthamstow Parliamentary Constituency
Over two years	992	1,146	1,204
Over three years	512	673	809
Leicester East Parliamentary Constituency
Over one year	2,283	2,400	2,443
Over two years	1,227	1,380	1,508
Over three years	704	878	1,019

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what are the latest unemployment figures in the Brighton and Leicester travel-to-work areas by ward; what are the numbers of male and females under 25 years of age in each case and how many of these have been unemployed for more than one year; and what is the total number unemployed over one year in each case.

Mr. Lang: I am sending a copy of a computer printout giving the requested ward information, which is also available from the Library. The printout shows the requested figures as at 10 April 1986, for each of the 66 wards in the Brighton travel-to-work area and 72 wards of the Leicester travel-to-work area.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General if he will list the estimated and actual expenditure on special resettlement grants for the employment of disabled people in the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 on the job introduction scheme, adaptations to premises and equipment, assistance with fares to work, special aids to employment, and business on own account; how many disabled people were helped on projects involved in each case; and what is the estimated expenditure on each of these schemes in 1986.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the table:

	Job introduction scheme	Adaptations to premises and equipment	Fares to work	Special aids to employment	Business on own account
1983-84
Estimated expenditure	571,000	208,000	299,000	585,000	53,000
Actual expenditure	567,980	134,412	327,776	792,168	34,568
Disabled beneficiaries	1,850	170	604	1,268	13
1984-85

Actual expenditure	673,540	294,646	459,663	1,094,452	42,506
Disabled beneficiaries	1,828	165	911	2,386	6
1986-87
Estimated expenditure	837,000	449,000	520,000	1,230,000	104,000

MSC (Young People)

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what are the implications of the announcement of increased resources for the technical and vocational education initiative for the funding and development of other parts of the Manpower Services Commission's planned provision for young people.

Mr. Trippier: The cost of extending the technical and vocational education initiative will be found from the provision we have planned for young people within the Manpower Services Commission's budget. That provision is large and growing, numbers in the age group are falling, and the extension can be accommodated at not risk to the Commission's other programmes.

Long-term Unemployment

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the number of long-term unemployed interviewed under the restart scheme, together with the total number placed into (a) jobs, (b) community programmes, (c) job clubs, (d) enterprise allowance, (e) training schemes, (f) restart courses and (g) voluntary projects programme, for the standard age groups of under 24 years, 25 to 45 years and 45 years and over; and if he will further break down such totals according to sex and duration of unemployment, namely, one, two, three, four, and five years or more.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the tables. The first table relates to the pilot initiatives in nine selected areas of the country and the second table relates to the early results from the national restart initiative. I am unable to provide a breakdown in terms of age, sex and duration of unemployment at this stage. Such information will be available during September for the pilot areas but there are no plans to maintain similar records nationally.

Numbers interviewed and placed in pilot areas, for period 6 Jan-4 July

	Numbers
Interviewed	28,175
Placed in jobs	295
Placed on the community programme	1,310
Placed in jobclubs	273
Placed on the enterprise allowance scheme	72
Placed on training schemes	262
Placed on restart courses	2,114
Placed on the voluntary projects programme	84

Note

It is not known how many of those interviewed go on to find jobs or other positions themselves as a result of being re-motivated by restart, although a total of some 4,322 long-term unemployed people have ceased to claim unemployment benefit after being interviewed.

Numbers interviewed and placed nationally 12 May-12 June

	Numbers
Interviewed	7,469
Placed in jobs	33
Placed on the community programme	133
Placed in jobclubs	41
Placed on the enterprise allowance scheme	15
Placed on training schemes	65
Placed on restart courses	159
Placed on the voluntary projects programme	5

Job Creation

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to introduce a guaranteed minimum term of employment for those people who leave areas of high unemployment to take up jobs elsewhere.

Mr. Lang: We have no such plans, nor do we believe such action would be appropriate. I will write to my hon. Friend.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Afforestation

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the imposition of conditions on the granting of relief for private afforestation in the light of the proposals on the subject in the Nature Conservancy Council document, "Nature Conservation and Afforestation in Britain".

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax treatment of forestry does not distinguish between planting schemes on environmental, social or other grounds. The existing tax arrangements are of long standing and I have no plans at present to change them.

Race Horse Breeding (VAT)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of race horse owners who have ceased breeding in order to avoid paying value added tax in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: No information is available on which to base an estimate. Many factors besides VAT may influence race horse owners to cease breeding.

Value Added Tax

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects the European Commission to produce its formal proposals on raising the value added tax threshold.

Mr. Brooke: Later this year.

Arts (VAT)

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in respect of the contribution of the arts to value added tax receipts.

Mr. Brooke: A few representations have been received relating to VAT and the arts.

Armed Forces (VAT and Excise Duty)

Mr. George asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to exempt from value added tax and excise duties purchases of supplies and equipment for use by the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. The Ministry of Defence Vote takes into account the incidence of indirect taxes.

Capital Gains Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the change in the yield of capital gains tax if it were levied at 40 per cent. retaining all existing exemptions, but excluding tax on inflationary gains.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Possibly about one-third of the yield of capital gains tax would be lost.

Capital Transfer Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the yield of a donee based tax of 40 per cent. on all receipts of capital above (a) £50,000 per head and (b) £100,000 per head in place of capital transfer tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Insufficient information is recorded centrally about the recipients of gifts and legacies to enable estimates to be made of the yield of such a tax.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any Treasury civil servants were invited to the seminar chaired at the Barbican on 1 July by Sir Douglas Wass on freedom of information.

Mr. Brooke: There is no record of any civil servant in the Treasury being invited to attend this seminar.

"Official Report"

Mr. Leighton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copy holders are employed each evening to produce the daily Official Report at the St. Stephen's Parliamentary Press.

Mr. Brooke: The daily Official Report is printed at Hansard Press where 14 copy holders are employed. The number on duty each night varies with the shift pattern and production requirements.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest meetings of the European Community Budget Council and subsequent negotiations with the European Parliament on the 1986 Communities budget.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made earlier today.

Lead-free Petrol

Dr. David Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with oil companies about his proposals for tax concessions on lead-free petrol.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986]: Meetings have been held and correspondence exchanged between Customs and Excise officials and representatives of the oil industry. Good progress has been made, and the discussions are expected to be completed so that my right hon. Friend can take decisions in time for next year's Budget.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died of cervical cancer in Coventry in each of the last five years; and how this compares to the United Kingdom average.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of deaths to women usually resident in Coventry with an underlying cause of death of malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9) 180) in each of the last five years are shown in the table. Allowing for differences in age distribution, the incidence of death from cervical cancer has been on average 1 per cent. higher in Coventry than in the United Kingdom as a whole over this period. The Coventry results are based on very small numbers and from year to year fluctuate above and below the United Kingdom average.

Number of deaths from malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9) 180) to women usually resident in Coventry Metropolitan County District 1981 to 1985

	Number of deaths
1981	15
1982	13
1983	10
1984	15
1985	5

Hospitals (Food Poisoning)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of patients in hospitals suffering food poisoning from food prepared by (a) National Health Service run butchers and (b) private catering contractors have been recorded; and, of these, how many have proved fatal for the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information on food poisoning cases in hospitals available from the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre does not specify who prepared the food.

Hospitals (Private Contractors)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what proportion of meals prepared for patients in state hospitals was prepared by private contractors in the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally.

Prescriptions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report, for the last 10 years for which figures are available, the number of prescriptions issued by the National Health Service general practitioners.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the following table:

England

	Number of prescription forms (millions)	Number of items (millions)
1976	181·7	292·6
1977	181·3	295·6
1978	186·5	307·1
1979	184·0	304·6
1980	183·7	303·3
1981	181·1	300·0
1982	186·7	311·3
1983	188·5	315·3
1984	190·8	320·5
1985	191·6	318·6

North-West Hertfordshire District Health Authority

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the names of members of the North-West Hertfordshire district health authority, (b) what interest they represent, (c) by whom they were appointed and (d) the date their term of office expires.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally. Members of the North-West Hertfordshire district health authority are appointed by the North-West Thames regional health authority and the appropriate local authorities.

Abortions

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions have been carried out since 1968 to the latest available date; and how many were carried out in an emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Hayhoe: The total number of notifications of legal abortions, to resident and non-resident women, carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, from 27 April 1968 to 31 December 1985 in England and Wales, is 2,460,128. Of these, 121 were performed in an emergency in order to save the life of the pregnant woman. Provisional figures for abortions in the March quarter 1986 are due to be published in September 1986.

Medicines Inspectors

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of medicines inspectors to production facilities within the United Kingdom; and what information he has on comparable ratios in other countries that are signatories to the pharmaceutical inspection convention, including the United States of America and Canada.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the United Kingdom medicines inspectors inspect production facilities of licensed pharmaceutical manufacturers and of National Health Service hospitals. The ratio of inspectors to production facilities within the United Kingdom is 1:45.

Information on the ratio of inspectors to production facilities in other states which are signatories to the pharmaceutical inspection convention and the United States of America and Canada must be viewed with caution because of considerable differences in duties of inspectors and the legislative framework within which inspectors operate in those countries and the range and type of production facilities that are inspected. On the basis of information available to this Department, the following rough estimate has been prepared.

Pharmaceutical Inspection Convention States

Austria	1 to 55	Inspectors also inspect community pharmacies.
Denmark	1 to 40	Inspectors also inspect community pharmacies and undertake registration work.
Hungary	1 to 25
Ireland	1 to 25
Norway	1 to 3	Inspectors also inspect community pharmacies and undertake registration work.
Sweden	1 to 14	Inspectors also inspect community pharmacies.
Switzerland	1 to 25	Includes a significant number of part-time Inspectors.

Non Pharmaceutical Inspection Convention States

USA	1 to 8
Canada	1 to 8

Kidney Donations

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when, pursuant to the answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 460, he hopes to complete his examination with representative bodies of the medical profession of the possibility of introducing a voluntary code of practice into this country on opting out kidney donations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's chief medical officer wrote in March to the medical professions representative organisations seeking their views on the introduction of a voluntary code of practice under which doctors would agree, whenever a clinically suitable organ donor died, to ask relatives' permission for the organs to be removed for transplantation; his letters were not concerned with "opting-out". He has now received replies from four of the five organisations he wrote to, and is considering how the matter might best be taken forward. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

NHS (Managers)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list every regional, district or unit general manager who has so far resigned or been removed, the length of time they had held the post and the period of tenure that still remained to run at the time of their departure, the exact post held, their salary and the reason for their leaving.

Mr. Hayhoe: The general manager for the North-Western regional health authority resigned recently to pursue a management career in the private sector. Of 191 district general managers I understand that three have resigned, from the Central Birmingham, Macclesfield, and West Surrey-North-East Hampshire health authorities; but the hon. Member would need to approach the chairmen of those authorities about the information he seeks as it would not be right for me to give details relating to an officer's individual contract with his employing authority.

I regret that information concerning resignations amongst the 600 or so unit level managers is not held centrally.

NHS (Wages and Salaries)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the total funds made available for the National Health Service goes in wages and salaries; and what information he has about how this figure compares with other European Community countries.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986, c. 162]: The proportion of National Health Service expenditure devoted to wages and salaries is about 60 per cent. The figure varies between services: in the hospital and community health service, for example, 73 per cent. of revenue expenditure is spent on pay. I regret that information about comparisons with other European Community countries could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Dogs

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce the public health risks from dog mess.

Mr. Ancram: The Government fully shares the widespread concern about the nuisance and health risks caused by dogs fouling public places, and it is an offence in Scotland for a person in charge of a dog to allow it to deposit its excrement in certain places. The Government are considering what further steps may be taken to encourage dog owners to behave responsibly, and will make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to increase the criminal penalties imposed on dog owners whose dogs foul pavements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Allowing a dog to foul a pavement, or certain other areas, is an offence under section 48(1) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, which originally provided for a maximum fine of £50. By virtue of the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, that maximum fine is now expressed as a fine not exceeding level 2 of the standard scale. The value of fines on the standard scale was increased by order in 1984, and level 2 now stands at £100. There is no current proposal to increase the value of fines further, but the matter is kept under constant review.

Teachers

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has concerning the shortage of key teachers in particular education authorities; and what action he is proposing to ensure that they are enabled to discharge their statutory obligations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest published information on deficits and surpluses of secondary teachers analysed by subject and by education authority area, giving the position at September 1984, is contained in the Scottish Education Department's statistical bulletin No. 4/C1/1985 of September 1985, a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member. Information from the September 1985 school census, based on 80 per cent. returns, indicates a broadly similar picture. Following discussions earlier this year with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the General Teaching Council and the Joint Committee of Colleges of Education in Scotland in the context of determining intakes to teacher training at the colleges of education for session 1986-87, mathematics, physics, business studies, chemistry, computing and religious education were designated as national priority subjects for intake purposes; quota restrictions were wait completely in respect of the first three of these priority subjects.

School Closures

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy concerning school closures and amalgamations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: It is the view of my right hon. and learned Friend that the number of schools should be reduced broadly in line with the fall in pupil numbers to avoid tying up substantial resources in maintaining an outdated structure of educational provision.

School Buildings

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the level of maintenance of school buildings.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Since 1 April 1986, representations about the level of maintenance provided for school buildings have been received from Lothian regional council and Dumfries and Galloway regional council. The level of maintenance in specific schools was one significant factor in representations supporting school replacement proposals which were received from two hon. Members, from Orkney Islands council and from five parents in Shetland.

Individual education authorities are responsible for ensuring that their school buildings are properly maintained, and it is for each authority to determine its own priorities in the allocation of resources for this purpose.

Elderly People (Housing)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to bring about improvements in the housing stock in Scotland occupied by elderly people; if, in particular, he has any plans to improve the insulation of houses occupied by elderly people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In determining the allocations for capital expenditure by local authorities, the Government give priority to the provision of special needs housing, including housing for the elderly, although within the block allocation system individual local authorities are free to determine how they use the resources allocated to them to improve the level and quality of housing for the elderly. In addition, the Government have approved investment programmes for the SSHA, new towns and the housing association movement which ensure that they play a special part in the provision of housing for the elderly. Since 1979, the number of sheltered and amenity houses for the elderly has risen from 10,400 to over 25,000.

In regard to the insulation of houses occupied by elderly people, the homes insulation scheme 1984 already provides an enhanced rate of grant towards the cost of insulating lofts, including hot and cold water tanks, and pipes where an occupant of the house is in receipt of supplementary pension or allowance, or housing benefit.

It is hoped that the proposals for agency services outlined in the Green Paper. "Home Improvements in Scotland — A New Approach", will be of particular assistance to elderly owner-occupiers wishing to carry out improvements to their homes.

Conductive Education

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of mentally or physically handicapped children who receive conductive education enrol in normal schools.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am not aware that any child who has received conductive education has enrolled in a school in Scotland.

Colleges of Education

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the future of the colleges of education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 27 March at columns 591-93. Since then a further 56 letters have been received from organisations and 19 from individuals about the future of the colleges of education. There have also been more than 300 postcards signed by staff or students at the colleges of education, and petitions from the National Union of Students and from students at Dunfermline college of physical education. In the whole period since publication of the report of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council last December, 23 hon. Members have made representations on this topic. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make a statement shortly.

Students (Planning Courses)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students are currently studying on planning courses in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Schools (Books)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the level of purchasing of new books in schools and central institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table gives information on expenditure on the purchase of text and library books per full-time equivalent pupil in Scottish schools, and on library books per full-time equivalent student in central institutions, in 1979-80 and in 1984-85, the latest year for which information is available. It is for each education authority and central institution to determine its own priorities in the allocation of resources for such purchases.

Students in higher education are generally responsible for the purchase of their own text books. The figures for the central institutions exclude Napier college of commerce and technology and Glasgow college of technology, which became central institutions in the course of 1985.

The figures are as follows:

	1979-80		1984-85
	Schools	Central Institutions	Schools	Central Institutions
	£	£	£	£
At out turn prices	7·20	39·62	11·42	38·45
At November 1984 prices	12·02	66·14	11·42	38·45

ENERGY

Mining Industry (Safety)

Mr. Allen Mckay asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards safety standards in the mining industry in the light of the university of Manchester's report on the effects of stress and strain on manpower in the coal mining industry, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I fully support the policy of the management of the National Coal Board, which is that its first priority is the health and safety of its work force.

Colliery Closures

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on which collieries have closed in each area of the National Coal Board each year since 1979; and what collieries he has been informed are scheduled for closure in the next five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of closures since 1979 are shown in the table. Questions of the future of individual pits are matters for the management of the National Coal Board.

Coal Imports (South Africa)

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal was imported into the United Kingdom from the Republic of South Africa for the last full year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for each year since 1974-75.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows—(The figures for 1984 and 1985 were affected by the strike by some sections of the coal industry).

	Quantity ('000 tonnes)
1974	10
1975	34
1976	17

1983	58
1984	257
1985	725

Note: The data are provided on a calendar year basis.

North Sea (Exploration)

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the number of companies operating and exploring in the North sea which have deferred their exploration drilling and appraisal drilling in 1985 and 1986; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Oil companies, as a matter of course, regularly review their North sea exploration and appraisal plans. Some drilling programmes have recently been cut back, but although the full implications are not yet clear, there are no indications that drilling commitments under licence obligations will be affected.

My Department is keeping the situation under close review.

THE ARTS

Museums (Attendance Charges)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make it his policy to monitor the effect of admission charges on attendances at museums for which his Department is responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I shall continue to watch with interest the levels of attendance of all the museums and galleries for which I am responsible. Many factors however can affect attendance, and it is difficult to isolate the effects of any one on a particular set of figures. The introduction of museum charges is properly a matter for the trustees' discretion, in the light of the particular circumstances of their institution.

DEFENCE

Virgin Challenger (RAF Support)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of Royal Air Force support to Virgin Challenger.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) on 7 July 1986 at column 7.

Northern Ireland

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his written answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 493, to his hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) if he will state the strength of the Army elements, and other elements, of the armed forces of the Crown in Northern Ireland in each of the last nine months.

Mr. Stanley: Figures for June are not yet available. The figures for the preceding nine months, as at the end of each month, are as follows:

	Royal Navy-Royal Marines	Regular army	Royal Air Force	Ulster Defence Regiment	Total
1985
September	90	8,548	1,000	6,451	16,089
October	88	8,717	988	6,503	16,296
November	86	8,677	989	6,478	16,230
December	86	8,583	994	6,508	16,171
1986
January	86	9,143	1,054	6,542	16,825
February	86	9,600	998	6,547	17,231
March	86	9,585	984	6,562	17,217
April	86	9,790	971	6,559	17,406
May	86	9,836	1,025	6,541	17,488

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the research work coming to the United Kingdom on the development of the strategic defence initiative under the memorandum of agreement between the United States of America and the United Kingdom will be carried out at institutions in Wales.

Mr. Lee: A number of companies and academic institutions located in Wales have expressed a clear indication of their intention to seek United States funded work in the SDI research programme. Some of these bodies are currently pursuing prospects with the United States SDI organisation and United States companies.

Royal Ordnance Factory Barnbow

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of Royal Ordnance plc now employed at royal ordnance factory Barnbow in Leeds are in mobile grades with the right to transfer elsewhere in the group in the event of the sale of royal ordnance factory Barnbow to an outside purchaser.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the assurance given by the then Secretary of State for Defence the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) to all employees of Royal Ordnance plc by personal letter on 30 January 1984 that he did not envisage a situation where subsidiary companies would be sold to someone who would wish to close them down, remains Government policy.

Mr. Younger: The statement on this point in my right hon. Friend's letter remains Government policy.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government have issued any invitation to Vickers plc to make a bid for any royal ordnance factory.

Mr. Lee: Vickers plc has expressed an interest in acquiring the Royal ordnance factory at Leeds and we are in discussion with it. It would not be appropriate for me to disclose details of the discussions, but no decisions have been taken.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence what parties and rights are involved in the disputes concerning the intellectual property rights vested in Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Lee: Discussions between the MOD and its suppliers are generally confidential because of the commercial sensitivity. I cannot therefore discuss the sort of matter to which my hon. friend refers.

Challenger Tanks

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to place an order for the 7th Regiment of Challenger tanks.

Mr. Lee: No decision has yet been taken on an order for Challenger tanks in addition to the six regiments already on order. I would hope a decision could be made shortly.

Homosexual Behaviour

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces have been dismissed from the services or court martialled for homosexual acts in each of the last five years, by rank, and in which service.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
*Royal Navy
Lieutenant Commander	1	—	—	—	—
Lieutenant	—	—	1	—	—
Chief Petty Officer	1	—	—	—	—
Petty Officer	2	2	1	1	—
Leading Hand	4	2	2	—	—
Able Seaman or Other	4	11	3	3	1

* Relates to numbers dismissed by summary trial or court martial for homosexual acts and includes all convictions for gross indecency or indecent behaviour.

Notes:

(a) The total number of naval personnel dismissed for homosexual activity in 1975 was 5; a breakdown by rank is not immediately available.

(b) Comparable figures in respect of the Royal Marines are not available.

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Royal Air Force
Flight Lieutenant	—	—	—	—	1
Sergeant	—	1	—	—	—
Corporal	—	2	—	—	—
Senior Aircraftsman	1	2	1	1	1
Leading Aircraftsman	—	—	—	—	1

Numbers of rank for Army personnel dismissed from the services or court martialled for homosexual acts could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I refer the member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 25 June 1986 at column 163-4 for figures for total numbers of court martials and total numbers of dismissals for homosexual acts.

Dismissals on Courts Martial

Mr. Hannock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Army officers and how many men have been dismissed from the service or court martialled in each of the last five years;

(2) how many Royal Navy officers and how many ratings have been dismissed from the service or court martialled in each of the last five years;

(3) how many RAF officers and how many men have been court martialled or dismissed from the service in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: I shall answer shortly.

Prince of Wales (Wedding)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to his Department of providing security and ceremonial services at the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 91]: These costs were not identified at the time and an estimate could not now be produced except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces were engaged in duties connected with the wedding of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 91]: Some 3,100 members of the armed forces of the United Kingdom, together with nearly 100 members of the armed forces of Australia and Canada.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to Mr. V. S. Murakhovsky, the chairman of the state agro-industrial committee of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, who is currently visiting Britain, on the subject of compensation for British farmers who are suffering financial losses as a result of restrictions imposed following the emission of radioactive contamination from Chernobyl.

Mr. Jopling: In my meetings with Mr. Murakhovsky, I drew attention to the concerns of both the Government and British farmers about the effects on our agriculture of the incident at Chernobyl. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs also raised this matter with Mr. Murakhovsky and told him that Her Majesty's Government would wish to reserve its rights to claim compensation.

African Swine Fever

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland of 4 July, Official Report, column 676, what further consideration he has given to the imposition of additional restrictions on the importation of pigmeat products in the light of recent veterinary advice he has received and representations made by farmers' organisations; what assessment he has made of the threat posed to United Kingdom pigs by African swine fever; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: In my reply of 4 July to the hon. Member at column 676 I informed him of the initiatives I had taken with the European Commission. Discussions are being pursued in Brussels at official level.

Specific provisions have been included in Community directives to provide safeguards against the spread of African swine fever through intra-Community trade. This disease is no longer present in the Community, except in Spain, Portugal and Sardinia.

Intervention Board

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is now in a position to announce a decision on the future location of the Intervention Board.

Mr. Jopling: My agricultural colleagues and I have concluded that the benefits of relocation would be outweighed by the potential costs and that the Department should accordingly remain at Reading.

Stilton Cheese

Mr McLoughlin asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the export figures for Stilton cheese in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: Stilton cheese is not separately classified in United Kingdom trade statistics, but is included in te "blue veined cheese" category. There are, however, few exports of other "blue veined" varities so the figures in the following table are a reasonable guide to the position on Stilton.

United Kingdom exports of blue veined cheese

	KG	£ sterling
1981	374,175	829,000
1982	583,276	1,371,000
1983	714,263	1,713,000
1984	1,083,468	2,635,000
1985	893,263	2,298,000

Data: Department of Trade and Industry: Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a special development order to enable local authorities and independent groups other than NIREX to undertake geological surveys of the sites at Fulbeck and Killingholme before any decision on the disposal of waste is taken.

Mr. Waldegrave: We want the local communities affected to be properly informed on the geology of the sites. This can best be achieved through the arrangements already announced. NIREX has already undertaken to make publicly available the results of its site investigations after the first six months, and to publish a final report when the investigations are complete. This should enable local authorities and others to carry out their own assessment of the suitability of the sites concerned. NIREX is currently discussing with local authorities what further information should be made available to them.

Green Belt

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the annual rate of encroachment, in acres and as a proportion, on green belt (a) in Hertfordshire and (b) nationally;

(2) what proportion of planning applications involving construction on green belt designated land have been approved in each of the years 1974 to 1985 (a) in Hertfordshire and (b) nationally;

(3) how many acres have been added to land designated as green belt in each of the years 1974 to 1985 (a) in Hertfordshire and (b) nationally.

Mr. Tracey: Most planning applications for development in the green belt are dealt with by district planning authorities and information in the form requested is not available within the Department. The area of approved green belt in England in 1985 was about 4½ million acres compared with about 1·8 million acres in 1975. An account of the development of each green belt is given in the Department's memorandum to the Environment Select Committee for their inquiry into green belt and Land for Housing. (First report, Session 1983-84, Volume II, see particularly pages 14-18).

Playing Fields (Building Development)

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to monitor the loss of playing fields or sports facilities to building development.

Mr. Tracey: I share the concern expressed by sports and other bodies about losses of recreational land to development. Such losses need to be set against the substantial increase in new facilities over recent years, to establish a clearer view of the position nationally. The Sports Council is monitoring losses and gains in facility provision.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report what areas have been designated under part II of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979, as revised in 1983, as areas of archaeological importance (a) in major cities and (b) in the open countryside.

Mr. Tracey: Five areas of archaeological importance have been designated, at Canterbury, Chester, Exeter, Hereford and York. These are all within the historic centres of the cities.

Radiation

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many times the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity scheme has been implemented since its inception;

(2) how many qualified persons have been appointed to advise in the event of the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity scheme being implemented;

(3) what is the annual budget for the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: Between 1964 and 1983, which is the last year for which complete figures are available, the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity were invoked on 288 occasions. Of those, 61 were hoaxes or false alarms.

The NAIR scheme ensures that the police, when faced with an incident involving radioactivity, and for which no other pre-arranged source of assistance is available, have ready access to whatever level of expert advice and assistance may be required to ensure the safety of the public. It is activated in the first instance by the police who call upon their nearest specified expert as necessary. Ninety participating establishments provide voluntary support. These include hospitals, nuclear power stations and research establishments.

The National Radiological Protection Board, who administer the scheme centrally, have no specific funding in respect of NAIR.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual budget for information to the public concerning the safety of items manufactured for public use which emit radiation at levels constituting a potential risk to health.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has no such annual budget. The Department of Trade and Industry intend to introduce regulations requiring prior approval by the National Radiological Protection Board of any household products containing radioactive material before these are supplied for sale to members of the public. In the meantime, should any items constituting a potential risk come to the Government's notice, relevant information will be provided as necessary.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many circulars have been issued and on which dates to councils' emergency services and hospitals concerning the procedure to be followed in the event that an item for public use emitting potentially dangerous levels of radioactivity is found.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the event of any radioactive item being found by members of the public, the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity are invoked by the police who will call upon their nearest specified expert for assistance. Information on the NAIR scheme has been published by the NRPB. Circulars relating to NAIR have been issued by Government Departments including the DHSS and the Home Office. I shall write to the hon. Member with details.

Polychlorinate Biphenyls

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent recent changes in European Economic Community regulations have affected United Kingdom procedures for notifying the presence of quantities of polychlorinated biphenyls on particular sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will answer this question shortly.

Loft Insulation Grants

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the total amount of money made available to each local authority in England and Wales for loft insulation grants for 1985-86; and if he will state how this compares with 1984-85;

(2) what was the total amount of money made available to local authorities in England and Wales for loft insulation grants for 1985-86; and how this compares with 1984-85.

Sir George Young: I shall answer these questions shortly.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been distributed by the London residuary body to the London boroughs.

Mrs. Rumbold: The London residuary body is distributing to boroughs the GLC's "top-end estimate" of £134 millions, net of £45 millions which is being used to pay staff compensation and other costs. The timing of the distribution is a matter for the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has with the London residuary body about drawing public attention to the distribution of Greater London council balances.

Mrs. Rumbold: The distribution of GLC balances has been discussed with the London residuary body on a number of occasions. In this and other matters it is for the LRB to decide how they publicise their actions. Information about GLC balances was included in LRB's published budget.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals have been made by his Department regarding borrowing by the London residuary body.

Mrs. Rumbold: With minor variations, residuary bodies have the same borrowing powers as local authorities. For certain purposes, they need the prior consent of the Secretary of State to borrow. The Department is in touch with the London residuary body about its need for such consents in respect of 1986-87.

Trust for London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he anticipates the Trust for London being set up by the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The trustees of the City Parochial Foundation are responsible for setting up the Trust for London. I understand that they have already taken the formal steps to establish the trust.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of capital receipts now available to the London residuary body for the Trust for London.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has recently published a draft order that will make £10 million available during the financial year 1986-87 for the Trust for London.

County Hall, Greater London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has been advised by the London residuary body of receipt of the consultants' report on the future of county hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand from the London residuary body that the consultants' report has not been received, but is expected in the next few weeks.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the London residuary body about the use of county hall in connection with the London marathon.

Mr. Tracey: I understand that the London residuary body has written to the organisers of the London marathon allowing its use of county hall in 1987.

GLC (Grants)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what Greater London council claims for Government grants are still outstanding; and what arrangements are being made for payment to the London residuary body.

Mrs. Rumbold: A wide variety of Exchequer grants were payable to the Greater London council. Arrangements for dealing with outstanding claims vary from case to case.

GLC (Seaside and Country Homes)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has been consulted about rent increases for tenants of properties which were formerly the Greater London council's seaside and country homes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Residuary Bodies (Property Guidelines)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the property guidelines for residuary bodies set up following abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Mrs. Rumbold: I expect the final version of the property guidelines to be published within the next few weeks.

Local Government Reform (Employment Schemes)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding employment schemes run by metropolitan districts and London boroughs which are affected by the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the funding of economic initiatives by local authorities including some involving employment schemes.

Local Authority Loans Schemes

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to introduce legislation to provide for powers to cancel or prevent the signing of deferred loan schemes by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is one of the issues which we are considering in our review of the local authority capital control system. We made clear in the consultation paper issued in February that we are concerned about such devices.

TRANSPORT

West Midlands PTA (Allocation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what allocation has been made to the West Midlands passenger transport authority for 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what is the current allocation.

Mr. David Mitchell: The capital allocation for the West Midlands passenger transport authority for 1986-87 is £6·475 million. Allocations in respect of 1987-88 and 1988-89 have not yet been made.

As to current expenditure, I refer the hon. Lady to my reply given on 20 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) at column 666. Expenditure levels for passenger transport authorities for 1987-88 will be determined and announced later this month.

Air Services (Brussels)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give consideration to encouraging the improvement of direct air services between Brussels and north of England airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall answer this question shortly.

West London Road Relief Scheme

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department is giving to the possibility of constructing a road through Earls court as part of the west London road relief scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It was announced in November 1984 that consultants are looking into the possibility of a new road sharing the existing west London railway corridor with a view to relieving some of the bad current conditions of residential roads in that area.

LRT (Board Members)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the outside directorships held by board members of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information on financial and other interests of LRT board members is given to the Secretary of State on a confidential basis.

Transport Act 1985 (Publicity)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent to date by his Department on publicising the workings of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: £165,000 principally on explanatory leaflets for operators and prospective operators.

Sir Neil Shields

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when Sir Neil Shields was appointed to the Board of London Regional Transport; and if he will list his responsibilities.

Mr. David Mitchell: Sir Neil Shields MC was appointed a part-time member of the board on 1 April 1986. He is Chairman of the LRT Property Board.

London Buses Ltd (Routes)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus routes outside the Greater London area have been registered by London Buses Ltd. under the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: 25 so far.

Buses (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to his Department by London Regional Transport concerning the extension of the bus priority at traffic lights scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am not aware of any such representations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what net annual effects from bus lanes in London have been identified by his Department;

(2) what discussions have been held between his Department and London Regional Transport regarding the future of bus lanes in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department and London Regional Transport are in regular touch about the programme of work in hand to improve assessment techniques for bus lanes. When consultations about this work are complete, the Department will prepare technical guidance notes for all traffic management authorities. This will enable them to take a soundly based view on the benefits and costs of particular lanes in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations will be held on the subject of deregulation of bus services in London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to issue a timetable for the deregulation of bus services in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to him on 9 May 1986 at column 284. I have no current plans concerning consultation.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the recent meeting between his Department and the London Regional Transport passengers committee on the operation of one-person buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: After meeting a delegation from the London Regional passengers committee on 15 May I conveyed their views on the further extension of one-person operated buses in London to the Chairman of London Regional Tranport.

Channel Tunnel Terminal, Waterloo

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations have been made to his Department about the proposed Channel tunnel terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received about 90 written representations on this matter to date.

Lorry Ban (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change his Department's policy on the exemption of trunk roads from the London lorry ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The exemption of trunk roads flows from the traffic order made by the Greater London council.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take measures further to enforce the London lorry ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for the ban rests with the boroughs.

Railways (Section 8 Grants)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure made under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 in the Greater London area for each of the years 1979-80 to 1985-86.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

1979-80	Nil
1980-81	139,351
1981-82	22,916
1982-83	363,891
1983-84	962,683
1984-85	22,936
1985-86	28,421
	1,540,198

Pedestrian Crossings, London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used by his Department when considering the proposed installation of pedestrian crossings on designated roads in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The general criteria used are given in Departmental Advice Note, TA 10/80, "Design Considerations for Pelican and Zebra Crossings". A copy is in the Library. Applications on designated roads are considered on a case by case basis.

BR (Grants)

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much public service obligation grant has been paid by central Government to the British Railways Board since 1979.

Mr. Moore: Cumulative payments made by central Government as compensation for the public service obligation imposed by direction under section 3(1) of the Railways Act 1974 for the periods 1979 — 1985-86 amount to £5,358 million. Section S3(4) of the Act, as amended by S2 of the Transport (Finance) Act 1982, sets a cumulative ceiling of £6,000 million on the total of PSO grant payments from 1 January 1979. The current estimate (Class VIII, 3, E1(1)), which was presented to the House last March, makes provision for grant payments £100 million in excess of this limit, consistent with the plans published in January in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702). There is, of course, no question of grant expenditure in excess of the limit until the House has agreed an increase in the statutory ceiling. I intend to lay a draft Order in Council before the House of Commons for this purpose in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Manus Nunan

43. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Attorney-General why Mr. Manus Nunan was given no reason for the termination of his recordership.

The Attorney-General: Contrary to what the hon. Member states, in October 1984 Mr. Nunan was in fact warned in advance of defects in his judicial performance which had been reported to the Lord Chancellor's Office. Thereafter, the Lord Chancellor followed the procedure described in my answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 9 July 1986. Mr. Nunan's term of office expired on 31 December 1984. On 4 December, the Lord Chancellor, who was previously unaware personally of the case, satisfied himself as to the justification for the advice he had received that Mr. Nunan's performance had fallen below the standard required for renewal of his appointment. Mr. Nunan was duly informed of this decision. I understand that, at the invitation of the senior presiding Judge and with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Nunan is to visit the senior presiding Judge in order that the situation may be further explained. In addition, the Lord Chancellor has granted a request which he has just received from the Bar Council that Mr. Nunan should be given an opportunity for his case to be reconsidered by the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General why Mr. Manus Nunan did not have his recordership renewed for 1985.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Nunan's judicial performance fell below a standard which justified the renewal of his appointment. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, West on 9 July 1986 for the procedure observed on these occasions.

Legal Aid

36. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Attorney-General how many applications for legal aid in matrimonial causes were (a) made and (b) granted in each of the years 1984-85 and 1986, respectively, and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I will arrange to have the detailed figures printed in the Official Report. Between 1984-85 and 1985-86 the number of civil legal aid certificates issued for matrimonial proceedings rose by 2·6 per cent.

The figures are as follows:

Number of applications made for civil legal aid for matrimonial proceedings

The figure is not available for 1984-85. Prior to 1985-86, applications were not recorded by type of proceedings.

1985-86	183,812

Number of civil legal aid certificates granted for matrimonial proceedings

1984-85	111,218
1985-86	114,126

Notes:

(i) The figures for applications made and certificates issued are not directly comparable, since some certificates issued in 1985-86 will have related to applications made in 1984-85, and some applications made in 1985-86 will not have been determined until 1986-87.

(ii) Applications may not result in certificates being issued for a number of reasons. They may be refused, on either merits or means grounds. They may also be abandoned or withdrawn by the applicant.

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the speed with which the Law Society responds to applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 7 July, at column 15-16.

Mr. Greenway asked the Attorney-General what amount was paid out of legal aid for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The net cost of all types of legal aid (including advice and assistance but excluding administration) in financial year 1985-86 was £320 million.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement pursuant to his answers, Official Report, 14 April, column 246, on the Metropolitan police report submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions about allegations relating to honours for Alan Bristow over Westland.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 10 July 1986.

Family and Domestic Jurisdiction

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the responses the Lord Chancellor has received so far to his consultation paper, "Interdepartmental Review of Family and Domestic Jurisdiction".

The Attorney-General: Responses have been asked for by 31 October. So far, five have been received.

Commander Bothwell

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if he will give the cost to public funds of the Bow street hearings on Commander Bothwell.

The Attorney-General: No Bills of costs have yet been presented for taxation, and when taxation is complete the hon. Member will be aware that it is not the practice to publish individual fees. In addition, the cost to public funds will include the costs of court hearings which cannot be assessed except as an arbitrary component of the overhead costs of administering the court. In addition there will be costs of the other Government Departments concerned to which similar consideration apply.

RUC (Inquiry)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland expects to receive the final report about the conduct of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in relation to the deaths in 1982 of Michael Tighe and others begun by Mr. John Stalker, and continued by the chief constable of West Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Colin Sampson will submit his final report to the Chief Constable of the RUC whose duty will then be to furnish that report to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland for consideration. Although Mr. Sampson, who is actively and urgently pursuing his investigations, has assured the Director of Public Prosecutions that a final report will be submitted to the Chief Constable as soon as possible, I am not able to give the hon. Member any indication as to when the final report will be submitted to the Chief Constable or when it will be furnished by him to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

PRIME MINISTER

Berlin Discotheque (Bombing)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, 1 July, why she will not publish the evidence that Libya was involved in the bombing of the La Belle discotheque in Berlin on 5 April.

The Prime Minister: The customary reasons why we cannot make intelligence evidence public are because of the nature or source of certain information.

Television Licences (Pensioners)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister what is the estimated cost of providing a free television licence for all pensioners on supplementary benefit, as recommended by the Peacock committee.

The Prime Minister: The Peacock committee estimated that the maximum loss of licence fee revenue per year which would result from exempting from the licence fee all pensioners drawing supplementary pension, in households wholly dependent on a pension, would be in the order of £80 million. Further work to refine this estimate is in progress. The committee also recommended a separate licence fee of not less than £10 should be charged for car radio, which the committee estimated could yield an equivalent sum.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy not to accept any recommendation from the machinery of government review of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys which would result in a reduction of the quality of integrity of statistics available to Parliament and Government.

The Prime Minister: All Government statistics are produced with integrity and to standards appropriate to their intended use under the supervision of professional statisticians. This will continue to be the case. When the review is complete, I shall consider its recommendations.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister why the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is to be the subject of a machinery of government review ; how much notice was given to the staff concerned; what reviews of statistical and similar services have been conducted since 1979; when such reviews were completed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A review of Government statistical services was completed in December 1980, a review of the commissioning of ad hoc social surveys in September 1981, and an efficiency scrutiny of the registration of births, deaths, and marriages in February 1985. Since 1979 there has not, however, been a review of the activities of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys overall and I have decided that such a review would be appropriate now. The trade union side of OPCS was notified on 2 June, when the review commenced.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 8 May, Official Report, column 217, on the ministerial convention for answering parliamentary questions, whether this convention precludes the answering of factual questions for the period of earlier Administrations; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The convention is that the Government of the day do not normally disclose information relating to the period of a former Administration and not published during that period.

Welsh and Scottish Universities

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister what progress has been made on the devolution of control of Welsh and Scottish universities from the Department of Education and Science to the Welsh Office and Scottish Office.

The Prime Minister: There is no present intention to devolve control of the Welsh and Scottish universities. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Education and Science are considering the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council on the planning and funding of higher education in Scotland.

South Africa

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the introduction of one person one vote and the attainment of black majority rule in South Africa.

The Prime Minister: We have repeatedly called, both bilaterally and with our EC and Commonwealth partners, on the South African Government to dismantle the system of apartheid and institute a process of genuine dialogue with a view to establishing a democratic, non-racial system of government acceptable to the people of South Africa as a whole. But we have also made clear that it is not for us to prescribe what constitutional structures might emerge from such negotiations.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Sea Fish Industry Authority on the effects of privatisation of water authorities on the maintenance of shellfish beds.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have received a large number of responses to their consultation paper "The Water Environment: The Next Steps". It is for those responding to publicise the fact that they have done so if they wish.

Common Land

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to implement the proposals for registration of common land set out in the common land forum's report to the Countryside Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 7 July at column 34.

Housing

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the numbers of public and private sector housing starts and completions in Brighton and Leicester, respectively, in each year since 1977.

Sir George Young: The reported figures of house building within Brighton and Leicester are as follows:

Number of dwellings

	Starts		Completions
	Brighton	Leicester	Brighton	Leicester
Public sector
1977	*175	1,678	*71	1,588

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the work commissioned by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; whether the committee has a policy of initiating research or studies; whether it is passed research, studies or reports from other Departments; and whether it has to report all its deliberations to other Departments.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee has complete discretion on the work it may initiate. In addition, it may be asked by Government for advice on specific subjects. In setting about its work, it will have access to material in Government Departments or agencies. It is not required to report its deliberations other than in its annual report each year or in the advice given directly to Ministers.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the procedures for the selection of members to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mrs. Rumbold: Members of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee are appointed by the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales after they have taken advice from the chairman, and, as they consider necessary, from colleagues and other sources.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the reports and any other publications of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; what is the policy of the committee as regards publication of its reports and deliberations; and whether the committee makes available transcripts or other records of its meetings.

Mrs. Rumbold: The committee's policy is that its deliberations should be in confidence, but that its conclusions and advice to Ministers should be made public, usually through a report each year to Ministers which is then published. Six annual reports for the years 1980 to 1985 have been published. The report for 1986 will be published later this month.

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 25 June, Official Report, column 227, why his Department currently makes no estimates on either a national or regional basis of the shortfall between the demand for and the supply of public rented accommodation to meet both general and special needs which cannot be met by other means.

Sir George Young: Such estimates would depend on assumption about the relationships between different sectors of the housing market which may or may not hold true over time.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has carried out concerning (a) the ages at which young people leave their parental home, (b) the circumstances in which young people leave their parental home and (c) those factors influencing when young people leave their parental home; and what assessment his Department has undertaken of the implications of this information for (i) the demand for and (ii) the supply of public rented housing in England as a whole, and in each regional area of his Department.

Sir George Young: Projections of the number of households, which are one factor influencing demand for housing, are published periodically by my Department for England, regions, counties, metropolitan districts and London boroughs.

The base data for these projections include census information about the proportion of young people living as independent households. My Department also helped fund the 1981 survey of the national child development study cohort, and this included questions on the ages at which members of the cohort, born 1958, had left their parental home, and the circumstances.

Cement

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many workers were employed in the cement industry in July 1979; and what are the comparable figures for the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: About 12,000 people were employed in the cement industry in March 1986. Comparable information for July 1979 is not available.

Q Ray Compresses

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by the emergency planning officer for Nottinghamshire, Superintendent Tordoff, concerning the recent discovery in Nottinghamshire of a radioactive device produced in the 1930s and 1940s for the treatment of rheumatism and other ailments, known as a Q Ray compress; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Q Ray electro-radioactive compresses have been found in the last five years.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: Four have been brought to the attention of my Department.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department first issued advice on the safety of Q Ray electro-radioactive compresses.

Mrs. Rumbold: This Department has issued no written guidance, and my officials have advised as necessary in response to inquiries.

PSA Staff (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to make redundant Property Services Agency staff employed in the Palace of Westminster and put their work out to contract; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Following discussions with their trade union, the remaining seven cleaners employed by the Property Services Agency at the Palace of Westminster have accepted redundancy. Their employment ended on 11 July. From that date their work will be taken over by the contractor who already undertakes the rest of the cleaning work at the Palace for which the agency is responsible.

Two plant attendants also accepted redundancy on the same date. Existing contractors will take over their work as necessary.

Council House Sales

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date and in what manner he intends to publicise the availability of increased discounts for the purchase by sitting tenants of council flats.

Sir George Young: Preparations are in hand to ensure that tenants will be informed of their new rights when the Housing and Planning Bill is enacted; but final decisions have not yet been taken on the precise form the publicity will take, and timing must depend on the Bill's progress.

Pollution (River Mersey)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will reply to the request from the North West water authority for funds to tackle pollution in the Mersey.

Mr. John Patten: The North West water authority has not requested such funds.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the volumes of sewage sludge dumped into the Mersey by the North West water authority in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: It has never been the practice of the North West water authority to dump sewage sludge in the River Mersey.

Domestic Radioactive Devices

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has compiled a list of those radioactive devices produced for use in the home which are potentially dangerous for the public.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: Radioactive devices are only made available if careful assessment has shown that they present no danger to the public.

Lower Leigh, Churchstow

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the progress made between 1975 and the date of the transfer of the building to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission in restoring Lower Leigh, Churchstow; and what was the estimated date of completion in 1975.

Mr. Tracey: After having taken immediate steps to prevent the collapse of the building, between 1975 and 1984 my Department carried out the following projects: replacement and repair of masonry on the gatehouse; major renovation of the south range, including the construction of a new roof and the replacement of the wooden gallery; and the construction of new internal walls.

In 1975, it was estimated that the full restoration would take more than 10 years to complete.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when issuing licences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, checks are made to ensure that applicants have not been convicted under that or other relevant legislation; and if the applicant is required to make any signed declaration to prove that his or her record is satisfactory.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department checks where possible that applicants for licences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 have not been convicted of offences under the 1981 Act or other relevant legislation.

Applicants for licences to take birds of prey from the wild are required to declare convictions under the Protection of Birds Act 1954 and 1967 and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; applicants for licences to take birds for the purposes of aviculture, or to take birds by certain methods are additionally required to declare convictions under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: As at 11 July, the total number of letters from right hon. and hon. Members to my Department where substantive replies had been outstanding for more than one month was 121. Of these cases 29 had been outstanding for more than two months; 12 for more than three months and one for more than four months.

Expressed as percentages of the total number of letters received during the period of review, the above totals represent 0·9 per cent., 0·2 per cent., 0·1 per cent. and 0·007 per cent., respectively.

Rent and Rate Arrears

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to permit local authorities to factor their collection of rents, rent arrears and rate arrears; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no plans to legislate in this area.

Squatters

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require local authorities to apply to the courts to evict squatters occupying council-owned properties; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. It should be for each local authority to decide whether and when to take such action.

Landscape Areas

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to lay an order to replace the Landscape Areas Special Development Order 1980.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Town and Country Planning (Agricultural and Forestry Development in National Parks etc.) Special Development Order 1986 has been laid before the House today. My Department, in conjunction with the Welsh Office, has also published for comment the draft of a circular to cover the new order: a copy has been placed in the Library. We propose to bring the new order into force on 1 November.

Nature Conservation and Planning

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to complete the revision and re-issue of circular 108/77, "Nature Conservation and Planning".

Mr. Waldegrave: We have had extensive consultations with other Government Departments, the Nature Conservancy Council and interested voluntary organisations concerning the revision of this circular announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 27 January this year at column 423 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

It has not proved possible to complete the consultations as quickly as I had hoped, given the volume of comment. However, the large number of bodies consulted will ensure that this important topic is thoroughly and properly covered. Every effort is being made to conclude the remaining consultations quickly and we expect to publish the revised circular before the end of the year.

Homeless People

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of homeless people in the city of Coventry for each half year since 1979.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 10 July 1986]: The number of households in Coventry accepted as homeless for each half year since the beginning of 1979 is as follows. (Because of changes in recording practice, figures for the second half of 1982 are not strictly comparable with those for earlier periods.)

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent recent changes in European Economic Community regulations have effected United Kingdom procedures for notifying the presence of quantities of polychlorinated biphenyls on particular sites.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986]: No EEC measures require the notification of the location of PCBs.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if will list in the Official Report the total amount of money made available to each local authority in England and Wales for loft insulation grants for 1985-86; and if he will state how this compares with 1984-85.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986]: The total resources made available to each local authority in England for grants under the homes insulation scheme in 1985-86 and 1984-85 was as follows.

In Wales, the Homes Insulation Scheme is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rent Increases

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of money made available to local authorities in England and Wales for loft insulation grants for 1985-86; and how this compares with 1984-85.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986]: In 1985-86 the total resources made available to local authorities for grants under the homes insulation schme in England was £27·9 million. In 1984-85 a total of £31·5 million was made available. In Wales, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for the homes insulation scheme.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has been consulted about rent increases for tenants in the Greater London council's seaside and country homes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986]: My Department has received letters from the London residiary body and Anchor housing association, who are discussing arrangements for transfer of the homes. They are aware of my Answer on 15 November 1984 to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). I indicated that the financcial basis of transfer to district councils should enable them broadly to maintain on abolition the then existing levels of rent and management and maintenance expenditure, although changes both before and after abolition were not precluded. We have since agreed to a request by the ALA and LBA that the homes should be transferred not to district councils but to a housing association where fair rents apply, but the answer is still relevant to current discussions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers Dispute (Risley)

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the dispute involving women prison officers at Her Majesty's remand centre, Risley.

Mr. Hurd: At noon on Friday 4 July the local branch of the Prison Officers Association at Risley began refusing to receive female prisoners without allowing for the discussion of their grievances at regional level envisaged in the procedure agreed between the Home Office and the Prison Officers Association as a basis for settlement of the recent national industrial action. According to unconfirmed reports, that procedure, which had been recommended to POA members by their National Executive Committee, was overwhelmingly endorsed in a national ballot conducted on 2 July: counting of the ballot is understood to have been suspended by the national executive committee pending a resolution of the Risley dispute.

The POA branch at Risley escalated its industrial action rapidly on 4 July to include an overtime ban and work to rule. The Governor had to call in assistant governors from two other establishments to carry out essential work not being undertaken by POA members, who were neither suspended nor locked out but simply told they would not be paid for work they were not doing.

In the course of last week, Home Office officials held over 16 hours of talks with POA national executive committee and Risley branch representatives in which they made several proposals designed to find a way of enabling the dispute at Risley to be resolved within the agreed procedure. Discussions focussed on the manning of an annexe of four cells in the establishment. At the conclusion of discussion on Thursday 10 July, POA representatives agreed to put the following proposal to the Risley branch:

"The Risley dispute has not been handled locally in accordance with the procedure agreed between the Home Office and the Prison Officers' Association as a basis for settlement of the recent national industrial action. Both sides reiterate their commitment to that procedure.

The long term function and manning of the cellular annexe at Risley and other issues raised by the Risley branch will be the subject of review by the regional manpower team. They will then be discussed locally and at regional level in accordance with the agreed procedure.

For the present, on an interim and without prejudice basis, and in order to enable the agreed procedure to get under way, the cellular annexe at Risley will be occupied by rule 43 inmates and the adjacent landing and dormitory areas will be manned by two staff. The unit will be manned throughout the day by one officer when it is in a patrol state. These levels are an irreducible minimum. Additional manning will be provided to give effect to satisfactory regime activities in the unit, which will be determined in the context of appendix D of the agreed 1981 manpower report. The level of additional manning required (which will not be found by diversion from officer tasks) will be decided following discussions between the governor and the local branch in accordance with the agreed procedure."

This joint statement was accepted by the Risley branch at a meeting on Friday 11 July. The prison is now working normally.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts, with the subject of the assignment, awarded to management consultancy or accounting firms by his Department in 1985, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Hurd: The information is as follows:

Consultancy	Assignment
Arthur Young McClelland and Moores and Company	Tasks related to the development work on a local budgeting system for the Prison Department.
Atkins Planning	Further development of project management information in the Directorate of Telecommunications.
BIS Applied Systems	Task related to a review of the Prison Costing System.

Touche Ross Management Consultants	Study of an accounting and organisational framework for the Directorate of Telecommunications.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons in the United Kingdom who have served (a) 15, (b) 20, and (c) 25 years of their sentence as of 1 July.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Population of prisoners in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales on 31 May 1986 whose initial reception under sentence was 15 years or more earlier.*

Time since initial reception under sentence into a Prison Department establishment†	Number of prisoners
	All	Recalled‡
15 years but less than 20 years	125	34
20 years but less than 25 years	37	21
25 years and over	21	14

* The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate; detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.
† Includes time spent on licence by prisoners recalled after having been released on licence.

Stocken Hall, Rutland

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the sale by his Department of Stocken hall, Rutland, Leicestershire; and what conditions he has imposed regarding the need for it to be fully rehabilitated within a specific period of time.

Mr. Mellor: The disposal of Stocken hall was undertaken by the Property Services Agency on behalf of the Home Office. The sale, by private treaty, was completed on 30 April 1986. The terms of the sale require that the buildings be kept in a safe condition and that they do not become a danger or nuisance to the owners or occupiers of adjoining properties. Rehabilitation of the hall was not a condition of sale. The terms of the sale also provide for the Home Office to continue its farming use of the stable block for up to two years until alternative new buildings are available.

Asylum

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken in response to the United Nations General Assembly resolutions calling on United Nations member states to grant asylum or safe transit to all persons who refuse service in military or police forces used to enforce apartheid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from him on 30 June 1986 at column 371. When resolution 33/165 was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 20 December 1978, the United Kingdom Government placed on record their view that it left it open to member states to decide in accordance with their own laws and procedures whether to admit, or to grant asylum, or to recognise any person as a refugee. That remains the position.

Mr. David Sulley

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 14 May concerning Mr. David Sulley, presently in Stafford prison.

Mr. Mellor: A reply will be sent to the hon. Member within the next two weeks.

George O'Dowd

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about police raids on houses belonging to George O'Dowd and his friends.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that his officers executed six warrants obtained under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 at a number of properties in North London on the morning of 8 July. Five people have now been charged with misuse of drugs offences and the matter is therefore sub judice.

Central Drugs Squad

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the relationship between the central drugs squad and the divisional squads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan Police central drugs squad investigates large-scale drug offences. Divisional drug squads are being replaced by area drug squads under the command of the area deputy assistant commissioners and tasked to disrupt middle level drugs dealings.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the relationship between the central drugs squad and the national drugs intelligence unit.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The national drugs intelligence unit provides drugs intelligence to police and customers througout the country. The central drugs squad, which investigates large-scale drugs crime, is both a user and a provider of this intelligence.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the central drugs squad was established; what was its original establishment size and what has been the central establishment of both civilian and uniformed personnel each year since its creation;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown by rank of the officers in the central drugs squad, the national drugs intelligence unit and the divisional drugs squads;

(3) how may drugs raids were carried out by the district —divisional drugs squads in each year since 1979;

(4) how many drugs raids were completed by the central drugs squad in each year since 1979;

(5) if he will detail the number of prosecutions in respect of offences relating to each listed and prohibited drug within the Metropolitan police district for each of the past five years;

(6) how many black and Asian personnel are employed in the central, national intelligence and divisional drug squads;

(7) how many weeks' training are given to officers in (a) the central drugs squad, (b) the national drugs intelligence unit and (c) the divisional drugs squads;

(8) what was the total amount of (a) cannabis, (b) heroin, (c) cocaine and (d) LSD, seized by police officers in the Metropolitan police area for each of the past five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not readily available. I shall provide such information as is available as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for the most convenient recent period, what was the percentage of referrals for investigation of drug offences emanating from (a) the police, (b) the public and (c) other agencies and institutions in the Metropolitan police area;

(2) if he will estimate the number of Metropolitan police working hours spent on drugs-related investigations in the past 12 months;

(3) if he will estimate the number of Metropolitan police officers involved in drug raids during the past 12 months;

(4) what personnel are employed by the Metropolitan police on maintaining liaison between the drugs squads and Customs and Excise officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Glasgow Passport Office

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the management and administration of the Glasgow passport office, in the light of its current slowness of response to inquiries from the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Demand for standard passports in Scotland so far this year has increased by 27 per cent. compared with the same six-month period in 1985. This sharp increase in demand and the residual effects of industrial action in passport offices earlier this year have caused abnormal and regrettable delays in dealing with passport applications.

Steps have been taken to reduce the delays including the recruitment of temporary staff, overtime working and the transfer of work to the Liverpool passport office where at present average processing times are shorter.

I confidently expect that the Glasgow passport office will soon be able to respond to inquiries from the public in the normal prompt manner.

Lynne Marsland

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there will be an inquest into the death of the infant born to Lynne Marsland, a prisoner at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, on 29 June.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that an inquest will be held on 15 October.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Lynne Marsland, a prisoner at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, first said she experienced labour pains before giving birth to a daughter on 29 June.

Mr. Mellor: Ms. Marsland first said that labour had begun during the evening of Saturday 28 June. Medical reports indicate that the contractions she then experienced subsided and that labour began in the afternoon of Sunday 29 June.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Lynne Marsland, a prisoner at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, was first put in a single room for close observation on 29 June; and what was the reason she was moved to this room.

Mr. Mellor: Ms. Marland was placed in a single room in Holloway's mother and baby unit at 3.10 am on Sunday 29 June to facilitate closer observation. This accords with standard procedures under which a pregnant inmate is moved to a single room if she appears to be experiencing pain or discomfort in the abdomen during the night.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The latest period for which figures are available is 1 April 1985-31 March 1986. In this period 30,388 letters from hon. and right hon. Members and others were received for ministerial reply in my Department.

As of 31 March, 7,984 cases were recorded as awaiting a substantive reply: of these, 1,871 were recorded as having been received between 31 and 60 days previously, 706 cases 61 to 90 days previously, 1,421 cases between 91 to 180 days previously and 1,197 more than 180 days previously. In a significant proportion of immigration cases, substantive replies are not sent for a number of months while inquiries are being pursued or while an appeal is outstanding. In addition, because of present difficulties with the computer recording system it seems likely that a number of these cases had in fact been completed before 31 March.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Metropolitan police officers and civilians are engaged on traffic matters within force headquarters; and if he will provide a breakdown by branch and rank and describe the functions of each branch;

(2) how many officers and civilians are engaged on traffic matters locally in the Metropolitan police district area; and if he will provide a breakdown by rank and location;

(3) what was the strength of B department of the Metropolitan police for each year from 1980 to 1985 broken down by officer and civilians, headquarters staff and for locally-based officers by rank and area.

(4) what have been the average weekly flying hours of Metropolitan police helicopters on traffic patrol duties during the past year;

(5) if he will list all Metropolitan police buildings other than section houses, garages, local police stations and married quarters and identify the functions performed by the officers and civilians using it and the numbers of staff employed within each building.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Roads (Police Patrols)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many miles of road are now regularly patrolled and policed by traffic department officers within the Greater London area; and if he will identify the major roads currently covered by traffic patrols and provide details of the major roads and mileage patrolled in each year from 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner has informed me that traffic officers regularly patrol all the major routes within the Metropolitan police district. These include 1,054 miles of A or A/M class roads and 75 miles of motorway. Figures for the miles of road patrolled in the years 1979 to 1985 are not readily available.

Road Accidents

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many road traffic accidents were attended by traffic police in each year from 1979; and how many arrests and charges were made by traffic patrol officers in each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information is not available centrally on the number of road accidents attended by the police or the number of arrests and charges made by the police. Statistics on road accidents involving injury are published by the Department of Transport each year in "Road Accidents Great Britain", and information on persons proceeded against for motoring offences is published by the Home Office in an annual bulletin "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales".

South Africa

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the total number of persons currently located in South Africa who would be eligible for registration to vote in the United Kingdom under the provisions of the Representation of the People Act 1985.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave figures for the British community in South Africa in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 15 April at column 380. We estimate that only a small proportion of those will qualify under the terms of the Representation of the People Act 1985.

Public Order

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of total Metropolitan police expenditure is spent on public order equipment and training for public order duties.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 26 June, c. 289-90]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the proportion of total Metropolitan police expenditure spent on public order equipment and training for public order duties in the financial year 1985-86 was 0·1 per cent. and 0·3 per cent. respectively.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the position he will present at the European Economic Community Council of Ministers on 21 July regarding Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the new multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The purpose of any discussion at the Foreign Affairs Council on 21 July will be for the Commission to report progress on the MFA negotiations so far. The Commission is negotiating, in close consultation with Member States, on the basis of a mandate agreed by Ministers in March, which takes full account of United Kingdom interests.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) in view of the increase in clothing imports, the decrease in exports of clothing and textiles and the increase in the balance of trade deficit for the first quarter of 1986, he will, in the multi-fibre arrangement negotiations now taking place, urge the introduction of a more stringent protection mechanism on imports;

(2) if he will take the increase in imports of textiles and clothing from countries covered by the multi-fibre arrangement in the first quarter of 1986 into account when negotiating the next multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The mandate agreed by the Foreign Affairs Council in March provides the basis on which a renewal could be negotiated which would continue to provide effective protection for the most sensitive sectors of our industry. I am keeping in close touch with the industry as the negotiations progress. The most recent trade figures for particular sectors are indeed being taken into account in the negotiations on bilateral agreements. The mandate provides for the retention of a safeguard mechanism against growth in unrestricted imports.

Carpets (Imports)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evidence he has to indicate whether the sustantial increase in carpet imports from France in the first quarter of 1986 was due to unfair dumping; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Alan Clark: If there were evidence that French carpet manufacturers were receiving subsidies, we would ask the European Commission to investigate them under their state aids powers. No such evidence has been produced to date.

Hosiery Imports

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he accounts for the increase in hosiery imports for the first quarter of 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trading performance in any particular sector may be influenced by a wide range of factors, notably exchange rates. I note the increase in imports — in particular from certain developed countries — in the first quarter of 1986, but I am not aware of any specific reasons which might have contributed to this, nor has such an increase been in excess of quota provisions where these are applicable.

Textile and Clothing Exports

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to seek to increase the accessibility of markets in Russian and Indonesia to United Kingdom exports of textiles and clothing.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is the Government's and the Community's intention to use every occasion to press the case for opening up these markets to a wide range of our goods. The opening up of markets—in particular of the more advanced developing countries—will be a major United Kingdom objective in the forthcoming Multilateral Trade Negotiations in the GATT. In the MFA negotiations the Community has agreed that positive account should be taken of the degree of market openness of supplier countries.

Trade Marks Office

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Her Majesty's Government will decide which site they will support for the building of the European Trade Marks Office in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: Her Majesty's Government will decide on the particular London site which they will propose once it receives an invitation from the European Commission to provide detailed information about its bid. This is expected to be in the very near future.

Research and Development

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the Trades Union Congress to discuss funding from his Department for research and development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Cement Imports

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures Her Majesty's Government propose to take to protect the interests of the United Kingdom cement industry and its employees in the light of the increasing level of subsidised imports from Greece, the German Democratic Republic and Poland.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts on the possibility of restricting imports of cement from East Germany and Poland.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will shortly be writing to the European Commission about subsidies to exporters granted by the Greek Government. As regards the German Democratic Republic and Poland, the Commission has completed an anti-dumping investigation into imports of cement from those sources into the Community and is considering its findings. I have had no other discussions with my Community counterparts on possible restrictions of imports of cement from the German Democractic Republic and Poland.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any discussions with the Greek Government concerning allegations of dumping of cement imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make firm representations to the Greek Government about the implications for the viability of the United Kingdom cement industry of the current level of subsidy enjoyed by Greek exports of cement to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take to seek to prevent Greek cement being dumped in the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will ask the European Commission to investigate alleged unfair trade practices in respect of cement exported from Greece and imported into Greece from other countries.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received concerning the level of subsidised imports of cement into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet representatives of the Cement Employers Association and the trade unions involved in the industry to discuss the level of subsidised imports of cement into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The British cement industry has made representations to my Department and to the Department of the Environment, who sponsor the industry, about the threat of subsidised imports of cement from Greece. My hon. Friend the Minister for Construction, Housing and Urban Affairs, and officials from both Departments, met a delegation of Members of Parliament and the Cement Makers Federation on 10 July to discuss the position. I am arranging to meet the same delegation and will shortly be writing to the European Commission to express the Government's serious concern at the Commission's continued authorisation of the general system of subsidies to Greek exporters, which the Commission has already investigated and found to be incompatible with the common market. If evidence of the use of other forms of subsidy comes to light I shall also take this up with the European Commission and, where appropriate, with the Greek Government.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the regulations preventing the dumping of imports of cement into the United Kingdom; and if he will impose further restrictions.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community's anti-dumping law provides a means by which complaints of dumping can be investigated and remedies imposed where appropriate.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to introduce a duty on imports of cement from Greece of an amount equivalent to the duty levied by Greece on imports of cement from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No duty is imposed by Greece on imports of cement.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the level of imports of cement into the United Kingdom in each of the past three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Greyhound Management Services

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the supply of greyhound management services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has submitted its report on the supply of greyhound management services and it will be published as soon as possible. I shall make an announcement at that time.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department completed its review of the pyramid selling provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973; what conclusions it reached; and what specific changes in the operation of the law are proposed.

Mr. Howard: My Department will be completing this review shortly. I expect it to result in proposals for strengthening and simplifying the existing legislation on pyramid selling.

EC (Balance of Trade)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will bring up to date the figures showing the balance of trade with the EC each year and in 1986 to date on a balance of payments basis, as given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 29 February 1984, Official Report, columns 193-4; and if he will provide comparable figures on an overseas statistics basis.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the table.

Military Tanks (Competition)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to examine the current extent of competition in the United Kingdom in relation to the supply of military tanks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to make a reference. Monopoly references are normally a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. Should the question of a qualifying merger arise, I would expect to be advised by the director general in the usual way on whether a reference should be made to the MMC.

Steelmaking

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the percentage change in steelmaking capacity (a) between 1970 and 1986 and (b) between 1979 and 1986 in (i) the European Economic Community as a whole, (ii) the United Kingdom, (iii) Scotland, (iv) England, (v) Wales and (vi) each of the other member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many people are employed in the steelmaking industry of each of the member states of the European Economic Community at present; and if he will give comparable figures for each year since 1974.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is the available information.

Mergers

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce amendments to the law to permit him to be the final arbiter on any decision made by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to allow a merger to proceed when this involves matters of national security or defence.

Mr. Howard: Consideration of the powers of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in mergers cases falls within the scope of the review of mergers and restrictive trade practices law and policy announced by the Secretary of State on 5 June 1986.

Petrol Stations (Pricing Policies)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask for a report from the Director General of Fair Trading on his monitoring of developments into pricing policies at petrol stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no present intention of doing so, since competitive forces appear to be working on the price of petrol.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The figures requested are as follows:

	Number
(a)	43
(b)	9
(c)	2
(d)	0

Mr. Brian Gentleman

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry between which dates Mr. Brian Gentleman was employed by his Department; and on what dates he moved between sections within the Department.

Mr. Butcher: Mr. Gentleman has been employed in my Department since 18 August 1980; he moved between sections on 10 August 1983 and 24 October 1984; and he was suspended from duty on 14 April 1986.

Industry Council

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the European Economic Community Council of Industry Ministers on 9 July.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Industry Council I chaired on 9 July concluded that the agreement on exports of semi-finished steel negotiated by the Commission with the USA was the best available in the circumstances. Subject to the final views of one member state, the Council agreed on the division between member states of the allowed levels of exports to the USA. BSC's exports of semi finished steel to Tuscaloosa Steel are unaffected.

I advised the Chairman of the Scrutiny Committee of the likely timetable beforehand. The Scrutiny Committee at its meeting on 9 July recommeded the Commission's proposals for debate, but indicated that it did not wish adoption to be delayed on this account. The debate will take place at the earliest opportunity.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to prevent motor vehicle insurance companies from discriminating against unemployed persons in the granting of insurance policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to introduce such legislation. I have seen no evidence to suggest that any serious discrimination of this kind exists. The terms and conditions of insurance policies are matters for the commercial judgment of insurers.

Steel (Scotland)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the output of each various category of steel from plants in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available and for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 11 July]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 25 June 1986 at column 208.

WALES

Caravan Sites

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions he has exercised his powers under section 9 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968, since it came into force in April 1970, to direct any local authority to provide additional sites for gipsies; on how many occasions he has had cause to threaten to do so; and if, in each case, he will name the authority, the date on which he exercised these powers and whether his direction was complied with.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have exercised these powers once. On 11 April 1986 I made directions requiring West Glamorgan county council to provide so many sites as will provide accommodation for 60 caravans for gipsies. The county council is taking action on the directions but has not yet complied with them. Clwyd county council were advised on 7 July 1986 that I am minded to issue a direction requiring them to provide sides for an additional 30 caravans.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state how many gipsies are estimated to be resorting to or residing in each of the counties in Wales; and when these estimates were made.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: At the January 1986 count of caravans conducted by district councils in Wales the number of gipsy caravans recorded in each county was as follows:—

County	Number of caravans
Clwyd	14
Dyfed	209
Gwent	56
Gwynedd	25
Mid Glamorgan	75
Powys	28
South Glamorgan	105
West Glamorgan	87

Information about the number of people living in these caravans is not available.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Wales which local authority areas in Wales are designated under the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: None.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many separate caravan sites have been provided in each of the counties in Wales; and what is the number of caravan pitches accommodated on those sites.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Twelve caravan sites have been provided by local authorities in Wales. The number in each county and the pitches accommodated on them are given in the following table:

County	Number of Sites	Number of Pitches
Clwyd	Nil	Nil
Dyfed	6	80
Gwent	2	36
Gwynedd	1	34
Mid Glamorgan	1	24
Powys	1	10
South Glamorgan	2	59
West Glamorgan	Nil	Nil

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether the provision of caravan pitches by each of the counties in Wales meets the requirements of the Caravan Sites Act, stating which counties do and which do not meet such requirements.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I may, on the application of a county council, and if I am satisfied that adequate provision is made in their area for the accommodation of gipsies residing in or restoring to that area, designate the area under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968. No such designation has been made in Wales.

Welsh Students (A-Levels)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the number of Welsh students taking Welsh at A-level for each of the last six academic years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information, as provided by the Welsh Joint Education Committee, is given in the following table:—

*Number of Candidates

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
'A' level Welsh (First Language)	252	265	257	269	263	255
'A' level Welsh (Second Language)	260	315	293	314	311	284

* Including external candidates.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much housing benefit has been paid to tenants of private landlords in Wales not subject to fair rents, for each year from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is not held centrally.

Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report comparisons between current expenditure in 1979-80 and 1986-87, or to the latest possible date, giving the difference in money terms and as a percentage and giving the difference between 1979-80 and 1986-87, or the latest possible date, at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Net current public expenditure within my responsibility totalled £1,310 million in 1979-80. Consistent with "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd 9702), the provision for 1986-87 is £2,300 million.

The difference of £990 million represents an increase of about 75 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1986-87. In real terms the increase is £108 million (1986-87 price levels). The increase in real terms has been derived by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the latest GDP deflators.

Pupils (Competition Allowances)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the capitation allowance per pupil on average in each Welsh local education authority for both infant and secondary schools in each year from 1979-80 to 1985-86, inclusive, in cash terms.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Consistent information on full capitation allowances is not collected centrally. However, the available figures relating to expenditure per pupil on books and equipment are given in the following table:

(£'s at outturn prices)

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I will reply as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the percentage of those entering higher education in Avon who receive some form of local government award, indicating the percentage of those who receive a full grant at undergraduate level.

Mr. Walden: It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested. In 1984-85, there were 5,800 first year students on full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses of higher education and courses for the postgraduate certificate of education, in Avon. These students were residents of Avon and other parts of the United Kingdom. Information is not available centrally on the proportion of these students who were in receipt of local authority grants. 2,700 new mandatory awards and 360 new full value discretionary awards were made by Avon for study within the county and outside. The number of new full value award holders in receipt of a full grant is not collected by the Department.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the latest figures available for the pupil-teacher ratio in primary, middle and secondary schools in (a) Derbyshire and (b) Amber Valley compare with the corresponding ratios for 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Dunn: Information for Amber Valley, or other areas within local education authorities, is not available centrally. The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in Derbyshire for the years 1979, 1983 and 1985 are as follows. Middle schools are included within primary and secondary as deemed.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios: Derbyshire

	Primary	Secondary

School Leavers (Qualifications)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage and number of school leavers in Derbyshire from maintained and independent schools, separately, in 1979, 1981, 1983 and the latest year for which figures are available who attained one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, or eight or more higher grade O-level or CSE grade 1 passes, one or more A-levels, and no graded O-level or CSE results.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is given in the following table.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures available regarding the numbers of schoolchildren in Debyshire who continued into higher and further education; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Walden: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of leavers from maintained schools in Derbyshire in the academic year 1984-85 who intended directly to persue a full-time course of further or higher education was 3,780. This represented 25·6 per cent. of the total number of leavers. Comparable figures for the academic year 1978-79 were 2,630 and 18·9 per cent. respectively.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the average level of teachers' salaries in the independent sector.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is not collected by the Department.

School Buildings

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in each education authority were built over 100 years ago and are still in use.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not held centrally.

Qualified Teacher Status

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he uses in assessing an application under paragraph 2*(e)* of Schedule 5 of the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 by a local education authority for qualified teacher status for a person who does not hold a qualification which in itself would give them qualified teacher status.

Mr. Chris Patten: The conditions for approval are set out in paragraph 2(e) of the schedule. In applying these to individual cases, my right hon. Friend looks for possession of a qualification higher than GCE advanced level, for attainment of a standard in English language and mathematics equivalent to GCE ordinary level grade C, where required, and for evidence of length and relevance of experience.

University of Wales (Staff)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the student to staff ratio in each college within the university of Wales for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Walden: The available information is provided in the table. Data for 1985 or later years are not yet available.

*Staff/student ratios

University of Wales Constituent Colleges	Academic year beginning 1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984 (provisional)
Aberystwyth	8·4	8·5	8·8	9·5	9·2	†13·4

Total university of Wales	9·3	9·6	9·5	9·5	9·3	10·0

* Staff/student ratios are defined as the full-time equivalent student load divided by the number of full-time wholly university financed academic staff.
† The basis of the ratio is different from earlier years due to change in the definition of wholly university financed staff in that college, with some of the staff now partly financed from general funds.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on changes in grant aid to the constituent colleges of the university of Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986]: The percentage changes in grant aid by the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board to the constituent colleges of the University of Wales over the period 1979-80 to 1985-86 in real terms (using the GDP deflator) are as follows:

	1979-80 to 1980-81	1980-81 to 1981-82	1981-82 to 1982-83	1982-83 to 1983-84	1983-84 to 1984-85	1984-85 to 1985-86

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department introduced a computer system for recording ministerial correspondence in October 1985. Between then and June 10, about 9,000 letters from hon. Members were received. Figures for those which remain unanswered are as follows*

	Number	Percentage of total received
a Received one to two months ago	390	4
b Received two to three months ago	205	2
c Received three to four months ago	75	1
d Received more than four months ago	330	4

* These figures include some letters which have received a substantive reply but which require further action.

There has been an increase of about 80 per cent. in the volume of ministerial correspondence in the first four months of this year as compared with the same period last year. As soon as the necessary extra staff can be made available, it will be a principal objective of the Department to reduce the average time taken to reply to letters from hon. Members and to clear the current backlogs.

Lecturers

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest available figures for average salaries for lecturers in further education in Britain; and what information he has on such salaries in (a) France, (b) West Germany, (c) Italy, (d) Spain, (e) the United States of America and (f) Japan.

Mr. Walden: The average salary of full-time lecturers in further education in England, Wales and Northern Ireland was £11,900 in 1983-84, the latest year for which information is available. Comparable information for the other countries named is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures to show the numbers of (a) part-time and (b) full-time lecturers employed in the public sector in further and higher education for each of the last five years in each local education authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Walden: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he expects to receive either a full or interim report from the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service inquiry into teachers' pay in England and Wales before 31 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In accordance with the agreement reached on 24 January, the final report of the independent panel chaired by Sir John Wood will be made to the unions, management and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. A meeting on 9 July received the reports of the four working parties set up by the independent panel to examine pay structure, duties and responsibilities, appraisal and training, and negotiating machinery. Negotiations will now be taken forward at a meeting on 25-26 July.

Blackburn House, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why parents of pupils at Blackburn house, Liverpool, have been told that their children must attend university comprehensive school from September.

Mr. Dunn: It is a matter for the local education authority.

Teachers (Career Development)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has had recent discussions with representatives of the teaching profession regarding opportunities for career development for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend will be meeting representatives of the AUT and NUT on 24 July; meetings are also being arranged with other organisations representing teachers. My right hon. Friend will be happy to discuss any matters of a common interest then, including career development.

Parental Contributions

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the proportion of resources for education met by parental contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is not collected centrally.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Programmes

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently participating in each of the Government-funded employment training and enterprise programmes in Derbyshire; and how this compares with the years 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of people participating in programmes in Derbyshire at the end of June are set out in the table. Because of the basis on which local statistics are collected a small proportion may be outside the county.

Scheme	June 1979	June 1983	June 1986
Youth Training Scheme	*n/a	2,836	5,291
Adult Training Strategy	†n/a	†120	2,076
Community Programme	†n/a	120	2,500
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	—	—	759
Community Industry	83	100	100
Job Release Scheme	723	1,545	848
Job Splitting Scheme	—	4	17
Young Workers Scheme	—	1,491	453
New Workers Scheme	—	—	48

* The forerunner to YTS which operated in 1979 was the youth opportunity programme, for which no relevant figures are available.

† Training opportunities programme preceded the adult training strategy, but no figures are available for 1979.

‡ The special temporary employment programme was a forerunner to the community programme in 1979, for which no relevant figures are available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pawsey asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the number of (i) men and (ii) women employed in England for each year since 1978 with similar figures for Rugby and for the Rugby travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: The figures can be given for England but employment statistics for local areas are available only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment

(thousand)

	Male	Female	All
England
June 1978	11,281	7,889	19,170
September 1979	11,424	8,160	19,583

September 1981	10,564	7,823	18,386
September 1982	10,304	7,656	17,960
September 1983	10,172	7,707	17,879

Rugby
June 1978	20·2	11·7	31·8
September 1981	20·5	12·1	32·6

As figures for the new ward based travel-to-work areas are not available for years prior to 1981, the figures for Rugby relate to the area covered by the Rugby jobcentre area which was a travel-to-work area under the old definition.

More up-to-date employment estimates for local areas will become available following publication of the 1984 census of employment later this year. Between censuses employment statistics are based on small scale sample inquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than regions.

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his answers given on 20 May, Official Report, columns 153-54, and 2 June, Official Report, column 259, if he will show where and what number of those placed into (a) job clubs and (b) restart courses also appear in the numbers placed into (i) jobs, (ii) community programme and (iii) other measures.

Mr. Lang: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However, a computer analysis of the pilot initiatives, available in September, will show details of those who are placed in job clubs and restart courses and who subsequently leave the unemployment register.

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General what is the current number of unemployed in the United Kingdom and what was the figure in July 1979; and if he will also give the percentage increase between July 1979 and now in the number who have been unemployed for 12 months and more.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 8 May 1986 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, in the United Kingdom was 3,208,600. The corresponding number for July 1979 was 1,128,400.

On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,356,509. The corresponding number of unemployed registrants in July 1979 was 360,622. The figures are not strictly comparable because of changes in the way the figures are collected.

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General how many are currently unemployed in the black country area of the west midlands; and how many have been unemployed for 12 months or more.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, there were 98,881 unemployed claimants in the Dudley and Sandwell, Walsall and Wolverhampton travel-to-work areas, which closely correspond to the black country area. Of these, 49,200 had been unemployed for over 12 months.

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General how many are currently unemployed in the borough of Walsall; and how many of these have been unemployed for 12 months or more.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, there were 19,846 unemployed claimants in the Walsall local authority area, of whom 10,051 had been unemployed for over 12 months.

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General (1) what is the total number of vacancies, by industrial occupation, in the west midlands currently known to his offices there;

(2) what is the total number of vacancies, by industrial occupation, currently known to his offices in the borough of Walsall;

(3) how many vacancies there are by industrial occupation in the black country area of the west midlands currently known to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies analysed by occupation at jobcentres in the west midlands region, the Walsall local authority area, and the Dudley and Sandwell, Walsall and Wolverhampton travel-to-work areas, which closely correspond to the black country area, as at 4 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis by occupation is available.

Job Creation (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department is currently introducing to reduce the level of unemployment in Coventry.

Mr. Lang: The new package of measures announced in the Budget will significantly benefit Coventry as well as the rest of the country by accelerating the growth of enterprise, boosting employment opportunities for the young and helping the long term unemployed find work. Young people will benefit from the new two year YTS which began on 1 April; the new workers scheme, designed to encourage employers to take on more 18 to 20-year-olds was recently introduced; and the restart programme, to help the long term unemployed back to work, got under way on 1 July.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the efficiency of the unemployment benefit service.

Mr. Lang: Yes, although we are always keen to make further improvements. There has been a 60 per cent. improvement in productivity since 1979.

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what has been the total number of unemployed claimants in each of the Brighton and Leicester parliamentary constituencies for each year since 1979 (a) showing the number of males and females and (b) showing the number by age group under 25 years, 25 to 50 years and over 50 years.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table gives figures for 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, and for April 1984 and April 1985. The comparison is affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Retail Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will bring up to date the figures showing for the United Kingdom and certain other countries the annual increase in retail prices as given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 27 November 1979, Official Report, columns 578-80.

Mr. Trippier: The updated figures are given in the table. In making comparisons between countries it is important to note that there are differences in coverage and methods of construction of the price indices.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General what instructions have been given to his officers interviewing the long-term unemployed concerning regulation 6(e) of the Supplementary Benefit (Conditions of Entitlement) Regulations.

Mr. Trippier: Manpower Services Commission staff, whether counselling the long-term unemployed or in any other contact with unemployed people, are instructed that all cases where availability for work is in doubt should be referred to the benefit authorities. This includes cases where clients—

(a) should be on another benefit, including single parent families, care of relative, role swapping etc.;

(b) are taking part-time courses of education and do not wish to be considered for work or other opportunities; or

(c) are pregnant and are not available to work.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General whether his officers interviewing the long-term unemployed are able to calculate the financial gains and losses an individual might have in starting part-time work under the community programme.

Mr. Trippier: Manpower Services Commission staff interviewing the long-term unemployed are able in general terms to describe how clients may benefit but are unable to calculate in detail the financial gains and losses an individual might have starting part-time work under the community programme.

People requiring specific advice on this are referred to the benefit authorities.

Nuclear Inspectors

Mr. McWilliam asked the Paymaster General if he will list the constraints which exist in the recruitment of nuclear inspectors beyond the current manpower target.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive has authorised the nuclear installations inspectorate to recruit up to 20 inspectors in the current year. They pay of nuclear inspectors is presently under review.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Paymaster General how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago, and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is as follows: (a) 24; (b) 2; (c) 0; (d) 0.

If my hon. Friend is concerned about a delay on a particular case, I would be very willing to look into the matter.

Community Programme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General on the basis of the second postal follow-up survey of past participants on the community programme, in respect of those long-term unemployed community programe entrants that were in employment at the time of the survey, and for the following three standard eligibility by age groups, 18 to 20 years, 20 to 24 years, and 25 and over years, if he will provide the number and percentage that were (a) male and (i) married and (ii) single, separated, divorced or widowed and (b) female and (i) married and (ii) single, separated, divorced, or widowed; and for each latter group and sub-group if he will provide the number and percentage that were working full-time or part-time: (I) while on the programme and (II) at the time of the follow-up survey.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c.16.]: Of the 2,500 respondents to the second community programme follow-up survey, 772 (31 per cent.) were in employment at the time of the survey. 757 of these gave fully usable replies. 219 (29 per cent.) of these were aged 18 to 20 on entry 201 (27 per cent.) were aged 20 to 24 on entry and 337 (44 per cent.) were aged 25 and over on entry.

Table 1 below shows for each age group the number and percentage who were male and female.

Table 1 Age by Sex

	18 to 20		20 to 24		25+
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Male	164	75	152	76	216	64
Female	55	25	49	24	121	36
Total	219	100	201	100	337	100

The sample sizes are too small to permit full further analysis in the detail requested, but, as a guide, over 90 per cent. of males in the 18 to 20 age group were single; about 90 per cent. of males in the 20 to 24 age group were single; about 80 per cent. of females in the 18 to 24 age group were single; about one third of males in the 25 and over age group were single; about one in six females aged 25 and over were single.

As for full-time/part-time employment on CP, 25 per cent. of males in the 18 to 20 and 20 to 24 age groups, who were in work at the time of the survey, had been employed full time on CP; about 30 per cent. of females in the 18 to 24 age group had been employed full-time on CP; in the 25 and over age group, about one half of males had been employed full time on CP; in the 25 and over age group, about one in eight females had been employed full-time on CP.

As for full-time/part-time employment at the time of the survey, about 90 per cent. of males, in all age groups, who were in work at the time of the survey were in full-time employment; about three quarters of females in the age range 18 to 24 were in full-time employment; about one third of those females aged 25 and over were in full-time employment.

In producing the preceding figures, the phrase, "long-term unemployed" has been taken to refer to all participants on the community programme, and thus includes the full sample of ex-participants who were in employment at the time of the survey.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Sir Adam Butler asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) individual sheep and (b) flocks have had to be destroyed in Great Britain as a result of the Chernobyl fallout.

Mr. Jopling: No flocks have had to be destroyed. To date, 726 individual sheep have been slaughtered in England for sampling purposes. The position in Wales and Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland respectively.

Mastitis

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many outbreaks of corynebacterium pyogenes mastitis there have been in dairy herds in the past year; where these were located; and what action was taken.

Mrs. Fenner: This disease is not notifiable and statistics are not available about numbers of outbreaks. However, veterinary investigation centres isolated the organism from 324 incidents in cattle herds throughout Great Britain during 1985, which was the lowest figure for nine years. Owners consult their veterinary practitioners on the problems arising from the disease, in the light of advice from VI centres.

"How to Help Farmers and Keep England Beautiful"

Mr. Andrew Rowe asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy on the proposals made in the report "How to Help Farmers and Keep England Beautiful", published by the Council for the Protection of Rural England and the Council for National Parks.

Mrs. Fenner: I was interested to see this report, which contains a series of proposals as to how the different claims of agriculture and conservation can be reconciled in the countryside. The report urges a massive redirection of funds from agriculture to conservation.

The European Commission's current socio-structural proposals might provide some encouragement for a shift towards more extensive farming methods. However, the proposals in this report would go so much further that I do not consider that they would be negotiable in Brussels.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The number of letters from hon. Members to my Department still awaiting a substantive reply received more than (a) one month ago is eight, (b) two months ago is one, (c) three monts ago is nil and (d) four months ago is nil.

My Department aims to reply to all ministerial correspondence within three weeks of its receipt.

Mercury in Fish

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to raise the official environmental quality standard of 0·3 mg of mercury per kilo in fish caught in Liverpool bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he can list for the latest available date the stocks of European Economic Community surplus agricultural produce in each individual intervention store in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (a) which public authorities in Northern Ireland have been investigated by the Fair Employment Agency, (b) how many complaints and investigations have been made for each such authority, (c) what were the nature of any investigations and (d) what were the findings in each case.

Dr. Boyson: The annual reports of the Fair Employment Agency contain tables indicating the numbers of complaints made against public bodies and I have been advised by the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that the agency has completed section 12 investigations into the following public authorities:

Department of Health and Social Services (Enniskillen)
Northern Ireland Civil Service
Northern Ireland Electricity Service
Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Fire Authority for Northern Ireland
Southern Health and Social Services Board
The Ambulance Services of the four Health Boards
Cookstown District Council
Ulster Museum

With the exception of the first investigation report which was not published because of agency policy at that time and the Cookstown district council report which has yet to be published, the Fair Employment Agency has published separate reports on each of these investigations. Copies of these and the agency's Annual Reports are held in the Library.

The agency's annual reports do not identify bodies investigated under section 24 of the Fair Employment Act, although the annual reports do contain summaries and tables of complaints made. I understand the agency is of the view that it would not generally be in the best interests of its work in this area to release the names of those public authorities against which claims of unlawful discrimination under section 24 have been made. The latest figures supplied by the agency indicate that between 1 December 1976 and 23 June 1986 the agency initiated investigations into 301 complaints made against public bodies under section 24 of the Act. Of these 74 were subsequently withdrawn, 15 were discontinued by virtue of section 42 of the Act, there were 21 findings of discrimination and 148 of no discrimination. Forty-three complaints are under investigation.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the vocational organisations for which the Fair Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) has completed or initiated formal investigations; whether these investigations were under section 12 or section 24 of the Fair Employment Act; and what are the compositional analyses by religion, sex, length of service and occupation, including apprenticeships, of the employees of the organisations investigated.

Dr. Boyson: I have been advised by the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that there have been no section 12 investigations into vocational organisations. Three investigations, comprising five complaints, have been carried out under section 24. I understand the agency, is of the view that it would not be in the best interests of its work in this area to name the organisations concerned. Section 24 investigations do not involve analyses of the type requested. Commentary on these cases is contained in the agency's annual reports, held in the Library. The relevant references are seventh report pages 34-35; eighth report pages 35-36, 39-40 and nineth report page 10.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the fair employment appeals board under part II, section 4 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 was first formally constitued; and if he will name the appellants, numbers and type of appeal, and the outcome in each case of any such appeal since 1976.

Dr. Boyson: The fair employment appeals board was first constituted on 2 July 1982. There have been three appeals against directions by the Agency under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976. I refer the hon. Member to page 9 of the eighth annual report of the Fair Employment Agency which is available in the Library and gives information about the employers concerned. As of 30 June 1986 the fair employment appeals board has issued one decision which upholds the earlier decision of the Fair Employment Agency.

Divis Flats

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of the Divis flats in Belfast.

Mr. Needham: The future of the Divis flats complex is, in the first instance, a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and is one of a number of housing management issues which the Executive keeps under constant review. The present strategy includes the demolition of Pound block (to begin shortly) and St. Brendans block (to begin around the turn of the year). There are no plans for further demolition.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to possible changes in the Anglo-Irish agreement; and what discussions he has had with the Government of the Republic of Ireland about that possibility.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Orange Marches

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Republic of Ireland about traditional Orange marches during July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

"Belfast Telegraph" (Ministerial Interview)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Government of the Republic of Ireland arising from his interview in the Belfast Telegraph on Friday 4 July; and if he will make a statement on each of the issues involved in these representations.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

South Africa

45. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase aid to the states adjoining the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Raison: We maintain substantial programmes of assistance to Zimbabwe, Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Mozambique. Earlier this year I announced new commitments of £10 million for Zimbabwe, £7 million for Mozambique and £10 million through the Southern African development co-ordination conference for transport and communications projects in the region. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 1 July that we were providing an additional £3 million for transport projects in states adjoining South Africa.

50. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards assistance to South African overseas students.

Mr. Raison: We are doing more to help non-white South African students overseas. Training in Britain is being provided under the existing bilateral programme for South Africa. We have also made available £0·5 million a year for the Nassau fellowships scheme put forward at the last Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. In addition, over half of the £15 million to be provided over five years from 1987-88 and announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 1 July, will be devoted to undergraduate training in this country.

Bilateral Aid

51. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the United Kingdom's overseas aid payments have been paid as bilateral aid for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Raison: Bilateral aid as a proportion of gross aid programme expenditure was 54 per cent. in 1983-84, 57 per cent. in 1984-85 and an estimated 59 per cent. in 1985-86.

UNICEF (Sub-Saharan Africa)

52. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources Her Majesty's Government intend to contribute to the recently established United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) fund for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: I await the detailed proposals from UNICEF to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member on 23 June. As I told him then, we have already contributed more than £2 million over the last two years to an earlier appeal for similar purposes.

Ghana

53. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much overseas aid has been given to Ghana over the past three years.

Mr. Raison: £22 million over the period 1983 to 1985.

Aid (Benefits)

54. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to how the benefits to United Kingdom industry from multilateral aid compares with those from bilateral aid.

Mr. Raison: Both bilateral and multilateral aid bring substantial benefits to British industry. Bilateral aid, except for certain local cost aid, is tied to procurement in Britain. In addition, the aid and trade provision helps win major contracts for Britain. Over the years 1982 to 1984, the average value of contracts placed by multilateral agencies with Britain was £435 million annually, against our cash contribution of £372 million.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. John Robinson

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make immediate representations to the President of Zambia regarding the continued detention without trial of John Robinson, a British citizen arrested in Zambia on Tuesday 3 June.

Mr. Eggar: The High Commission in Lusaka is in close contact with Mr. Robinson's lawyer, who is actively engaged on the case. It would therefore be inappropriate to comment at this stage.

European Coal and Steel Community

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Prime Minister's reply, Official Report, 12 June, column 287, relating to agreements between the member states meeting within the Council of the European Coal and Steel Community, on what dates in each of the years from 1978 to 1981 the agreements to provide supplementary finance for the European Coal and Steel Community were concluded; and on what dates and in what form parliamentary approval for the United Kingdom's contribution to such provisions was authorised.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

Decisions of 30 April 1978 (published as Cmnd. 7464), Treaty Series No. 22(79)) approved by the European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (ECSC Decision on Supplementary Revenues) Order 1979 (SI No. 292 of 1979) made on 14 March 1979.

Decision of 9 April 1979 (published as Cmnd. 7584, Treaty Series No. 60(79)) approved by the European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (ECSC Decision of 9 April 1979 on Supplementary Revenues) Order 1979 (SI No. 932 of 1979) made on 26 July 1979.

Decision of 18 March 1980 (published as Cmnd. 7936, Treaty Series No. 50(80)) approved by the European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (ECSC Decision of 18 March 1980 on Supplementary Revenues) Order 1980, (SI No. 1090 of 1980) made on 28 July 1980.

Decision of 7 December 1981 (published as Cmnd. 8490, Treaty Series No. 12(82)), approved by the European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (ECSC Decision of 7 December 1981 on Supplementary Revenues) Order 1982, (SI No. 341 of 1982) made on 10 March 1982.

In each case the approval of Parliament was given by affirmative resolution of each House to a draft of the Order which had been laid before each House in accordance with Section 1(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Each Order specifies the Decision to which it relates as a Community Treaty as defined in Section 1(2) of the ECA 1972.

Radar

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications of the introduction of aircraft invisible to radar for agreements with the Soviet Union on the prevention of accidental nuclear war.

Mr. Renton: The agreement between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union on the prevention of accidental nuclear war makes provision for arrangements to guard against the accidental or unauthorised use of nuclear weapons and the use of "hot-line" communications. The introduction of aircraft with reduced radar cross sections would not, in our judgment, affect the operation of this agreement.

South Africa

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government on the requirement contained in the South African Citizenship Amendment Act 1984 for all white male EEC subjects living in South Africa to register for military service in the South African Defence Force; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 30 June. All white males in South Africa, irrespective of nationality, have to register for military service if they are "normally resident" in South Africa.

Asylum

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken in response to the United Nations General Assembly resolutions calling on United Nations member states to grant asylum or safe transit to all persons who refuse service in military or police forces used to enforce apartheid; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave earlier today.

Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek from other relevant countries access to their files relating to the fate of British prisoners of war interrogated by German Army Group E and the involvement of Kurt Waldheim therein.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave him on 23 June, at column 49.

Penguins

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the likely cause of the unusually high concentration of lead in the tissue of dead penguins found in the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Investigations by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's investigation centre at Norwich are continuing. An explanation of the likely cause of the high concentration of lead in the tissue of the dead rockhopper penguins is not yet available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many dead rockhopper penguins have been counted in the Falkland Islands in connection with the current outbreak of puffinosis; and what other types of penguin have been affected.

Mr. Eggar: There are roughly 4 million penguins in the Falklands. The colonies of rockhopper penguins are widely separated and many are on remote sites. No comprehensive count has been possible of either living or dead birds. The Falkland Islands Government have received no evidence to indicate that other types of penguins have been affected by puffinosis .

European Assembly

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what responsibilities he has to the European Assembly; and how long he has had them.

Mrs. Chalker: In accordance with normal practice, my right hon. and learned Friend has, as President-in-Office of the Council of Ministers, presented the United Kingdom presidency's objectives to the European Parliament and will report on results achieved at the end of the presidency. Either he or I, or one of my other colleagues, will answer questions at the European Parliament's monthly question time.

Cultural Organisations

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the level of funding by other large West European countries of cultural organisations similar to the British Council.

Mr. Eggar: No western European country maintains a programme where the range of functions or the country's objectives are directly comparable to the British Council. Any statistical comparisons are therefore misleading.

British Council

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the British Council's request in its annual report for more resources to pay for increased security measures.

Mr. Eggar: We have informed the British Council that we are very sympathetic towards its security requirements. They have already been told that, subject to parliamentary approval, some adjustment to their grant will be made during the course of the current financial year, 1986-87, in view of the increase of risk. As regards future years, the House will not expect me to anticipate the results of the public expenditure survey.

Hong Kong District Board

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to the United Kingdom by members of the Hong Kong district board.

Mr. Renton: Twelve members of the Wong Tai Sin district board paid a sponsored visit to Britain between 15 and 22 June as guests of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The visit was one of a continuing series of such visits made by various district boards in Hong Kong.

During their visit the group had talks with officials in London and Yorkshire concerned with inner-city problems, with particular emphasis on education, housing and health care. Their programme also included tours of urban renewal and housing development schemes.

West Germany

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit of the President of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 9 July.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The precise information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be supplied at disproportionate cost. However, it is our office practice to reply to all letters from right hon. and hon. Members within, as far as possible, (and in many cases less than) two weeks from receipt. In the majority of cases these replies are substantive.

Soviet Union

Sir Frederic Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any sanctions imposed by the United Kingdom on the Soviet Union following its invasion of Afghanistan in 1980 are still in force.

Mr. Renton: We and our NATO allies continue to restrict military contacts with the Soviet armed forces in order to register our disapproval of the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan.

Sir Frederic Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of those sanctions imposed on the Soviet Union following its invasion of Afghanistan in 1980 in bringing about the removal of Soviet occupying forces.

Mr. Renton: The measures taken by the United Kingdom, together with our allies and European Community partners, following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan brought home to the Soviet Union our condemnation of Soviet aggression. We shall impress on the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Shevardnadze, during his visit to London the need for early withdrawal of the Soviet occupying forces.

Sir Frederic Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representations he has received over the past year seeking the imposition of mandatory sanctions on the Soviet Union in the light of its military activities in Afghanistan.

Mr. Renton: I am aware of no such representations.

Middle East

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have had any recent contacts with the Polisario Front; and if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic.

Mr. Renton: There continue to be occasional informal contacts between Polisario representatives and Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials. These do not denote any change in our neutral policy towards the Western Sahara dispute. We do not recognise the "Sahara Arab Democratic Republic".

Falkland Islands (Census)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish in full the results of the census being undertaken of the population of the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government have not yet decided on the precise date for the next census: it is their intention to hold one before the end of the year. The results will be published.

Brazil (Aircraft Landing Rights)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any agreement with the Government of Brazil for landing rights for aircraft carrying United Kingdom military personnel en route from or to the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. In accordance with international practice, Brazil affords facilities for emergency aircraft diversions.

SCOTLAND

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Dundee, East of Monday 23 June, Official Report, column 20, he will list the remaining sites of special scientific interest in Scotland which are of an area of 259 hectares (one square mile) or over.

Mr. Ancram: The Nature Conservancy Council has provided the following information:

Lambs (Radiation)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average content and standard deviation of caesium content, in becquerels per kilogram, in monitored lambs in each monitoring area of Scotland since April.

Mr. John MacKay: In the area of Dumfries and Galloway from which restrictions were lifted on 8 July, the mean level of caesium-134 and caesium-137 together in 233 samples was 198 becquerels per kilogram and the standard deviation was 152. There is no need for such statistics to be calculated for areas where monitoring shows clearly that restrictions on the movement and slaughtering of lambs cannot yet be removed or for areas where testing and other available evidence have demonstrated that there is no cause for restrictions to be imposed.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what geographical sub-divisions have been used in the monitoring of caesium content in lambs in Scotland since the beginning of May.

Mr. John MacKay: Monitoring is undertaken by local authority area and is concentrated in locations where it appears, on the basis of evidence collected since the Chernobyl incident occurred, that depositions of radioactive material may have been such as to give rise to high caesium readings in young lambs.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lambs have been tested for caesium content in each area of Scotland since the beginning of May.

Mr. John MacKay: The following is the information to date:

Region or Islands area	Number of animals tested
Borders	18
Central	3
Dumfries and Galloway	934
Fife	1
Grampian	8
Highland	113
Lothian	2
Orkney	2
Shetland	1
Strathclyde	51
Tayside	5
Western Isles	4

Radiation

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring has been carried out in which areas of Scotland to access the caesium content in game species such as salmon, trout, deer and grouse since April; and what have been the results.

Mr. John Mackay: The following is the information:

Species	Origin	Cs 134 and Cs 137 (Bq/kg)
Salmon	Perth	13·5
Salmon	Culkein	1·0
Salmon	Strathy	8·9
Sea Trout	Perth	12·0
Sea Trout	Perth	12·5
Sea Trout	Strathy	8·9
Brown Trout	Loch Achoire	59·0
Rainbow Trout (farmed)	Dumfries and Galloway	3·0
Rainbow Trout (farmed)	Highland	3·4
Rainbow Trout (farmed)	Tayside	2·9
Venison	Dumfries and Galloway	322·0
Venison	Grampian	108·0
Venison	Highland	675·0

Note: Monitoring of these and other game species continues.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to make commencement orders to bring into force the various provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 for which he is responsible; if he proposes to issue a circular to local authorities regarding his intentions in this respect; if he will issue a document summarising for the benefit of the public the provisions of the Act, with particular reference to the new rights for the disabled created by the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: As indicated by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Education when the House considered Lords amendments, we shall reach a view on implementation of the provisions in the light of consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other relevant factors.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to issue a circular solely on commencement of these provisions: the nature and timing of guidance to local authorities and others on the Act as a whole is currently being considered by the Scottish Education Department. My right hon. and learned Friend also has no plans to present general publicity about the Act; such publicity would in any case not be appropriate in advance of provisions being commenced.

Local Government Ombudsman

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many local authorities have refused to implement the recommendations of the local government ombudsman since his establishment where he has upheld a complaint against them; and if he will list these authorities and the cases concerned;

(2) in how many cases his establishment and the local government ombudsman have upheld a complaint against a local authority; and if he will list the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Ancram: According to their annual reports, successive Commissioners for Local Administration in Scotland have, up to 31 March 1986, upheld 250 complaints. Where local authorities have not implemented a Commissioner's recommendations, 14 further reports have been issued. More detailed information is not held centrally, but I have asked the Commissioner's office to write to the hon. Member.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the names of all the forestry commissioners, with dates of appointment to the commission, together with details of the relevant background experience of each.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

	Date of appointment
Sir David Montgomery (Chairman) Landowner and farmer. Prior to his appointment he was Vice Convener of Tayside Regional Council, Vice Chairman of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, a member of the Nature Conservancy Council, and Chairman of the Council's Scottish Committee.	21 August 1979
G. D. Holmes (Deputy Chairman and Director General) A full-time appointment at Deputy Secretary level. Professional forestry qualifications. Held various posts in the Forestry Commission since 1948, including Director Research.	1 January 1977
G. J. Francis (Commissioner, Operations) A full-time appointment at Under Secretary level. Professional forestry qualifications. Held various posts in the Forestry Commission since 1954, including Director Harvesting and Marketing.	31 October 1983
D. T. J. Rutherford (Commissioner, Administration and Finance) A full-time appointment at Under Secretary level. Professional accountancy qualifications. Management accounting and computing experience in the private sector prior to joining Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1975 where he held various posts including Principal Finance and Establishment Officer.	1 November 1984
R. T. Bradley (Commissioner, Private Forestry and Development) A full-time appointment at Under Secretary level. Professional forestry qualifications. Held various posts in the Forestry Commission since 1960, including Senior Officer for Wales and Director for Harvesting and Marketing.	2 September 1985
Lord Gibson-Watt of Wye (Part-time Commissioner) Farmer and woodland owner. Member of Parliament from 1956 to 1974; a Lord Commissioner of the Treasury (1959-61); Minister of State (Welsh Office) (1970-74). A former president of the Royal Welsh Agricultural Society. Chairman of Council on Tribunals from 1980.	1 October 1976
J. D. Pollock (Part-time Commissioner) General Secretary of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Member of Manpower Services Committee Scotland. Former Chairman of the Scottish Trades Union Congress.	1 October 1978
G. O. Hutchison (Part-time Commissioner) Timber merchant. The first Chairman of the Timber Research and Development Association's Stress Grading Committee.	1 October 1981
Captain W. F. E. Forbes (Part-time Commissioner) Woodland owner and farmer. Former Chairman of Scottish Woodland Owners' Association. Member of the Executive of the Scottish Landowners' Federation. Chairman of the Central Scotland Countryside Trust.	1 October 1982
James Forbes (Part-time Commissioner) Chartered Accountant with wide business and commercial experience.	1 November 1982
I. D. Coutts (Part-time Commissioner) Chartered Accountant with wide commercial and local government experience. Chairman of Norfolk County Council Planning Committee.	18 April 1984

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested by the categories listed by the hon. Member is as follows: (a) 52; (b) 19; (c) 12; (d) 8.

I hope shortly to take one or two particular policy decisions which will make it possible to reduce these numbers significantly, especially the numbers in categories (c) and (d).

North British Hotel, Glasgow

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or loans were made by the Scottish tourist board to Mr. Emil Malak in connection with the refurbishment of the North British hotel, Glasgow; and what money was repaid by Mr. Malak when he sold the hotel in 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: Archyield Ltd received a grant of £207,000 towards the refurbishment of the North British hotel. The offer of grant was made in August 1984. No recovery of grant was made by the board following the sale of the company.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or loans were made by the Historic Buildings Council to Mr. Emil Malak in connection with the refurbishment of the North British hotel, Glasgow; and what money was repaid by Mr. Malak when he sold the hotel in 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: I offered an historic buildings grant of £90,000 on the recommendation of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland, and accepted by Mr. Malak on behalf of his company, Archyield Limited, in 1984. The grant was solely in respect of the restoration of the facade and external repairs to the North British Hotel.

The grant having been made to the company, Mr. Malak was not due to repay it when he sold his interest in Archyield Limited.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or loans were made by the Scottish Development Agency in connection with the refurbishment of the North British hotel, Glasgow between 1983 and 1985; and what money was repaid when the hotel was subsequently sold.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Housing (Leith)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the Buchanan Street housing association about its proposals to provide housing in Albert Street, Leith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: One letter has been received from the director of the Buchanan Street Residents' Housing Association Ltd. within the last three months.

My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering Edinburgh district council's policies and priorities in relation to the capital consent issued to the council on the non-housing revenue account block. Decisions affecting the Edinburgh Albert street Etc. (No. 3) housing action area for improvement and other housing action areas are expected to be reached shortly.

Mr. Emil Malak

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or loans have been paid by the Highlands and Islands Development Board or other public body for which he is responsible to Mr. Emil Malak in connection with his purchase of nursing homes in Inverness and in other parts of the Highlands.

Mr. Rifkind: The board has provided financial assistance to a company in which Mr. Emil Malak is a shareholder for the establishment of a nursing home near Beauly.

In order to preserve confidentiality, the board does not disclose details of financial assistance given to companies which are currently trading except with the consent of the company. This consent has not been obtained.

I am not aware that any other public body for which I am responsible has provided assistance to Mr. Malak in connection with any purchase by him of nursing homes in the Highlands.

Sheep Variable Premium

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has on the current value of the variable premium in those areas affected by the recent ban on the movement and slaughter of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Sheep variable premium does not vary from area to area but is paid at the same rate throughout Great Britain. Sheep reared in areas which are still subject to the restrictions cannot, of course, qualify for variable premium at present because they cannot for the time being be brought to market. However special arrangements have been made to monitor the prices of these animals coming on to the market as the restrictions are lifted. It is too early to draw firm conclusions from the prices available so far.

Lambs (Restrictions)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to help alleviate the particular difficulties being encountered by those within the areas affected by the ban on the movement and slaughter of lambs with regard to the special sales of breeding stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend is aware of the difficulties facing those in the designated areas who wish to move animals to special sales of breeding stock. There is no reason to expect any detectable increase in genetic mutation in sheep following the Chernobyl incident and no need to restrict the use of animals from designated areas for breeding purposes. My right hon. and learned Friend will therefore consider sympathetically requests for consent to move animals out of designated areas where he is satisfied that the movement is for the purpose of selling animals for breeding use at a recognised sale of breeding stock. Applications for consent should be made to the local area office of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to announce any relaxation in the movement and slaughter of sheep in those areas affectd by his announcement of 23 June; and if he will make a statement

Mr. John MacKay: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie).

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes any further changes in the areas in Scotland within which the movement and slaughter of sheep are presently controlled under the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (No. 4) Order 1986.

Mr. Rifkind: In the light of further results from the first round of monitoring in the designated areas, I am pleased to say that I can remove restrictions from two further areas in Dumfries and Galloway, one in the east of the region and one in the west. I have accordingly today made an order amending the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (No. 4) Order 1986 to be effective from midnight tonight. Details of the derestricted areas, together with the latest monitoring results are being issued by my Department today and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mental Health (Code of Practice)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has so far been taken to prepare for the drafting of a code of practice for Scotland under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, section 119; and when he expects the consultation process to be completed.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Health and Social Work gave to the hon. Member Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 1 July at column 484. I cannot at present say when the consultation process on the draft code of practice is likely to be completed.

Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to bring into operation the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985.

Mr. Rifkind: I have authorised the commencement of the provisions of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985 (except section 25) with effect from 1 September. My noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate, has made an order to bring into operation on the same day the provisions of part IV of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984, dealing with financial provision in Scotland after overseas divorce.

ENERGY

Nuclear Plants (Accidents)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in tabular form the latest information he has available on the officially reported first acknowledgement of the accidents that took place at (a) Windscale plutonium pile in 1957, (b) Kyshtym nuclear facility in the Soviet Union in 1957, (c) Windscale Head-End reprocessing plant in 1973, (d) Windscale nuclear liquor storage tank in 1978, (e) Three Mile Island PWR nuclear power station in the United States in 1979 and (f) the Chernobyl nuclear plant in 1986.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

(a) The UKAEU issued a public statement on 11 October 1957;

(b) The Soviet Union has never acknowledged an accident at Kyshtym;

(c) The incident at BNFL Windscale on 26 September 1973 was reported to the NII within 24 hours and was later the subject of a press statement;

(d) The incident at the Windscale magnox cladding storage silo on 31 October 1978 was reported to the NII within 24 hours and details were later published in the quarterly report of the Health and Safety Executive;

(e) The President's commission on the accident at Three Mile Island reported that local authorities and the media were informed of problems at the plant on 28 March 1979;

(f) The first official acknowledgement by the Soviet Government of the accident at Chernobyl was given on 28 April.

Kyshtym (Nuclear Accident)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a report on research undertaken by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on the nuclear accident at Kyshtym in the Soviet Urals in 1958.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that while it is aware of reports about the alleged accident at Kyshtym it has not undertaken any specified research into them.

Nuclear Research and Development

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update to March 1986 the information given by the right hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) in reply to the question from the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls), Official Report, 15 May 1981, column 381, on the amount his Department spent each year on (i) nuclear research and development (a) through the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and (b) otherwise, (ii) on non-nuclear research and development and (iii) on the various categories of renewable energy research and development.

Mr. David Hunt: It is misleading to compare R & D on nuclear energy with that on renewable energy simply on the basis of annual expenditures. Nuclear power is a highly developed, economically proven and large scale technology which already provides about one-fifth of United Kingdom electricity generation. The electricity-producing renewables on the other hand are at an earlier stage of development; their ecomomics are as yet uncertain; and the scale at which it is appropriate to conduct R & D is much smaller that is the case with nuclear power. As the prospects for renewable energy technologies become more clearly identified as economically attractive, we would expect the R & D effort to grow accordingly and the adoption of the technologies by final users would be encouraged. This approach is exemplified by my right hon. Friend's announcement to the House on 9 July that the Department is to launch a further research programme aimed at reducing the technical and economic uncertainties of tidal power as a means of power generation. The programme, which will involve the CEGB, the Severn tidal power group and the Mersey Barrage company was well as my Department, will cost an estimated £5·5 million, of which my Department will contribute £2 million.

Expenditure by my Department on research and development for the year 1980-81 to 1984-85 is given in the table below:

	£ millions
	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
(i) Nuclear R & D*	186·2	205·4	214·8	203·8	†196·2
(ii) Non Nuclear R & D of which
Renewables:	33·2	46·1	34·8	40·0	40·8
Wind	0·8	0·9	2·5	2·5	4·8
Wave	3·3	4·4	3·1	1·0	0·4
Geothermal-Aquifer	1·7	2·6	1·5	1·8	1·1
Geothermal-Hot Dry Rocks	0·6	5·6	3·0	2·9	4·6
Solar	0·9	0·7	1·4	0·9	0·5
Biomass	0·3	0·4	0·7	0·3	0·2
Tidal	1·4	0·4	0·0	0·0	0·3
ETSU Services	2·2	2·3	2·0	1·9	2·1
Total Renewables	11·2	17·3	14·2	11·3	14·0

* All nuclear R & D funded by the Department is through the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.
† This figure does not reconcile with the Appropriation Account because of a change in accounting conventions following the change in the basis of departmental funding of the UKAEA in that year from parliamentary grant to grant-in-aid.

Alternative Energy

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the potential contribution of United Kingdom research and development in (a) wind energy, (b) solar energy, (c) tidal energy, (d) wave energy, (e) photovoltaic cells, (f) geothermal energy and (g) passive solar building design over the next 30 years in exports to the Third world in enhancing their energy supplies.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's programme on renewable forms of energy is concerned with supporting and seeking to develop cost-effective technologies with wide application under United Kingdom conditions. The Department of Trade and Industry has provided support for projects in the areas of wind and solar energy which have export prospects, with my Department maintaining a watching brief on development both at home and worldwide.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out in tabular form the amount of investment on research, development and demonstration made by his Department, the Central Electricity Generating Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Generating Board, British Nuclear Fuels Limited, United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and in collaborative projects with the European projects with the European Commission from 1975 to 1986, in relation to (a) thermal nuclear fission, (b) fast reactors, (c) fusion reactors, (d) coal burning for electricity generation, (e) combined heat and power technology, (f) active solar, (g) passive solar, (h) goethermal, (i) wind energy generation, (j) biomass energy, (k) wave energy, (l) tidal energy, (m) electricity conservation, (n) gas fired electricity generation and (o) oil-fired electricity generation.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 654-5, he will set out the specific use to which the 545 kg of Calder Hall/Chapelcross plutonium referred to was put; and whether it has now been removed from safeguards.

Mr. Goodlad: Some of the material has been transfered to the UKAEA for civil R and D purposes, and the remainder is being held by BNFL as part of its stockpile of plutonium available for civil use. None of the material has been removed from safeguards.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnyd Nant Conwy of 23 June, Official Report, column 47, he will set out by date, quantity, and reactor of origin all withdrawals from safeguards of plutonium in gramme quantities.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been 50 temporary withdrawals ranging up to 12g. As I stated in my answer of 23 June at column 47, the material involved originated in either Chapelcross/Calder Hall or in generating board reactors.

Sellafield

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will specify the areas of Sellafield to which casual visitors (a) will and (b) will not be permitted access; and if he will give in each case the reasons for their exclusion.

Mr. Goodlad: Casual visitors to Sellafield can see the exhibition centre and take advantage of coach tours around the operating and construction sites. It is for British Nuclear Fuels to determine the detailed arrangements.

Nuclear Power (Military Uses)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what continuous surveillance of the processes involved is provided by control agencies to ensure that nuclear energy programmes are not used for warlike ends.

Mr. Goodlad: Safeguarding of the processes involved in civil nuclear programmes consists of continuous materials accountancy arrangements complemented by on-site inspections.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he makes of the extent to which technical difficulties in implementing safeguards against the use of nuclear energy programmes for warlike ends are surmountable.

Mr. Goodlad: I have no reason to believe that there are technical difficulties in implementing safeguards which cannot be surmounted.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action has been taken by his Department on the basis of studies undertaken by (a) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (b) the Central Electricity Generating Board, (c) the South of Scotland Electricity Board and (d) the NNC since May 1979 on the risks of accidents at nuclear plants; and if he will arrange for copies of each study on which action has been so taken, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: Operators of nuclear installations in the United Kingdom are required to keep safety atthose installations under close and continuing review.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the Chernobyl accident has had on his assessment of the methodology of determining the risks of an accident at a nuclear installation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: Full details of the Chernobyl accident have not yet been given by the Soviet Union. Any lessons from Chernobyl will be carefully evaluated.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what account is taken in assessment by Her Majesty's Government and by the nuclear industry of the safety of nuclear installations in the United Kingdom, of the Rasmussen report on the probability of accidents of various types in reactors in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is my aim that all letters from hon. Members to Ministers in my Department should be dealt with within two working weeks. This is achieved in the majority of cases, but is not always possible, for example where letters raise complex issues or where information needs to be sought from other bodies. There are currently 30 letters awaiting a reply which were received over a month ago, and none for any period of more than two months.

Coal Imports

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the amount of coal imported and the places of origin for each quarter for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to the reply, 7 July 1986, c. 28]: Following is the information:

TRANSPORT

Safety Engineering Techniques

10. Sir John Wells asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation his Department has made of the extent of application of small-scale safety engineering techniques for accident reduction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department actively promotes these techniques. They are highly cost-effective. Some authorities use them extensively. If others followed their lead, many more accidents could be saved at low cost.

Airports (Security)

16. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with other member states of the European Community regarding the security provisions at international airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We hold frequent discussions on these matters with foreign Governments. They take place on a bilateral and Community basis. and within the European Civil Aviation conference and also the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

29. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he proposes to take to improve security measures at international airports in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Security at United Kingdom airports has been stepped up in recent weeks, but it would not be in the public interest to disclose details. I keep our aviation security programme constantly under review and I will take any further measures that are necessary.

Buses (Subsidies)

17. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether any local authorities have completed the tendering process for subsidised bus services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that only Highland region in Scotland has completed the tendering process. It will save about £179,000—some 14 per cent. of this year's budget. I also understand that Lancashire's results, with virtually all its tendering completed, show equivalent savings of about £5·8 million—70 per cent. of this year's budget on the provision of broadly the same level of service as previously. Results in Cumbria also show substantial savings for the five-month period between 26 October, when the tendered services come into operation, to 31 March 1987; expenditure will be only £0·24 million compared with some £0·7 million budgeted for the first seven months of the financial year up to 26 October. In all three cases service levels were broadly maintained. Of course, there are many more results to come and it is too early to draw general conclusions, but I regard these results as very encouraging, bearing in mind the alarmist prophecies of massive service cuts or spending increases which we heard a year ago.

35. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to limit the subsidy which a local authority may make to assist privately owned bus operations.

Mr. David Mitchell: I see no need to impose such a limit. The Transport Act 1985 requires local authorities to put contracts for local bus service subsidies out to competitive tender, and to award the contract to whichever tenderer offers best value for money. If private sector operators can give the best value, they should win the contracts.

Severn Crossing

18. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any new road or rail link to the proposed Severn crossing is planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) about the second Severn crossing study. The brief for the study required a second crossing to have convenient road links to the M4 and M5 Motorways. The consultants were not asked to study rail links.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to make a statement on plans for a second crossing of the Severn river based on consultants' reports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes).

Light Dues

19. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport what new measures he is considering to reduce the burden of light dues on the shipping industry.

Mr. Moore: Between 1981-82 and 1985-86, the burden of United Kingdom light dues has been reduced, in constant price terms, by over 13 per cent. For the future, I have asked Arthur Young, the management consultants, to undertake a major study of the feasibility of rationalising the operations of the general lighthouse authorities' tender fleets. This could lead to large cost savings. I will also continue to press for economies in the annual expenditure review in the late autumn.

Road Casualty Figures

20. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the road casualty figures for the first quarter of 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The rise in casualties of 4 per cent. in the first quarter of 1986 is disappointing. Of particular concern is the rise of 8 per cent. in car user casualties, which is greater than the 6 per cent. rise in car traffic. There is encouragement to be drawn from the 4 per cent. fall in child pedestrian casualties and the 15 per cent. fall in child cyclist casualties.

The general upturn in casualties follows last year's exceptionally low figures. The trend cannot be reversed by Government alone; it is up to all of us as road users. I urge drivers especially to contribute to reducing road casualties.

Transport Act 1985

21. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information for potential operators he has published about the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has published a series of leaflets containing information on various aspects of the Transport Act 1985 and several of these have been for potential bus operators. In addition I am about to publish a further leaflet and booklet with details of how to start in the bus industry. Copies of all these publications can be obtained from traffic area offices or the Department of Transport, 2 Marsham street, London SW1. I have sent copies to all hon. Members. It is important to make widely known the opportunities provided by the Act to enter an industry which has been over-regulated for far too long.

Drink-Driving

22. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the operation of the Transport Act 1981 as it relates to drunken driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The main aim of the provisions was to improve the effectiveness of the law on drinking and driving by providing or introduction of evidential breathalysers. Various loopholes which allowed suspects to avoid prosecution on legal technicalities were closed. The Act extended police powers to require a roadside breath test to those who had been driving or had been in charge of a vehicle. Those measures came into force in May 1983. A substantial period of monitoring will be needed before firm conclusions are drawn as to their impact.

28. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to discourage drinking and driving; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Dormand).

Ilminster Bypass

23. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport when work on the Ilminster bypass will start.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work should start later this year and I will announce the exact date as soon as possible.

Bypasses

24. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of bypass roads have been constructed since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1 April 1979, the Department has constructed 56 trunk road bypasses and relief roads totalling 205 miles. Another 162 such schemes are in the trunk road forward programme which will amount to a further 600 miles. I do not have the corresponding figures for bypasses and relief roads constructed on those roads for which local highway authorities are responsible.

30. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the appointment of an officer to deal with social and industrial consequences for bypassed communities of the construction of bypasses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. I am advised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that traders are able, before a new road opens, to apply to their local planning authority for consent to erect advertisements alongside that road in advance of the actual road opening. The local planning authority is required to determine such applications within two months of receipt. Any appeal to my right hon. Friend against the refusal of a local planning authority to grant a consent or failure to give a decision within the specified period is dealt with expeditiously.

Port State Control Inspections

25. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many port state control inspections were made last year; and how this compares with other European countries.

Mr. Moore: The number of port state control inspections undertaken in the United Kingdom in 1985 was 2,559. The figures for the region covered by the 14 European signatories to the memorandum of understanding on port state control was 10,044. The memorandum incorporates a target inspection rate of 25 per cent. of foreign ships calling at a country's ports. The United Kingdom's inspection rate was 34 per cent. in 1985, representing a major contribution to the deterrence of substandard ships from operating in the region.

British Rail (Chairman)

26. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what he discussed when he met the chairman of British Rail on 26 June.

Mr. David Mitchell: We discussed a wide range of matters of current interest.

Channel Tunnel

27. Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the proposed Channel tunnel will have on tourism in Kent.

Mr. David Mitchell: The preliminary assessment report of the Kent impact study, which has just been published, suggests that tourism is one of the industries whose prospects will be significantly improved by the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the promoters of the Channel tunnel about the financing of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are in regular contact with the promoters of the scheme about various matters; the Government welcome the progress which is being made, although financial arrangements are of course entirely a matter for the promoter.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have been held between his Department and British Rail on the provision of on-train custom and immigration checks on Channel tunnel trains.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has discussed this question with British Rail from time to time. I recognise the importance of this issue for BR's plans to operate through trains, particularly those with destinations beyond London.

North Lancashire

31. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit north Lancashire to examine the transport infrastructure there.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans at the present time to visit north Lancashire, but my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State who has responsibility for roads and traffic has accepted an invitation by Lancashire county council to visit the county at a date to be arranged.

Air Links (South Africa)

32. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about air links between the United Kingdom and South Africa.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Radioactive Waste and Plutonium

33. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to implement the Environment Committee's recommendation about transport of spent fuel, high-level radioactive waste and plutonium.

Mr. Moore: The Government are considering the Committee's recommendations and will respond in due course.

Docklands Light Railway

34. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received notice from the London Docklands Development Corporation concerning proposals for an eastern extension to the docklands light railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has received no proposals for an eastern extension to the docklands light railway from the LDDC, but it is now discussing with my officials the form such proposals might take.

Perry Oaks Sewage Works

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he can report on the study carried out on behalf of the British Airports Authority and the Thames water authority into the options for releasing the site of the Perry Oaks sewage works to Heathrow airport.

Mr. Moore: A report on options for releasing the Perry Oaks site to Heathrow airport, commissioned jointly by the British Airports Authority and the Thames water authority, has just been completed. Copies of the report are today being placed in the Library. The report shows the technical feasibility of releasing the Perry Oaks site but recommends further technical trials to determine the optimum method. It would, of course, be for the BAA and TWA to negotiate a transfer of the site. The Government regard the removal of the existing sewage works and the release of the site to the airport as highly desirable.

Motor Cycle Noise Limits

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any representations about the European Community Commission's proposals to tighten motor cycle noise limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Motorcycle Action Group is conducting a campaign against the Commission proposals for stricter noise limits on new motor cycles.

It is wrong to suggest that proposals for new noise limits will mean the end of the air-cooled engine. I know of no proposals from either the Commission or any member state of the European Community which would have that effect. No evidence has been produced to substantiate the claim that the proposals being discussed at Brussels threaten the viability of British or European manufacturers.

I recognise that there are difficulties in in-use enforcement of the noise regulations. The law now requires that replacement silencers for the latest machines must be marked to show their compliance with the law.

The current noise regulations recognise that different noise limits should apply to different types of vehicle. Substantial reductions will be achieved for cars and lorries during the next few years. It is essential that we make similar progress on motor cycles. Noisy motor cycles are extremely unpopular with the general public. It is in the interests of motor cyclists that they should have available to them well designed machines which keep noise to a minimum while preserving all the traditional advantages of motor cycling. All those concerned with motor cycling should in their own interests be pressing manufacturers to do this.

Transatlantic Air Fares (Compensation)

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to when the arrangements for issuing coupons compensating passengers who flew between the United Kingdom and the United States of America between 1 March 1982 and 31 March 1984 for the excessive fares charged to them by British Airways, TWA and Pan Am will become operative.

Mr. Moore: The case to which the right hon. Member refers was settled without any admission of liability by the defendants and without the court finding that any wrong had been done or that excessive fares and been charged. The administration of the settlement is a matter for the US courts; but I understand from British Airways that it is likely to take at least another two months to complete the procedure for the issue of the coupons.

M1 (Road Signs)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the advance warning sign prior to junction 41 northbound on the M1 motorway between Wakefield and Leeds was damaged; and on what date it will be repaired.

Mr. Moore: The direction sign was damaged by a storm on 11 February 1986. A new sign face has been ordered and will be erected within two to three months.

North Sea (Offshore Supplies)

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from British offshore supply boat operatives about British companies, share of the North sea market.

Mr. Moore: I have received a number of representations about the situation faced by the United Kingdom offshore support vessel fleet in the North sea; my noble Friend the Minister for shipping met a deputation from the British Offshore Support Vessels Association on 7 July for further discussions.

Passenger Traffic (Railways)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the financial success of the recently opened Edinburgh-Bathgate passenger line, he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the feasibility of the reopening of more lines to passenger traffic.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the board to identify opportunities of this kind.

Ports Transparency Directive

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in the implementation of the Ports Transparency Directive (No. 80/723/EEC); and when he expects the consultant's report is to be completed.

Mr. Moore: With effect from 1 January this year, member states became subject to a requirement to make available to the Commission on request information on financial relations between public authorities and public undertakings in the ports sector. However, I do not consider this directive goes far enough and we have been urging the Commission to move towards the publication of transport accounts by all port undertakings in the Community. The Commission has not in my knowledge engaged any consultants on this subject.

Weighbridges (Commercial Vehicles)

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to require that all commerical vehicles entering the United Kingdom by sea pass over a weighbridge before travelling on the public roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I am keen to ensure that as many foreign lorries as possible are weighed at the ports and we intend to provide axle weighbridges at all the ferry ports, with driver self-weigh facilities where conditions permit. However, it would not be possible, without adding unacceptably to congestion, delay and enforcement costs, to require all incoming vehicles to be weighed.

Motorway Safety

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what safety improvements he anticipates will result from the national motorways safety campaign being mounted by the police from 17 to 27 July.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I congratulate the police on this useful and positive initiative. The campaign focuses on three themes—keeping a safe distance, driving at a safe speed, and good lane discipline. More drivers need to be aware of the importance of these aspects of safe motorway driving. British motorways are amongst the safest roads in the world. There are around 40 per cent. fewer deaths per vehicle mile than French or West German motorways, or interstate highways in the USA. We must continue to do all we can to encourage improved driving standards.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a consultative committee to consider the environmental impact of the proposed Channel tunnel terminal at Waterloo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail are consulting local authorities and community groups about the likely effects of their proposed terminal. I am considering with BR whether anything further might usefully be done to assist consultations about the effects of the project in London.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will order a public inquiry to be held on the implications of the siting of a Channel tunnel terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. British Rail's Waterloo terminal for international services is provided for in the Channel Tunnel Bill and will be considered in the Select Committee like the other works in the Bill.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the annual report of London Regional Transport will be published.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that London Regional Transport proposes to publish its annual report for 1985-86 shortly.

Lorry Ban (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the extent to which the London lorry ban is being enforced in different London boroughs, and as to the attitude of individual boroughs towards it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: That is for the boroughs.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications have been received from London boroughs to install bus lanes on designated roads; how many have been refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. An application to make permanent a bus lane previously installed under an experimental traffic order has been approved.

Parachuting

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of Transport (1) if he will introduce legislation to license schools which train pupils for lessons in parachute drops; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require a minimum number of lessons from a qualified instructor before pupils can take part in sky jumps; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured as a result of parachuting accidents in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority that each year about 250,000 civilian parachute drops take place in the UK and that in the last three years the numbers of people (a) killed and (b) injured in such drops has been as follows:—

	1983	1984	1985
(a) killed	1	4	2
(b) seriously injured	1	40	21
minor injuries (including ground training)	187	232	229

The Civil Aviation Authority has statutory responsibility for the regulation of parachuting, under article 41 of the Air Navigation Order 1985. No club or school may operate without the authority's written permission. Operations and training must comply with the safety procedures laid down by the CAA, and with the guidance given by the British Parachute Association, both of which are set out in the clubs' operations manuals. The BPA is responsible for the day-to-day control of the sport, and sets basic training requirements for all parachutists. It also advises the CAA on procedures and in deciding whether clubs may operate. These arrangements have worked well for a long time and I do not believe that further legislation is necessary.

Parachuting is generally a safe sport; but, however good the regulation, it must by its nature always contain an element of danger. Individuals should take account of this in deciding whether to take part.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The number of letters from hon. Members to my Department still awaiting a substantive reply after one month is 54. After two months the figure is 33, after three months 10, and after four months 20. The total figure of 90 awaiting reply represents 1·5 per cent. of approximately 6,000 letters received by my Department from hon. Members during the last four months. The 90 letters concern matters on which further work has to be done before a substantive reply can be given.

South Africa

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish figures showing the percentage of the volume and value of seaborne trade between ports in the Republic of South Africa and Southampton in each of the last five years which emanated from the front-line states;

(2) if he will publish figures showing the volume and value of seaborne trade between the Republic of South Africa and Southampton for 1985 and so far in 1986.

Mr. Moore: Information on seaborne trade with South Africa through Southampton, up to 1985 was given in the answer by the then Secretary of State on 24 March at col. 362. I regret that 1986 data are not yet available.

The foreign port through which trade passes is not available from customs statistics. However, the volume and value of trade through Southampton with the 'front-line states'—Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe—regardless of foreign port, is given below.

United Kingdom Seaborne trade with the front-line states through Southampton 1981-85

Bus Network (Hampshire)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any information about savings effected in Hampshire as a result of the Transport Act and the effect this has had on the bus network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that Hampshire county council does not expect to complete the tendering procedures for subsidised bus services until August. The county council's policy is to seek to maintain services at broadly their present level.

Rail Passengers

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers were carried by British Rail in 1965, 1975 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of passenger journeys made was as follows:

	Number millions
1965	865
1975	730
1985	794

Because more passengers are able to buy through tickets, which are convenient and popular, fewer tickets are now needed for many journeys. A better indicator of passenger usage is passenger kilometres, which have remained constant at about 30 billion a year since the early 1960s.

Air Services (Brussels and the North)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give consideration to encouraging the improvement of direct air services between Brussels and north of England airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 11 July 1986]: The Government remain committed to encouraging the increased use of regional airports. Our liberal air services arrangements with Belgium allow duly authorised airlines of both countries to serve any point in the United Kingdom from any point in Belgium, and vice versa, and to provide whatever level of capacity they consider suitable.

SOCIAL SERVICES

War Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he is satisfied with the present clearance rate of cases at the war pensions office at Norcross;

(2) what is the average time of clearance of individual cases dealt with by the war pensions office at Norcross for the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Claims for war pensions are complex and can involve looking back over a period of 40 years or more. Service and medical records have to be obtained and medical examinations may have to be arranged. Even straightforward claims can thus take several weeks. During 1984, retirements, ill-health and promotions among the medical staff at Norcross caused delays. Although still not entirely satisfactory, the position has gradually improved since then and the average clearance time during the quarter ended 31 March 1986 was 22.6 weeks.

The following table shows the average time for clearance of war pensions claims at Norcross in the last quarter of the past five years.

Quarter ended	Time in weeks
31 December 1981	17·0
31 December 1982	16·5
31 December 1983	16·7
31 December 1984	34·3
31 December 1985	24·7

Age Allowances

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to enable age allowances paid to war widows to be increased and to enable age allowances to be awarded to pensioners whose disablements are assessed at below 40 per cent.

Mr. Major: Age allowances paid to war widows will be increased on 28 July in line with price increases. We have no plans to award age allowances to war disablement pensioners whose disablement is assessed at below 40 per cent.

War Pensioners and Widows

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to relax conditions to enable regular visitations of severely disabled war pensioners and elderly widows to increase.

Mr. Major: Arrangements for regular visiting by the war pensioners' welfare service are at present being reviewed, in consultation with representatives of war pensioners and war widows. The central advisory committee on war pensions will be consulted before any changes are made. Any war pensioner or war widow who needs help may contact the war pensioners' welfare service at any time.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of increasing the £4 disregard applied to war pensioners who claim supplementary pension to the level of £15.

Mr. Major: The available data are not sufficiently accurate to enable a precise figure to be quoted, but the best estimte that can be made is that the cost of increasing the £4 war pensions disregard to £15 would be of the order of £4 million a year. This figure takes acount of the additional claims to supplementary benefit that would result from such a change, but does not allow for the cost of making an equivalent change to the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to increase the rate of pension to war widows and women aged 60 years and under in receipt of unemployability supplement or invalidity benefit; if he will estimate the cost of such a change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The rates will be increased on 28 July in line with price increases. The cost of the increase in war widows pensions is £2 million in a full year. The cost of the increase in invalidity benefit and unemployability supplement for women aged 60 and under is £3·5 million in a full year.

Heart Disease

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by which means, and at what cost, his Department helps with research into heart disease.

Mr. Whitney: The Department gives research grants for projects relating to heart disease which are of particular relevance to service provision in the National Health Service. Support is being provided by the Department during the current financial year 1986-87 to five such projects, details of which are listed. The total amount of that support during the current year is expected to be over £100,000 and the overall cost to the Department of the five projects in question is some £635,000.

The main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in this country is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

We look to the MRC to meet our needs for biomedical research. Priorities have in the recent past included work relating to heart disease and have included, for example, the links between smoking and coronary heart disease, management of mild to moderate hypertension, more recently in the elderly, but also in adults as a whole, and studies of coronary arterial bypass operations.

A. Projects which DHSS is supporting during the current financial year.

1. University of Kent: "Disease prevention and health promotion in primary care: coronary heart disease prevention". Support agreed for 1986-87: £12,500 total agreed support: £302,500.
2. Polytechnic of the South Bank, London: "Simulation planning model in cardiology" support agreed for 1986-87: £3,400. Total agreed support: £36,600.
3. London university "DHSS Hypertension Care Computer Project" (being funded jointly with Scottish Home and Health Department and Health Promotion Research Trust). DHSS support agreed for 1986-87: £27,000. Total agreed DHSS support: £103,000.
4. Nottingham university "Nottingham Heart Attack Register" Support agreed for 1986-87: £43,000. Total agreed support: £124,600.
5. London university "British Regional Heart Study". Support agreed for 1986-87: £16,500. Total agreed support: £68,600.

B. Work which DHSS has supported in the recent past

1. Brunel university and Cambridge university: "Costs and Benefits of the Cardiac Transplantation Programmes at Harefield and Papworth Hospitals". Started October 1981, completed February 1985. Total cost: £185,000.
2. Oxford university: Medical Research Council multi-centre trial of aspirin to prevent major stroke after ischaemic heart attack. (DHSS contribution of £40,500 covering the period January 1983—December 1985).

Rate and Rent Rebates and Allowances (Lambeth)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what payments were made by his Department to Lambeth council for rate rebates, rent allowances and rent rebates in 1985-86; and what are his latest estimates of the amounts to be paid in the year 1986-87.

Mr. Major: Payments on account made by the Department to Lambeth borough council for benefits granted under the housing benefit scheme in 1985-86 and estimated payments to be made in the year 1986-87 are:

£ million

	1985-86	1986-87
Rent rebates	17·5	18
Rent allowances	12	12·5
Rate rebates	18	18

These figures are based on the council's estimated expenditure and are subject to revision following submission of a final claim by the authority.

Lone Parents (Benefits)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing expenditure specifically for lone parents on one parent benefit, supplementary benefit and housing benefit in 1960, 1970, 1980 and at the latest date for which figures are available, at current and at constant prices.

Mr. Major: The available information on benefits paid to lone parents is as follows:

Family Incomes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will update his reply to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 25 July 1985, column 752-3, showing the estimated numbers of working families at different levels of income, using the same income bands as before;

(2) if he will update his reply to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 25 July 1985, column 753-5, showing estimated numbers of out of work but working age families with gross income, including state benefits, in the same income bands as before;

Mr. Major: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the National Health Service domestic service contracts won by the in-house work force in the competitive tendering programme which have exceeded the tender prices;

(2) if he will detail the scrutiny procedures required of regional health authorities to report cases where the National Health Service domestic service contracts won by the in-house work force have exceeded the tender price in the competitive tendering programme.

Mr. Whitney: Our guidance stipulates that if the in-house organisation is awarded the work, the health authority should make sure that its procedures ensure that:

1. The tender price becomes the budget.
2. The budget cost is not exceeded.
3. Regular monthly reports are made to the district health authority on the financial position and the standard of performance.
4. If it becomes clear that the costs cannot be brought back within the budget the district health authority should put the service out to tender again.

Regional health authorities are expected to monitor the performance by districts in their competitive tendering programmes but do not have to report individual cases in which the budget is exceeded to the Department.

Far East Prisoners of War

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken to publicise the facilities available to surviving prisoners of war of the Japanese regarding degenerative and psychological illnesses and parasite infestation arising from the circumstances of their captivity; what investigations have been commissioned by his Department into the incidence of such conditions amongst these people; and if he will make a statement on the levels revealed.

Mr. Major: The Department provides facilities for former far east prisoners of war to be medically investigated so that any residual illness resulting from their imprisonment can be identified and treated. These arrangements have been brought to the attention of hospital medical and administrative staff and general practitioners. Information will also be included in a new leaflet on war pensions to be published shortly. Any individual former FEPOW who is known to the Department through the war pensions scheme is encouraged to undergo an investigation. The National Federation of Far East Prisoners of War Clubs and Associations also publicises the facilities to its members and on occasions through the media. We are considering other means of making the arrangements more widely known.

The Department has commissioned one study of the health of former FEPOWs. The report, entitled "A study of the Post-Captivity Health of Ex-Prisoners of War of the Japanese", was produced in February 1985 and a copy is being placed in the Library. In the absence of a similar study of morbidity in the British male population valid comparisons are not possible. With that proviso, the report concludes that the level of degenerative conditions among ex-FEPOWs did not appear to be significantly different from that in the general population. There appeared to be a higher incidence of psychiatric manifestations. Only one type of parasitic infestation, strongyloidiasis, was identified. This is a worm infestation which can be effectively treated.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision there is within the South Western regional health authority for cervical cancer screening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: All health authorities are required to give priority to improving cervical cancer screening programmes, including the implementation of computerised call and recall systems no later than 1987-88. The South-Western regional health authority has reported that nine of its eleven district health authorities have implemented computerised call and recall systems; the remaining two district health authorities have firm plans to do so during 1987.

My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the South-Western regional health authority who may be able to provide details of local activity.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cervical cancer in the Bristol and Weston district health authority in each year from 1981-1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is given in the table.

Number of deaths with underlying cause of malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9) 180) to women usually resident in Bristol and Weston health area—1981-1985*

Area of usual residence	Year	Number of deaths

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of deaths from cervical cancer in Brighton and Leicester, respectively, in each year from 1979.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is given in the table.

Number of deaths with underlying cause of malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9) 180) to women usually resident in the County Districts of Brighton and Leicester—1979-1985*

	Area of usual residence

1984	7	11
1985	4	14

* International Classification of Diseases 9th revision

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that women in (a) Leicester and (b) Brighton have a call and recall system for cervical cancer available to them through the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: All health authorities have been required to make arrangements with family practitioner committees to implement computerised call and recall systems no later than April 1988. In order to find out how this is progressing in Leicester and Brighton I suggest the hon. Member contacts the chairmen of the Leicestershire and Brighton health authorities respectively.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were receiving supplementary benefit from local offices of his Department in the London borough of Newham in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Major: The London borough of Newham is covered by three of the Department's offices, Canning town, Plaistow and Woodgrange Park, but their boundaries are not conterminous. The total number of people receiving supplementary benefit from these offices on 15 May 1979 and 6 May 1986 was:

	Number
1979	17,234
1986	33,592

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people of working age are receiving supplementary benefit in (a) the west midlands area, (b) the black country area of the west midlands and (c) the borough of Walsall; how many in each case have been in receipt of supplementary benefit for 12 months or more; and what were the comparable figures for May 1979 and the percentage increase in each category.

Mr. Major: The black country area of the west midlands is covered by the Department's offices at Dudley north and south, Smethwick, Walsall, east and west, West Bromwich and Wolverhampton north and south.

The borough of Walsall is covered by the two Walsall offices.

The numbers of people of working age receiving supplementary benefit in (a) the west midlands area, (b) the black country area of the west midlands and (c) the borough of Walsall at 6 May 1986, the latest available date, and in May 1979, and the percentage increases were

West Midlands	126,331	367,410	190·8
Black Country	26,623	94,726	255·8
Walsall	6,381	20,743	225·1

Information about the length of time people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in May 1979 and May 1986 is not available.

* West midlands region was merged with part of East midland and East Anglia region in 1982 to form the present midland region. But for the sake of consistency, the table shows, for 1986, the total figures for those offices which were formerly part of west midland region.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons were in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) supplementary pension in (i) Scotland and (ii) the United Kingdom at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of people receiving (a) supplementary allowance and (b) supplementary pension in Scotland and the United Kingdom on 6 May 1986.

	Scotland	*United Kingdom
Supplementary allowance†	380,625	3,558,836
Supplementary pension	148,209	1,710,624

† All people below pension age who were receiving supplementary benefit on 6 May 1986.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of people claiming supplementary benefit in the Glasgow, Maryhil constituency in 1979 and 1985; what percentage change that represents; and if he will give the percentage change in staff handling supplementary benefit and in total staff at local offices of his Department in the same period.

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of people who claimed supplementary benefit in the Jarrow constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change this represents;

(2) what was the percentage change in staff handling supplementary benefit between 1979 and 1985.

Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Motherwell and Wishaw constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at his Department's local offices for the same period.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Falkirk, West constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department for the same period.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Normanton constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at his Department's local offices for the same period.

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Easington constituency in 1979 and 1985, respectively; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (a) staff employed on supplementary benefit and (b) all staff employed at his Department's local offices, Peterlee and Seaham, for the same period.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many staff were employed at the local Wrexham office of his Department in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; how many of the staff were involved in handling supplementary benefit; and how many of these staff were involved in handling supplementary benefit for the Wrexham constituency area;

(2) how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Wrexham constituency area in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change this represents.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Barnsley, East constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local office of his Department over the same period.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Copeland constituency in (a) June 1979 and (b) June 1985; what percentage change this represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local office of his Department over the same period.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the St. Helens, North constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change this represents;

(2) what was the percentage change in (a) staff handling supplementary benefit and (b) all staff at local offices of his Department in the St. Helens, North constituency between 1979 and 1985.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Glasgow, Garscadden constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change in the number of claimants occurred between 1979 and 1985; and what was the percentage change in the number of staff (i) handling supplementary benefit claims and (ii) the total number of staff at local offices of his Department serving the constituency over the same period.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Caerphilly constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change that represents;

(2) what was the percentage change in (a) staff handling supplementary benefit and (b) all staff at his Department's local offices in the Caerphilly constituency between (i) 1979 and (ii) 1985.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the implications of the current manning levels of the medicines inspectorate for the process of certifying, for foreign regulatory authorities, the quality of British pharmaceutical exports and for his Department's discharge of its obligations under the World Health Organisation certification scheme for pharmaceuticals moving in international commerce.

Mr. Hayhoe: The United Kingdom Licensing Authority recognises that the British pharmaceutical industry relies on the prompt issue of export certificates, in accordance with the World Health Organisation scheme. Current manning levels of the medicines inspectorate have so far caused no delays in the issue of such export certificates.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment has been made by his Department of the impact of community care policies on the demand for occupational therapists.

Mr. Whitney: The greater use of community care has implications for the deployment of occupational therapists. The precise demand depends on the level, nature and organisation of National Health Service and local authority occupational therapy services in a particular locality. We are examining the organisational issues and the relationship between the two services to ensure that trained occupational therapists are used in the most effective manner.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in relation to the number of occupational therapists to be trained each year in the future.

Mr. Whitney: We are making 10 additional bursaries available to students entering training in September this year and with the help of contributions from the North-East, South-East and South-West Thames regional health authorities we hope that a new school at Christ Church college, Canterbury will open in September 1987. Officials are also exploring with interested regions the feasibility of establishing a second new school within the next two to three years.

Meanwhile we are urging health authorities to ensure that practising therapists are deployed as effectively as possible, to persuade qualified staff who for whatever reason, have taken a break in service to return to active practice, and to consider the possibility of establishing appropriate conversion courses for mature and experienced helpers.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to his Department on the latest number of vacancies for occupational therapists in (a) health authorities and (b) local authorities.

Mr. Whitney: Information on numbers of vacancies for occupational therapists is not collected centrally either for health or local authorities. The results of a sample survey of health authorities last year, however, suggested that nationally, about 19 per cent. of funded posts for occupational therapists were unfilled after three months.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1975 (a) the cost of training occupational therapists, (b) the number of training places available in occupational therapy schools and (c) the number of occupational therapists completing their training.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Occupational therapists: England and Wales

AIDS

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether additional funds are to be made available through joint finance to enable local authorities to provide social work services to sufferers from acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The allocation of joint finance funds is a matter for local decision by joint consultative committees which comprise representatives of health authorities, local authorities, voluntary bodies and family practitioner committees. Proposals for joint finance funding are decided according to local priorities and it is open to JCCs to consider the special needs of sufferers from acquired immune deficiency syndrome in making their decisions.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether any Government funds are currently available for research projects to study the possible transmission of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus by insects;

(2) whether he is aware of any current or proposed research projects to study the possible transmission of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus by insects.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that exploratory work is being undertaken at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine to see whether mosquito cells will support the replication of the AIDS virus but my Department is not supporting any research projects in this field nor, I understand, is the Medical Research Council, which receives grant-in-aid from the Science Vote of the Department of Education and Science and is responsible for co-ordinating research on AIDS in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice has been given to local authorities about the provision of social work services to acquired immune deficiency syndrome sufferers.

Mr. Hayhoe: Information about the acquired immune deficiency syndrome and advice on the infection control measures to be adopted by staff providing services to people with the AIDS-related infection will be issued to local authorities in the near future.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year from 1975 to 1995 the estimated growth in National Health Service resources demanded by demographic change in (a) inner London, (b) Greater London, (c) each of the four Thames health regions and (d) the four Thames regions together.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information sought by the hon. Member is either not available centrally or could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in relation to the scope for privatisation of the ambulance services; and if his Department has any proposals to this end.

Mr. Whitney The Department has no plans for the privatisation of the ambulance service.

Pneumoconiosis Panels

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost of the pneumoconiosis panels in each year since 1975; and what has been the average cost per hearing in each year since 1975.

Mr. Newton The following table shows the total cost of the medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases), formerly known as pneumoconiosis medical panels, since the 1978-79 financial year, which is the earliest year from which figures are available.

Year	Cost £ million
1978-79	0·602
1979-80	0·815
1980-81	1·584
1981-82	1·853

*provisional figures

In addition to their medical boarding function, medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases) have a number of responsibilities under the industrial injuries scheme. Information about the costs of boarding alone could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the total number of people who may be eligible for compensation from the pneumoconiosis panels.

Mr. Newton Medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases), formerly known as pneumoconiosis medical panels, handle claims for industrial chest diseases arising in a wide range of occupations. Information about the total number of people who may be eligible for benefit is not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1975 the number of applicants to the pneumoconiosis panels, the number of awards, the number of appeals and the number of successful appeals; and if he will state the award in the case of each successful appeal.

Mr. Newton: (a) The following table shows the number of cases referred to medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases), formerly the pneumoconiosis medical panels, and the number of awards made for each year from 1975 to 1984. The figures are the latest available.

Year	Cases referred	Awards
1975	19,040	1,209
1976	14,532	1,248
1977	13,408	1,018
1978	11,837	898
1979	10,822	978
1980	10,305	997
1981	10,212	974
1982	10,112	1,121
1983	10,427	1,107
1984	6,565	994

(b) A right of appeal against a diagnosis decision for industrial chest diseases was not introduced until January 1977. The following table shows the number of appeals made since these rights were introduced and the number of successful appeals. The figures are the latest available.

(c) Information about individual awards by Medical Appeal Tribunals is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the pneumoconiosis panels were set up; on whose recommendations and on what grounds; to whom they are responsible; if he will list their present membership; and who determines their membership and on what grounds.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the estimated National Health Service expenditure per head for the latest year for which figures are available on (a) those aged under one year, (b) those aged under four years, (c) those aged 65 to 74 years, (d) those aged 75 years and over, (e) those aged 65 years and over and (f) the whole population.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that separate estimates of health service expenditure on children aged under one year are not available. Estimates of gross current expenditure per head of population on the hospital and community health services and the family practitioner services for 1983-84, the latest year for which these estimates are available, are given in the table for the other broad age groups.

Estimated gross current expenditure per head (England) 1983-84

Age group	Hospital and community health services £	Family practitioner services £
0 to 4 years	160	60
65 to 74 years	370	85
75 years and over	875	135
65 years and over	580	105
All age groups	185	65

Hospital Building Schemes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the completed hospital building schemes listed in the answer of 30 June, Official Report, columns 418-20 are not at present in full use or have not been in full use for any period since their completion; and if he will give details of all periods of less than full use.

Mr. Whitney: Two beds in the intensive therapy unit at Glenfield hospital, Leicester have not yet been brought into service because they are not needed until phase 2 of the new hospital is built. Otherwise, all completed schemes in the earlier list are in full use apart from those in which the initial commissioning work has not yet finished. Information about earlier periods is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Registered Homes Tribunals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services from what source hearings of the registered homes tribunals are funded.

Mr. Whitney: The expenses of these tribunals are met from the Department of Health and Social Security's class XII vote 4—Administration and Miscellaneous Services.

Adolescents (Drinking Habits)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report on the drinking habits of adolescents.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has commissioned the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to undertake this study and I expect the report to be published by the end of the year.

National Voluntary Agency on Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grant aid is paid to the National Voluntary Agency on Alcohol Misuse by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I am pleased to say that I have recently agreed that a grant of £500,000 per annum will be paid to Alcohol Concern, the National voluntary agency on Alcohol Misuse, for the three years commencing with the 1986-87 financial year. This includes £160,000 a year to set up new local councils on alcohol.

Psychosurgical Operations

Mr. Procter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in what way the consent of a person aged under 15 years of age is obtained when a psychosurgical operation takes place under section 57 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many psychosurgical operations have taken place under the provisions of section 57 of the Mental Health Act 1983; in how many cases where the patient's consent has been obtained a second opinion consent has been withheld; how many of these patients were under 15 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Ten psychosurgical operations took place under section 57 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in 1984 and 21 in 1985. Figures are not available centrally for the period from the date of commencement of the Act—30 September 1983—to 31 December 1983, or for 1986. Second opinion consent was withheld in a further seven cases, and no operations have been carried out on children under 15 years of age. Section 57 of the Mental Health Act 1983 requires that such operations can be performed only with the informed consent of the patient and the agreement of a second opinion doctor appointed for the purpose. Before agreeing to an operation, the second opinion doctor has to be satisfied that the patient's consent is valid and has to consult two other persons professionally concerned with the patient's medical treatment. The appointment of medical practitioners for the purposes of the consent to treatment provisions of the Act is carried out on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the Mental Health Act Commission, which monitors the operation of those provisions. I refer my hon. Friend to para 11.7 of the Commission's first biennial report [House of Commons Paper 586, published 22 October 1985], a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many psychosurgical operations took place in each of the last 10 years; how many took place on children under 15 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The number of such operations performed in National Health Service hospitals in England between 1979 and 1985 is given in the table. Information for earlier years is not available centrally. Information on the ages of people undergoing such operations is not available for the years 1979 and 1980, but none of the operations performed from 1981 to 1985 were on children under 15 years of age.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to make commencement orders to bring into force the various provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; if he proposes to issue a circular to local authorities regarding his intentions in this respect; if he will issue a document summarising for the benefit of the public the provisions of the Act, with particular reference to the new rights for the disabled created by this Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret that I cannot at present add to what I said about the timing of implementation of the various provisions during the course of the House's consideration of amendments from another place on 4 July 1986. As I then indicated we hope, subject to consulting with local authority associations, to bring certain provisions into efffect by April 1987. Those discussions will also cover the question of what guidance might be appropriate and we will at the same time consider what steps might be appropriate to publicise the relevant provisions as they come into effect.

Single Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by area offices the numbers claiming single payments on 2 July in Scotland.

Mr. Major: On 2 July a special count was made of the number of people whose single payment claims were being processed in local offices in Scotland. The information then obtained is set out in the following table:

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to make any changes in the supplementary benefit single payments regulations with effect from 28 July.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Low Income Families

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now publish the 1983 low income families table.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington on 8 July at column 157.

Basildon Local Office

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the windows in his Department's office in Basildon were last cleaned; why they are not cleaned more regularly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The windows of Basildon integrated local office are cleaned internally monthly. A solution to the long-standing problem of external cleaning is under consideration by the Department.

Labour Statistics (Liverpool)

Mr. Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why, in answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 15 May, Official Report, column 527, the total number of unemployed claimants in the city of Liverpool in November 1985 was given as 32,100 when figures published by the Department of Employment for the same date gave a total of 56,421.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Office Staffs

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff were employed in local offices of his Department in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: Ministers in my Department replied to some 35,000 letters in 1985, an increase of about 50 per cent. on the previous year. In many cases, these letters require inquiries to be made with health authorities of local social security offices which can often cause delays.

The figures requested are 885, 365, 250 and 126 respectively.

In some cases direct approaches to DHSS local offices, or the chairman of the local district health authority would be the quickest way of proceeding.

Benefits

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of increasing the single person's rate of each of the following benefits by £7·35: (i) invalid care allowance, (ii) invalidity pension, (iii) severe disablement allowance, (iv) statutory sick pay and (v) unemployment benefit.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Allowances

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of increasing (a) severe disablement allowance and (b) invalid care allowance to the same level as the invalidity pension for (i) the single person's rate and (ii) the adult and child dependant's rates.

Mr. Newton: At the benefit rates which take effect from 28 July the additional cost in a full year would be as follows:

	£ million
Severe disablement allowance
(i) Single person's rate	200
(ii) Adult and child dependant's rate	2
Invalid care allowance
(i) Single person's rate	65
(ii) Adult and child dependant's rate	about 0·5

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of paying the severe disablement allowance to all those who would qualify under the rules that applied to the non-contributory invalidity pension but including married and cohabiting women; and what would be this cost if the severe disablement allowance were increased by £7·35 for the single person's rate.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of extending the payment of unemployment benefit for a further (i) one year, (ii) two years, (iii) three years and (iv) as long as unemployment lasted; and what would be the cost if the single person's rate of unemployment benefit were increased by £7·35.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 16 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. Irene Smith of 14 Parkfield Avenue, Davyhulme, Manchester.

Mr. Fowler: I have replied to the right hon. Member.

School Meals

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of (a) families and (b) children who will be affected by the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school meals under section 70 of the Social Security Bill;

(2) if he will estimate the savings which will accrue to both central Government and local government in manpower and cash, respectively, as a result of the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school meals under section 70 of the Social Security Bill;

(3) how many (a) families and (b) children he estimates will be affected by the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school lunches contained in clause 70 of the Social Security Bill in (i) Wales and (ii) mid-Glamorgan.

(4) if he will estimate the savings in manpower and cash which will accrue from the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school lunches contained in clause 70 of the Social Security Bill for (a) central Government and (b) local government in Wales.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to how many non-British European Economic Community citizens claimed board and lodging allowances during the months of June on the pruported grounds that they were looking for employment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to prevent non-British EEC citizens from coming to the United Kingdom for the purpose of claiming board and lodging benefits; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what records are kept by his Department of the numbers, country of origin and sums paid to non-British EEC citizens in board and lodging allowances on the basis of claims purported to be related to the search for jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply of 2 May, Official Report, columns 517-8, he will provide such information as is available on local authority and health authority services for those aged over 65 years in such form as is available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 435]: A list of documents held in the Library, from which relevant information for England can be drawn, is as follows. Figures for Scotland and Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.

Departmental Experts

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many independent experts have resigned from committees of his Department since March; and what reasons each has given for resignation.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986, c. 155]: The number of independent experts who have resigned from committees sponsored by the Department during the period 1 March 1986—10 July 1986 is 19. The reasons for resignation and the numbers involved are as follows:

Reasons given for resignation	Number involved
Personal and health	7
More time needed for other commitments	5
Gone to live abroad	2
Ceased to satisfy the conditions of appointment	2
Conflict of interest	1
No reason given	2

Aspirin (Children)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines at any time suggested to him or his officials that the age below which aspirin should not be given because of the risk of Reye's syndrome should be 16 years.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: The Committee on Safety of Medicines carefully considered various age limits, including one of 16 years, before deciding on 29 May 1986 in the light of the provisional findings of the risk factor study of the British Reye's Syndrome Surveillance Scheme to recommend that aspirin should not be given to children under 12 except on medical advice.

Drugs (Safety)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify the drugs whose safety has been discussed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in the last year according to whether the number of prescriptions issued annually for the drug was (a) over 5 million, (b) over 2 million, (c) over 1 million, (d) over half a million and (e) under half a million.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: Between July 1985 and June 1986 the Committee on Safety of Medicines gave advice to the licensing authority on safety, quality and efficacy in relation to 110 applications for product licences and clinical trial certificates; none of these products had previously been generally available. During this period the Committee also kept under review the safety of all medicinal products which were being marketed or undergoing clinical trials. In particular it examined and discussed the safety of 14 specific drug substances, classified by the number of prescriptions dispensed during 1984 (the latest year for which information is available), as follows:

(a) none
(b) one
(c) one
(d) one
(e) seven

Figures for the remaining four substances are not available.

Prescribing figures are for NHS prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacists in Great Britain. The figures are derived from estimates made from samples of 1 in 200 prescriptions for England and Wales, and 1 in 100 prescriptions in Scotland.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in the last five years, how many drugs have been discussed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; in how many cases (a) the drug was voluntarily withdrawn by the manufacturer, (b) withdrawn by order of the committee, (c) had the usage changed on the advice or instructions of the committee and (d) no regulatory action taken at the time or subsequently.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: In the calendar years 1981 to 1985 the Committee on Safety of Medicines gave advice to the Licensing Authority on safety, quality and efficacy in respect of 809 applications for product licences and clinical trial certificates. The Committee also discussed the safety of some 80 drugs or groups of drugs (that is, drugs having the same active substance or in the same therapeutic class) which were already being marketed or were undergoing clinical trials. Following consideration by the Committee of these 80 drugs or groups of drugs, licences or certificates were revoked in eight cases by the licensing authority acting on the advice of the Committee; licences or certificates were voluntarily surrendered by the licence holders in 13 cases for reasons which did not necessarily relate to safety; and there were 27 cases for which licences or certificates were varied. No formal licensing action was advised or taken on the remaining 32 drugs or groups of drugs but the Committee drew the attention of the medical profession to particular aspects in about half these cases through its regular bulletin, "Current Problems", or in published articles.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many drugs, whose safety is currently being assessed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, have over one million prescriptions issued for them annually; and which are these drugs.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: The Committee on Safety of Medicines continuously monitors the safety of all drugs, and is at present actively assessing the safety of seven drugs which had over one million prescriptions in 1984, the latest year for which figures are available. The seven drugs fall into two categories; non-steroidal anti-flammatories, and anti-hypertensive agents. For reasons of confidentiality and taking account of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 it would not be appropriate for me to give further details. The CSM has already given general advice to doctors on disablement allowance and (b) invalid care allowance to the same level as the invalidity pension for (i) the single person's rate and (ii) the adult and child dependant's rates.

Mr. Newton: At the benefit rates which take effect from 28 July the additional cost in a full year would be as follows:

	£ million
Severe disablement allowance
(i) Single person's rate	200
(ii) Adult and child dependant's rate	2
Invalid care allowance
(i) Single person's rate	65
(ii) Adult and child dependant's rate	about 0·5

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of paying the severe disablement allowance to all those who would qualify under the rules that applied to the non-contributory invalidity pension but including married and cohabiting women; and what would be this cost if the severe disablement allowance were increased by £7·35 for the single person's rate.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of extending the payment of unemployment benefit for a further (i) one year, (ii) two years, (iii) three years and (iv) as long as unemployment lasted; and what would be the cost if the single person's rate of unemployment benefit were increased by £7·35.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 16 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. Irene Smith of 14 Parkfield Avenue, Davyhulme, Manchester.

Mr. Fowler: I have replied to the right hon. Member.

School Meals

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of (a) families and (b) children who will be affected by the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school meals under section 70 of the Social Security Bill;

(2) if he will estimate the savings which will accrue to both central Government and local government in manpower and cash, respectively, as a result of the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school meals under section 70 of the Social Security Bill;

(3) how many (a) families and (b) children he estimates will be affected by the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school lunches contained in clause 70 of the Social Security Bill in (i) Wales and (ii) mid-Glamorgan.

(4) if he will estimate the savings in manpower and cash which will accrue from the Government's proposed changes in eligibility for school lunches contained in clause 70 of the Social Security Bill for (a) central Government and (b) local government in Wales.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Figures for the remaining four substances are not available.

Prescribing figures are for NHS prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacists in Great Britain. The figures are derived from estimates made from samples of 1 in 200 prescriptions for England and Wales, and 1 in 100 prescriptions in Scotland.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in the last five years, how many drugs have been discussed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; in how many cases (a) the drug was voluntarily withdrawn by the manufacturer, (b) withdrawn by order of the committee, (c) had the usage changed on the advice or instructions of the committee and (d) no regulatory action taken at the time or subsequently.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: In the calendar years 1981 to 1985 the Committee on Safety of Medicines gave advice to the Licensing Authority on safety, quality and efficacy in respect of 809 applications for product licences and clinical trial certificates. The Committee also discussed the safety of some 80 drugs or groups of drugs (that is, drugs having the same active substance or in the same therapeutic class) which were already being marketed or were undergoing clinical trials. Following consideration by the Committee of these 80 drugs or groups of drugs, licences or certificates were revoked in eight cases by the licensing authority acting on the advice of the Committee; licences or certificates were voluntarily surrendered by the licence holders in 13 cases for reasons which did not necessarily relate to safety; and there were 27 cases for which licences or certificates were varied. No formal licensing action was advised or taken on the remaining 32 drugs or groups of drugs but the Committee drew the attention of the medical profession to particular aspects in about half these cases through its regular bulletin, "Current Problems", or in published articles.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many drugs, whose safety is currently being assessed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, have over one million prescriptions issued for them annually; and which are these drugs.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: The Committee on Safety of Medicines continuously monitors the safety of all drugs, and is at present actively assessing the safety of seven drugs which had over one million prescriptions in 1984, the latest year for which figures are available. The seven drugs fall into two categories; non-steroidal anti-flammatories, and anti-hypertensive agents. For reasons of confidentiality and taking account of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 it would not be appropriate for me to give further details. The CSM has already given general advice to doctors on some possible effects of non-steroidal anti-flammatory drugs in its bulletin "Current Problems" and in published articles "CSM Updates" in the British Medical Journal. The CSM will decide whether to recommend any further action when it has completed its examination of all the scientific evidence. Prescribing figures are for NHS prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacists in Great Britain. The figures are derived from estimates made from samples of 1 in 200 prescriptions for England and Wales, and 1 in 100 prescriptions in Scotland.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the five drugs for which the monthly number of yellow card adverse reaction cards has increased most in the last six months; if he will give the latest figures for the monthly number of reports and the percentage increase.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: I regret that this information cannot be provided without disproportionate expense. Cumulative numbers and the nature and the severity of adverse reaction reports, considered in relation to changes in drug usage and the indications for the drug, have more meaning in assessing the safety of medicines than merely the number of yellow cards received for a medicine in a particular month, or differences between monthly figures.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures are adopted to ensure the integrity and independence of the Committee on Safety of Medicines when the safety of a drug is being discussed and members of the committee have themselves or through their departments received money from the company manufacturing the drug.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: Members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are required to inform the head of medicines division of my Department of any relevant financial interest, including any consultancies in the pharmaceutical industry. Members are also required to declare at meetings any interests which they may have, whether direct or indirect, in a product under consideration, or in the company concerned. Where they have a direct interest they understand that they must take no part in the discussion except where the chairman considers such a contribution would be justified. Such declarations are entered in the minutes of the meeting.

I have no reason to believe that members of the Committee—for whose work I am most grateful—have not maintained the highest level of integrity, objectivity and professional expertise.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Committee on Safety of Medicines scrutinises the safety of a drug, which individuals, organisations and institutions are (a) informed and (b) requested to give their views or provide evidence; and, in particular, what information is given to the manufacturing company and what information is sought from it.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: Before advising the licensing authority on an application for a product licence or clinical trail certificate, the Committee on Safety of Medicines considers the safety, quality and efficacy of the medicinal product in the light of all the scientific evidence, including the full documentation that the applicant is required to provide. When the Committee considers the safety of products which are already marketed or undergoing clinical trials it will take account of any company reports of adverse reactions, which the licence holder is required to make. The licence holder may also be asked for further evidence, information or analysis. In addition, in particular circumstances the European Community's Committee on Proprietary Medicinal Products, other drug regulatory agencies, professional organisations and other bodies and individuals may be informed in confidence that the Committee is considering a product and asked for evidence or opinion.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request his officials to discuss with their counterparts in the United States Food and Drug Administration the advantages and disadvantages of their activities being governed by the Freedom of Information Act; if he will request them to prepare a report on their conclusions; and if he will place the report in the Library.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: From occasional informal discussions with their counterparts in the United States Food and Drug Administration, officials from medicines division in my Department maintain a broad awareness of many of the advantages and disadvantages of the United States regulatory scheme including the effects of the United States Freedom of Information Act but I do not consider a report to be necessary at this time.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate legislation to exempt the committee proceedings of the Committee on Safety of Medicines from the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: No; nor have I any plans to alter the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968, section 118, which makes it an offence for any person to disclose to any other person any information obtained by or furnished to him in pursuance of the Act, unless the disclosure was made in the performance of his duty.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions his Department has discussed with the Committee on Safety of Medicines the question of secrecy about the proceedings of the committee; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986]: None. Members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are aware from the time of their appointment of the requirement of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968, and that they should respect the confidentiality of committee papers and proceedings.

DEFENCE

Expenditure Comparisons

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the percentage of gross national product spent on defence by Russia and Warsaw pact countries, in comparable terms to that spent by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and other Western countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: No reliable defence expenditure figures are published by Warsaw Pact countries. As stated in annex A to volume I of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984" (Cmnd. 9227) in the essay "Soviet Defence Expenditure" our studies then concluded that Soviet defence spending was some five times higher than the published figure and constituted 14 to 16 per cent. of GNP. In our subsequent comments on Soviet defence expenditure in paragraphs 12-13 of annex A to volume I of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763) our conclusion is that in current prices outlays are now well over six times the official defence budget and that the higher growth rate of the Soviet defence budget which has taken place since 1983 is likely to be sustained at least to the end of the decade.

Helicopters (Search and Rescue)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state, by type and service, the number of military helicopters dedicated to search and rescue and where these are located; what information he has as to the number and type of civilian helicopters used for search and rescue; if he has plans to increase the use of the latter at the expense of the former; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Service helicopters are maintained at 12 locations in the United Kingdom to meet military requirements for search and rescue, and are made available for civil SAR tasks. RAF helicopters are deployed in pairs at nine stations and provide 24-hour cover:

Sea King Mk 3
RAF Lossiemouth
RAF Boulmer
RAF Coltishall
RAF Brawdy

Wessex Mk 2
RAF Leuchars
RAF Leconfield
RAF Manston
RAF Chivenor
RAF Valley

RN helicopters, drawn from operational pools of aircraft, provide SAR cover at three stations:

Sea King Mk 5 (24 hour cover)
RNAS Culdrose
RNAS Prestwick

Wessex Mk 5 (daytime cover)
RNAS Culdrose
RNAS Lee-on-Solent

On behalf of the Department of Transport, Her Majesty's Coastguard administers a civil Sikorsky S61N helicopter, which is contracted to provide a full SAR capability at Sumburgh airport. Any plans for changes to the provision of civil helicopters are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state for the last 12 months for which figures are available (i) the cost of and (ii) the number of missions flown by military and rescue helicopters.

Mr. Freeman: In the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986 military helicopters were called out by rescue co-ordination centres for search-and-rescue missions on 1,245 occasions. The vast majority of these flights were made by helicopters dedicated to SAR. The full costs of the military SAR helicopters were approximately £53 million in the financial year 1985-86.

Arrests (RAF Caerwent)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons were arrested by Ministry of Defence police at RAF Caerwent on 5 July.

Mr. Lee: Eight.

Mr. D.E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the driver of the United States Air Force vehicles used to carry civilians to the police station at Caerwent on 5 July held a British driving licence.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the question refers to the police station in Cromer, Norfolk. There is no record of United States Air Force vehicles visiting the station on 5 July.

F19 Fighters

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether American F19 stealth fighters have operated from (a) RAF Mildenhall or (b) any other RAF base.

Mr. Stanley: The United States authorities have made no request to my Department to operate an aircraft of the designation referred to by the hon. Member from RAF Mildenhall or any other RAF base.

Artillery Shells

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence when a decision will be made on the introduction of new 8 in nuclear artillery shells to the British Army on the Rhine.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 20 January, at columns 90-91, and to the latest communiqué of the NATO nuclear planning group dated 21 March 1986, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the military records he is examining in order to establish the fate of British prisoners of war interrogated by German Army Group E and the involvement of Kurt Waldheim therein.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be appropriate to make any statement until the research has been completed.

ROF Leeds

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions are taking place between his Department, Royal Ordnance plc and Vickers plc for the purchase of ROF Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on Friday 11 July.

NATO (Nuclear Planning Group)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the date of the next meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's nuclear planning group;

(2) in which constituency the next meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's nuclear planning group in the United Kingdom will be held.

Mr. Brooke: The European Economic Community financial mechanism is working as agreed at Fontainebleau. Over the period January to July the United Kingdom benefited from VAT abatements at the rate of 117 mecu (£75 million) a month (based on a total abatement provision for 1986 of 1,400 mecus (£900 million)). The European Court ruled, in its judgment annulling the Parliament's adoption of the 1986 budget, that all budgetary acts before the date of the judgment should remain valid. The Budget Council of 7-8 July established a new draft 1986 budget containing a total abatement provision of 1,900 mecu (£1,220 million) (that is incorporating the 500 mecu additional provision originally included in the Commission's proposed supplementary budget).

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding ways of promoting lead-free fuel through the tax system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have received a number of representations welcoming the Budget statement that we intend to create a duty differential in favour of unleaded petrol. Officials are now discussing with the oil companies how this can best be achieved in time for next year's Budget.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government's consultative document on profit-related pay will be made available to right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Lawson: A Green Paper entitled "Profit Related Pay: a Consultative Document" will be presented to Parliament tomorrow in the joint names of myself, the Secretary of State for Employment and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Trustee Savings Banks

Mr. Cockeram asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when, in the light of the House of Lords judgment, he expects to name a vesting day for the Trustee Savings banks.

Mr. Lawson: Section 1(4) of the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 provides that the Treasury is to appoint the vesting day for the re-organisation of the TSB Group under that Act after consulting the TSB Central Board. The Treasury have now consulted central board and considered the letter dated 10 July from the chairman, Sir John Read. This exchange of letters between my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury and Sir John Read is as follows. The Treasury has today by order appointed 21 July as the vesting day for the purposes of the 1985 Act.

Sir John Read
Chairman
TSB Central Board
25 Milk Street
LONDON EC2V 8LU — 9 July 1986

Dear John,

The House of Lords unanimously dismissed on 3 July the appeals brought by Mr. Ross and Dr. Vincent, and upheld the cross-appeal by the Central Board and TSB England and Wales. The judgments confirm that TSB depositors are entitled solely to the repayment of their deposits with interest (where applicable) according to the terms of their accounts but that they have no rights in the assets of the banks, which was reflected in the White Paper which preceded the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985.

Section 1(4) of the TSB Act 1985 provides that the Treasury is to appoint the vesting day for the re-organisation of the TSB Group under that Act after consulting the Central Board.

Now that the legal position has been clarified and in the light of the discussions which the Treasury and the Central Board have had about the implementation of the 1985 Act, the Treasury is considering whether it may now be appropriate to appoint a vesting day in the near future. I should therefore like formally to invite the Central board to let me have its views on this, as the 1985 Act requires, and to report on where matters stand regarding the Board's related undertakings and announced intentions.

Yours ever

Ian Stewart

10th July, 1986

I. Stewart, Esq.,
Economic Secretary,
H.M. Treasury,
Parliament Street,
London, SW1P 3AG.

Dear Ian,

Thank you for your letter of 9th July. The TSB Central Board, which as you know includes the chairmen of the TSBs, welcomes the House of Lords judgments. They clear the way for the re-organisation and flotation of the TSB Group, which will facilitate:—

the development of better services for all our customers;

the further growth of the Group as a major competitive force in the financial services sector; and the establishment of a share ownership of over 1 million customers, staff and members of the public.

2. The TSB Act 1985 provides the key to these developments through the vesting of the Group's businesses in successor companies as the precursor of public flotation. From the vesting day the TSB Group's banking operations will be conducted on the same statutory footing as those of other banks.

3. Arrangements have been made to obtain with effect from 21st July 1986 the banking and other authorisations which TSB Scotland plc, TSB Northern Ireland plc and TSB Channel Islands Ltd will require, and to continue the Banking Act recognition of Central Trustee Savings Bank Ltd which will on vesting day become TSB England & Wales plc.

4. Under the 1985 Act the vesting day is to be appointed by the Treasury after consulting the TSB Central Board. You have now asked formally for the Board's views. The Board's wish is that the Treasury should appoint 21st July 1986 as the vesting day. On that day the whole of the assets and liabilities of each of the four banks will be transferred to its successor banking company.

5. In your letter you ask where matters stand regarding the Board's undertakings and intentions related to the reorganisation and flotation, which are stated in my letters of 6th December 1984 (reproduced in the White Paper) and 16th May 1985 (reproduced in Hansard, 4th July 1985, cols 261-2WA).

6. In line with the Board's undertakings, I am pleased to confirm that the four TSB charitable foundations have been established and before vesting day TSB Group plc will execute deeds of covenant in their favour to the aggregate annual value of 1 per cent. of the Group's profits, to become operative from the offer for sale of the Group's shares. The special shares in the banking companies in the UK conferring on the relevant foundation the right to appoint two of the respective bank's directors will be issued before the vesting day. At the time of flotation and in line with our undertakings, the foundations will receive free of consideration limited voting shares in TSB Group plc representing 5 per cent. of its issued share capital, divided in proportion to the accumulated reserves of each of the four banks and convertible into ordinary shares in the event that the covenants expire or are renewed on terms less favourable to the foundations. The individual foundations will continue the TSBs' traditional role in contributing to the life of the community by assisting local needs of many different kinds.

7. We remain firmly set on achieving, with the help of our financial advisers, our target of over one million shareholders. A substantial proportion of the shares remaining after the allocation of 5 per cent. to the four foundations will be reserved for staff and for those customers who had an account with one of the TSBs on 17th December 1984 and who have maintained such account until the time of the offer for sale. As regards the balance of shares we shall seek to attract as many small investors as possible.

8. The Group intends to maintain its strong traditions in personal banking while developing as a financial services group to the benefit of all our customers. The rights of TSB staff and pensioners will be preserved.

9. The head office of each of the four banks will remain in the country in which it is registered. Each bank will continue to function as an independently managed bank within the Group. The Group's own registered office and annual general meetings will be in Scotland.

10. In addition to the undertakings which the Board gave, I expressed in my letters of 6th December 1984 and 16th May 1985 the Board's intentions on a range of detailed matters, which are mainly points for the memoranda and articles of association of the various Group companies and the TSB foundations. These have been finalised and I am making available copies of all the proposed memoranda and articles, and the agreements between TSB Group plc and the banking companies on dividend policy and the maintenance of net worth, to be deposited in the Libraries of the Houses of Parliament.

11. Pending flotation, TSB Group plc and the banking companies will be controlled by the Central Board, and you have the Board's assurance that no changes will be made which depart from the undertakings stated in my letters of 6th December 1984 and 16th May 1985.

Yours sincerely,

John Read.

Productivity

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the table showing annual increases in productivity in the United States of America and the United Kingdom as given in the written reply, dated 29 November 1979, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, columns 779-80, and if he will include figures for the latest period of 12 months in each case.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested can be obtained from the source quoted in the reply referred to in the hon. Member's question.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on annual increases in gross domestic product given in the reply to the written question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 16 November 1979, Official Report, columns 810-12; and if he will include an additional column showing the United Kingdom figure, excluding oil and natural gas.

Mr. MacGregor: Up-to-date information on annual increases in gross domestic product can be found in the source publications quoted in the reply to the hon. Member's earlier question. The United Kingdom national accounts also include tables showing gross domestic product by type of industry.

Intermediate Goods (Output)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the output of intermediate goods, less oil, and so on, given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 14 July 1980, Official Report, column 413.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Money Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the increase in the real money supply in certain countries given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby dated 5 March 1985, Official Report, columns 450-52; and if he will include comparable figures for 1964 to 1973.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the table published in the Official Report dated 31 July 1981, Official Report, columns 683-84, in reply to a written question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby concerning manufacturing investment per head in the United Kindom, the United States of America, Japan, France and Germany.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The table can be updated by reference to the latest ediction of OECD's "National Accounts".

Drugs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of (a) cannabis, (b) heroin, (c) cocaine and (d) LSD, seized by customs officials for each of the past five years.

Mr. Brooke: The total amount of cannabis, heroin, cocaine and LSD seized by Customs officers for each of the past five years is shown in the table:

		1981	1982	1983	1984	1985*
Cannabis:	kgs	24,188	16,425	19,335	26,256	20,403
Heroin:	kgs	88	183	213	313	340

		1981	1982	1983	1984	*1985
Cocaine:	kgs	13	12	73	35	79
LSD:	doses	1,013	17,540	5,226	25,943	16,678
	tablets	—	—	2,071	5,852	18,702

* provisional figures.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs officers have been employed by the Government for each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers were in post (a) nationally and (b) in the port of Liverpool each year since 1979; how many Customs and Excise officers were in post (i) nationally and (ii) in the port of Liverpool employed solely on the detection of drugs importation; if he has plans to increase numbers of officers employed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 317]: The number of Customs and Excise officers in post nationally at 1 April for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Number
1979	28,870
1980	27,273
1981	26,861
1982	26,256
1983	25,702
1984	25,309
1985	25,557
1986	25,395

The number of Customs and Excise officers in post in the Liverpool collection, which includes the port of Liverpool, at 1 April for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Number
*1979	957
*1980	868
*1981	790
*1982	772
1983	1,182
1984	1,117
1985	1,104
1986	1,148

* The figures for years before 1983 are not strictly comparable with those for later years because of changes in the boundaries of the Liverpool collection.

The number of Customs and Excise preventive officers, whose main priority is drugs detection, in post nationally at 1 April for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Number
1979	3,445
1980	3,214
1981	3,027
1982	2,890
1983	2,795
1984	2,721
1985	2,823
*1986	3,000

* Estimated.

In addition, the number of specialist drugs investigators is as follows:

	Number
1 October 1979	121
1 October 1980	133
1 October 1981	152
1 October 1982	183
1 October 1983	201
1 October 1984	212
1 April 1985	212
1 April 1986	262

For operational reasons it is not policy to disclose the numbers of officers employed on drugs detection in specific locations.

Customs staffing needs are kept under constant review and in the current year 350 additional Customs posts, mainly on the prevention of drugs smuggling, are being provided.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Sheerman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in lost revenue of raising value added tax exemption limits to (a) £25,000, (b) £30,000, (c) £35,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £50,000, (f) £55,000 and (g) £60,000.

Mr. Brooke: Any estimate of the cost depends crucially on the number of traders that would deregister if the VAT registration limit were raised. This cannot be predicted with any certainty and, in the circumstances, the best estimates of the revenue that would be lost if the limit were raised to £30,000 or £50,000 (the only levels for which data are available) are between £25 million and £75 million and between £100 million and £200 million per year respectively.

Income Tax

Mr. Clay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of each £100 increase in the basic personal allowance if the wife's earned income relief and the married man's allowance were both replaced by a single non-transferable tax allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies

Mr. Dewar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies expects to reply to the representations from the Scottish Trustee Savings Bank Depositor's Association contained in its letter dated 15 April.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the approximate sum, without adjustment, which would need to be paid by Her Majesty's Government in respect of own resources value added tax assessments levied at a rate of 1·4 per cent. of the base, together with the approximate percentage that sum constitutes of the likely income from value added tax in the United Kingdom during 1986.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1986, c. 95]: The Fontainebleu abatement system automatically ensures that our own VAT rate will be very much less than 1·4 per cent. even if the VAT rate in other member states is at that level. As a matter of arithmetic, however, and on the basis of the 1 per cent. VAT base agreed for 1986, a rate of 1·4 per cent. would imply a gross VAT contribution for the United Kingdom of 4,635 mecu (some £2,972 million at current exchange rates). £2,972 million represents about 14·4 per cent. of the estimated VAT yield in 1986-87.

Gay's the Word

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise action which led to the prosecution of the Gay's the Word bookshop.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 80]: Information about costs is not kept in sufficient detail for Customs and Excise to be able to identify the costs attributable to the "Gay's the Word" action. To obtain them would require all the staff involved to estimate retrospectively the time spent on the case—in most cases intermittently over a period of more than two years. It would be subject to a considerable margin of error and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Monetary Aggregates

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes which have occurred since June 1979 in the definitions of the following monetary aggregates: (a) MO, (b) M1, (c) M2, (d) M3, (e) PSL1, (f) PSL2 and (g) Sterling M3.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 80]: The following changes in definition have been made to monetary aggregates:

1. The series which became MO related initially to levels of notes and coin in circulation with the public, banks' till money and banks' operational balances with the Bank of England at the end of each banking month and to changes between those dates; in 1984 it was redefined as, broadly, a series of averages of the levels outstanding on all the Wednesdays in each banking month and the differences between those levels.

2. There have been no changes in the definition of M1 since June 1979.

3. There have been no changes in the definition of M2 since it was introduced in 1982.

4. £M3 and M3 were redefined in 1984 to exclude public sector bank deposits.

5. There have been no changes in the composition of PSL1 since the relevant series were introduced in September 1979.

6. PSL2 was redefined last month to include non-bank private sector term shares and SAYE deposits with building societies and non-bank private sector deposits with banks with an original maturity of over two years.

The list relates to definitional changes only. It excludes changes in the practicalities of measuring the aggregates —for example those resulting from the redefinition of the monetary sector in 1981.

Green Pound

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report his esimate of the change in the value of the green pound since May 1979 and the effect this has had on the retail food prices index and on the overall retail prices index.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

Devaluations of the green pound (representative rate) since May 1979 have, for different commodities, resulted in increases in support prices expressed in sterling which have varied between 14 and 21 per cent. Between May 1979 and June 1986 the retail prices index rose by 79 per cent. and the retail food price index by 57 per cent. Retail prices of food and other goods and services were affected by many factors: it is not possible to estimate reliably the extent to which green pound devaluations alone contributed to the recorded increases. However, since the green pound has a direct impact on only about one third of consumers' total expenditure on food, the impact is likely to have been modest: food has a weight in the all items retail prices index of 18 per cent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Soviet Compensation

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in dealing with pre-1932 claims for Soviet compensation.

Mr. Eggar: The negotiations with the Soviet Union which began over 60 years ago about pre-1939 British financial and property claims and Soviet claims in respect of British involvement in the intervention in Russia from 1918 to 1921 have been brought to a successful conclusion. The Soviet Foreign Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend signed an agreement on the subject this morning. It sets the seal upon many attempts made by successive Administrations over the years to secure a settlement of these claims. Copies of the agreement have, earlier today, been laid and placed in the Library and Vote Office of the House.

The Agreement sets out in detail the provisions for a mutual waiver of claims by both Governments. It also provides that each Government shall have full title to the assets remaining in its territory under the terms of the agreement and be solely responsible for settling claims of its own nationals. Finally, it provides for the release to the Soviet Government of a sum of money amounting to £2·65 million in diplomatic and certain miscellaneous official bank accounts held in London. These were essentially embassy and diplomatic accounts which enjoy a special status under international law.

We understand that the remaining moneys in banks in the United Kingdom which will become available for distribution to British claimants under the terms of the agreement exceed £45 million. The Government have waived their entitlement to a share of this money in respect of their own claims and it will be distributed to the original private British claimants, both corporate and individual, and to their heirs and successors as well as to the British holders of bonds issued or guaranteed by the Russian Government prior to 7 November 1917 who acquired these bonds on or before Monday, 14 July 1986.

An Order-in-Council will be made and laid before Parliament in due course providing for the distribution of this fund. We intend the distribution to be as rapid as possible. We hope it may be completed in its entirety within three years. We have decided that, apart from British bond holders, the distribution will be limited to the original British claims. These original claims were registered over a period of more than 30 years.

A cut-off date of Monday 14 July has been set for British bond holders. This has been done in order to avoid speculation in the bonds or their transfer from foreign to British hands. The Stock Exchange therefore suspended all dealings in these Russian bonds at the start of its normal operations today. British bond holders who wish to share in this distribution will be required to make a formal statutory declaration that they had acquired the bonds on or before Monday, 14 July. We have it in mind, subject to the approval of the House, to set a closing date of 31 December 1986 for the presentation of bonds by British bond holders. We propose to allow other applicants a somewhat longer period in which to apply to share in the distribution but the closing date for such applications will not be later than the middle of 1987.

South Africa

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the recent meeting of European Economic Community Heads of Government, what steps are now being taken to consult countries outwith the European Economic Community on the co-ordination of economic measures to be taken against South Africa; if he will list those countries which he is consulting or intends to consult; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will indicate which of those countries consulted about measures against South Africa have refused to join European Economic Community countries in co-ordinated action.

Mrs. Chalker: In accordance with the decision by the European Council in The Hague on 27 June, consultations are proceeding with other industrialised countries on further measures which might be needed against South Africa. The details of these consultations are confidential.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate, from information available to him, which countries have supplied any military weapons or equipment to South Africa in the last three years, notwithstanding the United Nations arms embargo.

Mrs. Chalker: We comply fully with the requirements of Security Council Resolution 418 (the UN Arms Embargo). It would not be proper for me to speculate whether other Governments are failing to do so. The UN Security Arms Embargo Committee is the forum for the investigation of alleged breaches.

Hong Kong

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Hong Kong about the Daya Bay power station project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have received no representations. We have, however, been following very closely the expressions of concern in Hong Kong about the project. We recognise that the people of Hong Kong will wish to be reassured of the safety of the Daya Bay plant. There are a number of initiatives under way to ensure that they are kept informed about the safety measures to be adopted.

Spain

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the Government of Spain.

Mr. Eggar: Our relations with Spain are excellent.

CIVIL SERVICE

Disabled People

Mr. Boyes asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list in the Official Report Government Departments and the percentage and number of registered disabled employed by each at the latest available date.

Mr. Luce: The figures for registered disabled persons employed by Government Departments are collected each summer and published by the Cabinet Office in its annual publication "Independent". The 1986 figures are currently being assembled but the figures for 1 June 1985 were published in January in the 1986 issue of "Independent", of which there are copies in the Library of the House.

ENERGY

SEVERN BARRAGE

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a full description of the advanced investigations and site exploration in connection with the Severn barrage announced on 9 July.

Mr. David Hunt: The programme of work to be undertaken on the Severn barrage will include the following areas:

Tidal Regime, Hydrodynamics and Energy Production
Geology, Geomorphology and Structure Foundation Power Systems
Civil Engineering
Barrage Operating Costs
Regional Economics and Planning
Ecological—Environment

The details of this work programme are still being discussed by the parties involved. I shall place a copy of the finalised programme in the Libraries of both Houses when it is available.

North Sea Oil (Illegal Exports)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy what sanctions are applicable against companies exporting North sea crude oil to countries excluded from such exports by the policy indicated in his answer of 9 July.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: This is a matter to which we attach considerable importance and we do not expect companies to ignore our views. What we would do in the event of their doing so is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, he will now list those countries to which exports of North sea crude oil are precluded by the policy indicated in that reply.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 8 December 1983 to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor), at column 222.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the forms and leaflets published by his Department in a Gaelic or in Gaelic/English bilingual format.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ensure that all documents relating to the 20-year safety reviews of Magnox nuclear reactors will be published in full; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 9 June 1986, c. 52]: No. It is essentially for the operators and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive to decide what is practicable. As I told the hon. Member in a written answer on 20 May, the inspectorate will in future publish its conclusions on each long-term safety review, following discussion of those conclusions with the licensee.

Offshore Production Licensing

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals for further offshore production licensing.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith [pursuant to his reply, 22 April 1986, c. 118]: The arrangements for the tenth round of offshore petroleum production licensing have now been determined. A text describing the arrangements has been placed today in the Libraries of both Houses. The text, which will be published in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes on Friday 25 July, includes a list and map showing the blocks for which applications will be invited. I expect that around 50 to 60 of the 127 blocks on offer will be licensed. All awards will be at the discretion of the Secretary of State.

A mix of blocks from different areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf will be on offer, distributed as follows:

Northern North Sea	24
Moray Firth	36
Central North Sea	23
Mid North Sea High	5
Southern North Sea	26
Rockall Trough	7
Faeroes Trough	6

The closing date for applications will be noon on tuesday 17 February 1987.

The selection of blocks for offer has followed extensive consultations with interested organisations, including fishing and environmental interests. In certain blocks, for example these close to the coast, there will be drilling restrictions or other special requirements to reflect the sensitivity of the areas for fishing, wildlife, defence or navigation.

I will also expect licensees considering development plans for any discoveries near the shore to carry out a study into the implications and impact of the proposed development, in consultation with all interested parties.

A key objective for the tenth round is to consolidate on the ninth round and encourage exploration in areas which merit more intensive examination. We need to maintain continuity on the United Kingdom continental shelf to increase knowledge of our oil and gas reserves and provide potential for developments in the 1990s to replace existing fields when they start declining. I believe that the United Kingdom continental shelf remains one of the most attractive areas in the world for hydrocarbons exploration.

Applicants for licences will be judged against the background of the continuing need for expeditious, thorough and efficient exploration to identify oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom continental shelf, including deep water and other frontier areas.

The terms on which licences will be awarded will be on the same general lines as in ninth round, though rental charges will be indexed against movements in the price of oil.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Doctors)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors' posts have been lost in the National Health Service over the past year.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally. However, sustained increases in medical manpower in the hospital and community health services are shown in the following table.

Hospital and community health services medical staff at 30 September: England Whole-time equivalent

	Number
1979	34,929
1984	38,201
1985	38,851

Health Personnel (Statistics)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of doctors, nurses, midwives, dentists, opticians and pharmacists in (a) Derbyshire and (b) Amber Valley in 1979, 1983 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that figures for Amber Valley are not available centrally. To obtain information to this level of detail my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the South Derbyshire district health authority.

I regret that information on the total numbers of doctors and dentists employed in Derbyshire is also not available centrally. The contracts of senior doctors and dentists (that is consultants and senior registrars) are normally held by regional health authorities, and therefore the district health authorities in which they are employed cannot normally be identified. Such information as is available, excluding these staff, is given in the table. Figures for 30 September 1984 are the latest currently available for all groups of staff, to the level of detail requested. Detailed figures for non-medical staff at 30 September 1985 will be available within the next few weeks.

[7] Figures not yet available to this level of detail.
[8] There were around 130 WTE hospital opticians employed by the NHS in England at 30 September 1984, therefore not all district health authorities employ them. It is likely that persons in Derbyshire requiring optical consultations would be referred to the nearest available hospital optical department, or in the case of specialised problems, to Moorfields Eye hospital.

NHS (Services)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of savings for the last year for which figures are available, achieved by the National Health Service through the contracting out of (a) domestic services, (b) catering, (c) laundry and (d) any other duties to private contractors; and what proportion of these services are now contracted out nationally.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available in the form requested. However, my hon. Friend may wish to know that the position at 31 March 1986 was as follows:

	Number of Contracts Awarded In-House	Estimated Annual Savings £ million	Number of Contracts Awarded to Contractors	Estimated Annual Savings £ million
Domestic Services	294	21·0	121	19·5
Catering Services	159	5·7	8	0·9

Hypothermia

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of registered deaths by hypothermia per month from January 1980.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of deaths with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death, by month of registration for 1980 to the latest available complete month of 1986 for England and Wales, are shown in the table. The figures for 1986 are provisional.

Ambulance Service, Manchester

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what restrictions have been placed either on the hours which ambulancemen in Greater Manchester can work or on the number of ambulances which can be used, over the last 12 months;

(2) how many journeys ambulances make for each station in Greater Manchester in the first week in May for each of the last five years; and how many patients were not carried although requests were made by hospitals or doctors for their transport;

(3) how many ambulancemen were employed at each ambulance station in Greater Manchester on 1 May in the current year and for the last five years;

(4) how many patients in Greater Manchester were unable to keep appointments at hospitals with consultants due to lack of ambulances to take them to the hospitals for their appointments; and if he will break down the figures by day and week for the last six weeks for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: We do not hold such information centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to address his inquiries to the chairman of North-Western regional health authority, which is responsible for the management of the Greater Manchester metropolitan ambulance service.

Mortuary Staff (Tameside)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will carry out an inquiry as to why the number of attendants at the Tameside district general hospital mortuary has been reduced.

Mr. Whitney: No. The management of Tameside district general hospital is the responsibility of Tameside and Glossop health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to seek the information he requires from the chairman of that authority.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made by his Department in its consultations with representatives of local authorities on the detailed arrangements for the new housing benefit scheme; and when he expects to be able to publish firm proposals in respect of (a) certification and liaison between authorities and his Department, (b) service charges, (c) amenity charges, (d) recovery of overpayments, (e) net income assessments and (f) subsidies.

Mr. Major: Substantial progress has been made in discussion on future subsidy arrangements, and exploratory discussions are nearing completion on assessment of net income and liaison arrangements between local authorities and local social security offices.

Our firm proposals on liaison arrangements, service and amenity charges, recovery of overpayments and net income assessment will be set out in regulations. We will consult the local authority associations on these in the usual way, before laying the regulations in draft before Parliament early next year. Firm proposals on subsidy will be set out in an order early in 1988.

Medicines Inspectorate

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what survey into the manpower needs of the medicines inspectorate was carried out in recent years; and what were the recommendations.

Mr. Hayhoe: An internal management report reviewing the function and effective use of medicines inspectorate resources has very recently been received and is under consideration by senior departmental officials.

The report emphasises the considerable contribution to improving standards of manufacturing practice in the pharmaceutical industry made by the medicines inspectorate and its high collective and individual professional standing in the United Kingdom and overseas. The report does not recommend any change in the current staffing level but provides guidance on developing management measures for obtaining the best value for money from the work of the medicines inspectorate.

Glaucoma

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that all ophthalmic opticians include tests for glaucoma in each examination; if he will encourage and provide resources for the equipment for such tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The use of ophthalmoscopy for the detection of glaucoma is already part of the routine sight test carried out under the general ophthalmic service and will remain so. There is also a requirement in its National Health Service terms of service for GOS practitioners to inform the patient's doctor if any abnormality is detected in the course of the sight test.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the leaflets and forms which his Department prints in Gaelic or in a bilingual English/Gaelic format.

Mr. Major: A version of the combined explanatory leaflet and claim form for supplementary benefit (SB1) is available in Gaelic.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Alyn and Deeside constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department over the same period.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the figures for the number of claimants of supplementary benefit in the Govan constituency at the most recent date for which figures are available and comparable figures for 1979; and what percentage change the latest figures represent;

(2) what were the numbers of staff employed on supplementary benefit work in his Department's local offices in the south-west of Glasgow at the latest available date; and if he will give comparative figures for 1979.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit at the latest available date in 1986 and the comparable month in 1979 at each of the Coventry offices of his Department; what percentage change that represents; and what was the change in numbers and in percentage terms in the staff handling supplementary benefit and in all staff at those offices for the same period.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the St. Helens, South constituency in (a) 1979, and (b) 1985; what percentage change this represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department for the same period.

Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Cunninghame, South constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change this represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department for the same period.

Mr. Major: I shall let the right hon. and hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

South-West Thames RHA

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the South-West Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement about the effect of the resources allocation working party in this region of London.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend meets all regional health authority chairmen at regular two-monthly intervals to discuss a wide range of topics. The last such meeting was held on 21 May.

The distribution of funds within South-West Thames is a matter for the region. Regions are expected to follow the resources allocation working party approach of improving equity of access to services, to plan their services and funding accordingly and to plan for a manageable pace of change. These aspects are taken into account in assessing and approving regions' strategic plans and progress is monitored through their short-term programmes.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department has taken to integrate workplace cervical cancer screening with those operated by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Some workplace cervical cancer screening is organised by health authorities either directly or using the mobile clinics of the Women's National Cancer Control Campaign. Other workplace screening is organised by individual employers. However, there is no requirement for employers to notify the Department or health authorities of these activities.

Mortality

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 1 May, Official Report, column 470, if he has any information showing standardised mortality ratios of men aged 15 to 64 years according to social class based on occupations recorded in the 1981 census, and at death registration prior to and following the census, where occupations have been coded into social classes according to both the 1970 and 1980 classifications of occupations.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1986, c. 270]: No, not in this precise form, though a re-coding study of the occupations of a sample of those who died in 1979-80 has been made for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys longitudinal study. Some conclusions from this will be published in the forthcoming decennial supplement on occupational mortality. A possible further re-coding study is under consideration.

Captain Balnave

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will expedite the payment to Captain Balnave of 23 Malvern Road, Southsea, Portsmouth, awarded to him on appeal.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1986, c. 171]: Captain Balnave's appeal was successful in establishing entitlement to a war pension for an additional disablement. A medical board is being arranged to advise on the assessment of the level of disability so that payment can be made at the appropriate rate as quickly as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 433-34, whether he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the numbers of (a) privately educated and (b) publicly educated pupils in each group, together with the UNESCO definitions used in compiling the figures.

Mr. Dunn: The available estimates are shown in the following table, covering 1st and 2nd levels. Pupils at private schools in France, USA and Japan include those in schools receiving public subsidies. The private sector figure for Germany has been derived by assuming that 4 per cent. of pupils attend private schools. The private sector figures for France, Japan and the USA were taken from national statistical publications of those countries. The public sector figure was derived by subtraction from the total figure supplied to UNESCO.

The International Standard Classification of Education Handbook defines level as follows:

Education preceding the first level (ISCED level category 0), where it is provided, usually begins at age three, four, or five (sometimes earlier) and lasts from one to three years.

Education at the first level (ISCED level category 1) usually begins, therefore, at age five, six, or seven, and lasts for about five or six years. Allied with these "primary" levels are such related programmes as literacy programmes for older people who are illiterate because of lack of earlier schooling, and programmes with a vocational emphasis for beginners or for those who have completed some primary schooling, although these programmes are not found in all countries.

Education at the second level, first stage (ISCED level category 2), begins at about age 11 or 12 and lasts for about three years. Allied with this core of lower secondary schooling is wide variety of out-of-school programmes for adults and young people most of them being vocational programmes that require as a minimum for entrance the equivalent of some five or six years of full-time schooling. These include programmes of training for jobs requiring relatively elementary skills, some apprenticeship programmes, and some simple medical auxiliary programmes.

Education at the second level, second stage (ISCED level category 3), begins at about age 14 or 15 and lasts for about three yers. Allied with this core of upper secondary school is a wide range of vocational programmes that require as a minimum for entrance the equivalent of some eight years of full-time schooling. These include programmes for semi-skilled and skilled jobs, some apprenticeship programmes, programmes in home economics, secretarial and other "office work" programmes, para-medical programmes, agricultural and similar programmes, and in some countries teacher training programmes.

Devon Schools (Visits)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will direct Devon county council, under section 68 of the Education Act 1944, to permit hon. Members to visit schools in their constituencies in Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that the chief executive of Devon county council has written to local Members of Parliament saying that they are welcome to visit Devon schools and that during the past 10 years the position concerning such visits has not changed.

Village Schools

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many village schools have closed in each education authority in the United Kingdom during each of the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of rural school closures in England are as follows:

	Primary	Secondary	Total
1981	88	1	89
1982	75	1	76
1983	127	4	131
1984	100	3	103
1985	50	6	56

The numbers of closures by education authority could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the procedures that are followed before a village school can be closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: A local education authority which intends to close a school must first publish its proposals in accordance with section 12 of the Education Act 1980. Guidance on procedures to be followed is contained in the Department's circulars 2/80, 2/81, 4/82 and administrative memorandum 4/84, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mathematics and Physics Graduates

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate discussions with employers' organisations with a view to them releasing mathematics and physics graduates from industry to teach these subjects in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department published a consultative document on 9 July seeking the co-operation of all with an interest in improving the supply of teachers in these subjects. It lists examples of activities already supported by certain employers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has personally sent copies of the document to the chairmen of some of our major companies inviting them to consider how they might be able to help in alleviating teacher shortages in mathematics, physics and technology. The secondment of industrial employees to schools is one of the possibilities to be discussed.

Welsh Plant Breeding Section

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to make any financial cuts in the Welsh Plant Breeding Station, "Gogerddan' Aberystwyth in the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1986, c. 178]: The allocation of funds to the Welsh Plant Breeding Station is the responsibility of the Agricultural and Food Research Council. I understand that the budget for 1987-88 is currently under discussion; detailed plans for later years have yet to be formulated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cement (Imports)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of imports of cement into the United Kingdom each year for the past five years; and what were the countries of origin.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the tonnage of cement imports into the United Kingdom for each year since 1980, together with the countries of origin.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of cement (COO) 1981 to 1985

Quantity thousand metric tonnes

	1981 Quantity	1982 Quantity	1983 Quantity	1984 Quantity	1985 Quantity

Notes:

1. Figures for 1985 are provisional.
2. Due to rounding totals shown may not correspond exactly to the sum of the constituent items.
3. — = No trade.
   0·0 = Negligible trade.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the level of imports of cement into the United Kingdom in each of the past three yars.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) today.

South Africa (Computer Equipment)

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the controls introduced to enforce the ban on the sale and export of computer equipment capable of use by South African military forces, police or security forces, as agreed in the Commonwealth accord on southern Africa on 20 October 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985, as amended, subjects most computers and associated equipment to export licensing for all destinations, including South Africa. A licence is not issued unless the end-use and end-user are satisfactory.

Krugerrands

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a ban on the sale of Krugerrands in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown for each region of the numbers of reports received by his Department of abuses of citizens band radio regulations, the number of such complaints which were investigated by his Department, the number of cases in which prosecutions were brought and the number of convictions which were achieved in each of the years since citizens radio was introduced.

Mr. Pattie: The Radio Investigation Service, which enforces the Wireless Telegraphy Acts, transferred from British Telecom to my Department in August 1984 and has since gone through a period of integration. Information on the number of complaints, investigations and prosecutions by RIS districts was not held centrally prior to 1 April 1986 and could now be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The number of persons prosecuted and convicted for offences related to citizens band radio for the years following the introduction of the FM CB service into the United Kingdom on 2 November 1981, was as follows:

	Persons prosecuted		Persons convicted
	Use of AM CB equipment	FM CB related offence	Use of AM CB equipment	FM CB related offence
1982	2,310	25	2,274	25
1983	1,404	66	1,379	66
1984	949	221	940	220
1985	473	467	471	461

Allied-Lyons

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if officials of his Department have been invited by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to submit evidence in relation to the bid by Elders XL for Allied-Lyons.

Mr. Howard: Yes. It is the normal practice of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to invite evidence from interested Departments. In this case written evidence was submitted on behalf of the Department.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy, in considering recommendations from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, to take into account the most recent information available to him on the activities of the companies involved.

Mr. Howard: In considering reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission my right hon. Friend takes into account all relevant factors, as does the commission.

Furniture (Flammability)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now state what action he proposes to take on the flammability of upholstered furniture, and, in particular, the replacement of standard polyurethane foam in upholstery combinations where it poses an unacceptable safety hazard.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 10.]: I would refer the right hon. member to my reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) on 1 July. The option of reference to a code of practice on match ignitability will offer an advantage over the simple match test requirement, in that it will encourage furniture manufacturers to use safer fillings rather than concentrating on the selection and use of protective cover fabrics.

The proposed code of practice will permit the use of high resilience polyurethane foam (which has better characteristics in its behaviour in fire than does the standard product) in combination with certain covering materials. But some presently popular combinations including standard polyurethane foam filling will not meet the criteria and will therefore not be permitted by the code.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Dog Owners (Prosecution)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what is his policy towards the prosecution of dog owners who allow their pets to foul public parks and highways.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: No special policy exists. Reports of such offences are dealt with by the prosecution authorities in the same way as reports of other contraventions of the criminal law.

Court Proceedings (Gaelic)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make it his policy to allow the use of the Gaelic language in Scottish court proceedings.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: In an appeal heard in 1982 the High Court of Justiciary held that the language of the courts in Scotland is English. There are no plans to change that position at the present time. However, the right hon. Member will be aware there is a statutory requirement that one member of the Scottish Land Court should be a Gaelic speaker.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will list the forms and leaflets for use in Scottish courts which are published in Gaelic or in a Gaelic/English bilingual format.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I understand that there are no Gaelic/English forms in use in Scottish courts.

EMPLOYMENT

New Business (Derbyshire)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General (1) what are the latest figures available for the number of new businesses registered in Derbyshire since 1979;

(2) what has been the net change in the number of new businesses since 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Trippier: Around 11,600 new businesses registered for VAT in Derbyshire between the end of 1979 and the end of 1984. For the same period the net increase in the number of businesses registered was about 2,200, including a net increase in the order of 420 between the end of 1983 and the end of 1984.

Education and Training

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the future role of the Manpower Services Commission education and training.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper "Working Together—Education and Training" published on 2 July outlines the future direction of relevant activities of the Manpower Services Commission and announces the new tasks which the Government wish it to undertake. In particular, the commission is asked to administer the national extension of the technical and vocational education initiative from autumn 1987 and to assist and support the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in creating a new framework of national vocational qualifications in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many representations he has received (a) for and (b) against, the proposal to introduce a fee for applications to industrial tribunals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Comments on the proposal to introduce a fee for applications to industrial tribunals have been asked for by 30 September. Up to 11 July the Department had received five letters broadly opposing the proposal and four broadly supporting it.

Mr. Janner: asked the Paymaster General how many applications to industrial tribunals were made in the last quarter for which figures are available in respect of claims for *(a)*unfair dismissal, (b) equal pay, (c) sex discrimination and (d) race discrimination.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of applications registered by the industrial tribunals for the quarter ending 30 June 1986 is as follows:

Jurisdiction	England and Wales	Scotland	Total
(a) Unfair dismissal	10,812	836	11,648
(b) Equal Pay	148	5	153
(c) Sex discrimination	155	21	176
(d) Race discrimination	165	2	167

GCHQ, Cheltenham

Mr. Dalyell asked the Paymaster General what representations he has had from the staff association representing workers at Government Communications Headquarters, Cheltenham, on the United Kingdom's obligations under International Labour Organisation convention.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Long-term Unemployment

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Paymaster General what response he has had to the steps he has announced he is taking to assist the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new restart programme, under which all long-term unemployed people will be invited for a jobcentre interview by the end of next March, has been widely welcomed, notably by the long-term unemployed themselves. In the period to 12 June, in those areas where the programme started early, 95 per cent. of those due to be interviewed in the period responded positively by attending for their interview.

We are also continuing to expand the community programme, which provides worthwhile job opportunities for over 300,000 long-term unemployed people.

The wide range of measures to assist the unemployed and others is described in our booklet "Action for Jobs", which has been widely distributed and well received.

Job Creation (Take-up)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what is the take-up of (a) community programme places and (b) YTS places by (i) all local authorities and (ii) all health authorities, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available. However, on 31 May 1986, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 93,883 people taking part in local authority schemes under the community programme. For YTS on the same date, there were 30,737 young people in training on local authority schemes, for which contracts have been awarded since 1 April 1986.

Figures for health authorities are not available.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Galley asked the Paymaster General whether he has any proposals for changing the levy arrangements operated by the construction industry training board.

Mr. Trippier: The primary responsibility for determining levy arrangements rests with the industry's own representatives on the board. I understand that its proposals for the 1986 levy will be forwarded to the Manpower Services Commission shortly. The House will have the opportunity to consider these later this year.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Paymaster General if he will list the forms, leaflets and pamphlets published by his Department in Gaelic or in Gaelic/English bilingual format.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Department of Employment does not publish any forms, leaflets or pamphlets in Gaelic or in a Gaelic/English bilingual format. However, the Stornoway unemployment benefit office, which deals with proportionately the largest Gaelic-speaking community in Scotland, has two Gaelic-speaking members of staff who are able to deal with any claimant who wishes to have his claim dealt with in Gaelic.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General if he will list in the Official Report the names and addresses of companies prosecuted under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958 since 1956 and the outcomes of each prosecution.

Mr. Trippier: Six employers have been prosecuted under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 since 1956. Of these, five were convicted and fined. The case against one employer was dismissed by the courts. The last prosecutions were in 1975. I do not think it would be helpful at this stage to publish the names and addresses of the companies who have been prosecuted.

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General what is the latest information available on how many employers are subject to the disabled persons quota; of these, what percentage meet the quota; what percentage were issued with permits within the last 12 months and what percentages were issued with bulk permits; and what percentage were below their quotas but had not been issued with permits.

Mr. Trippier: The latest information available relates to 1 June 1985 and was given in a written answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 18 March 1986 at column 181. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the 1986 figures are available, probably by early August.

Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the report of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend and I have today presented the committee's report to the House and copies are available in the Library. The committee concluded unanimously that the retail prices index fully merits public acceptance and, with the changes it recommends, will continue to do so. These changes are in the main directed to improving the coverage and construction of the index and to clarifying the principles which govern its construction and use. My right hon. and noble Friend is accepting all the committee's recommendations.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Rolling Stock)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average age of British Rail passenger rolling stock for which consent for replacement was given over the last five years; what was the oldest and youngest stock so replaced; and what are the corresponding data for stock for the London and south-eastern sector.

Mr. David Mitchell: The normal "design life" of passenger rolling stock ranges between 20 and 40 years, (the latter figure often involving a mid-life refurbishment.) Replacements in recent years have been influenced by the board's policy commitment to withdrawing vehicles containing asbestos by the end of 1987. Vehicles ranging in age from eight to 33 years are currently being replaced. Both these extremes relate to network south-east stock. I do not have the information needed to calculate a meaningful average.

Motorcyclists (Headlights)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he is giving to motorcyclists on the use of headlights in daytime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our advice to riders is that wearing fluorescent clothing and—on larger machines—using dipped headlamps will make them more readily visible to other road users in daylight. This advice is included in the proposed revision of the Highway Code which has been laid before Parliament. Consultation indicated general support for advice on these lines and in particular the need to make clear that the use of dipped headlamps applies to larger machines only.

Railways (Dangerous Freight)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the regulations controlling safety standards for carriage of dangerous commodities on railways.

Mr. Moore: Dangerous goods are accepted by British Rail under the conditions contained in its list of dangerous goods and conditions of acceptance. Special instructions to staff on the handling and conveyance of all dangerous goods are contained in its "Working Manual for Rail Staff". The Railways Act 1921 (section 50) requires the owner or consignor of dangerous goods to comply with the rules laid down by the railway. The Railway Clauses Act 1845 (section 105) requires the consignor to give the railway a written indication of goods that are dangerous. Specific regulations for the conveyance of military explosives by rail are contained in SI No. 889 of 1977. The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 have a general appliation to the transport of radioactive substances; all materials in this category are carried in accordance with the Internatinal Atomic Energy Agency safety standards. For international traffic, the regulations concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by rail are also relevant.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the leaflets, forms and pamphlets which are published by his Department in the Gaelic language or in a Gaelic/English bilingual format.

Mr. Moore: My Department issues no leaflets, forms or pamphlets in the Gaelic language or in a Gaelic/English bilingual format.

National Bus Company

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the National Bus Company's disposal programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has given approval for the sale of the National Bus Company's subsidiary National Holidays Ltd. to a subsidiary of the Pleasurama Group, Smiths Happiways Ltd.

This first successful sale marks the start of privatisation for the National Bus Company.

Smiths Happiways will continue to employ all the present management and employees of National Holidays, who will be given normal access to the firm's share option and purchase schemes.

The Smiths Happiways bid, which was recommended by the National Bus Company, was one of four offers received, including one from the management of National Holidays, which was substantially lower than the successful offer.

The National Bus Company is currently negotiating on the sale of several other subsidiaries, all of which include bids from management teams.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sea Pollution (Liverpool Bay)

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to raise the official environmental quality standard of 0·3 mg of mercury per kilo in fish caught in Liverpool bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986]: No.

PRIME MINISTER

Macclesfield

Q17. Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to pay an official visit to Macclesfield.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Dewsbury and Batley and Spen

Q109. Mr. Whitfield asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Dewsbury and Batley and Spen.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Official Papers

Q125. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what criteria are used to determine which official papers relating to the conduct of Government business should be preserved and which should be shredded; and what role is played in this process by the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: Every Department, including the Cabinet Office, has a departmental records officer whose duty it is to select departmental records for preservation in accordance with the principles set out by the Griff committee on Departmental Records (Cmnd. 9163 of 1952). If in doubt a departmental records officer may seek the advice of an inspecting officer of the Public Records Office.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Prime Minister if any loans were provided by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of South Africa during the years 1979 to 1985.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government provided no loans to the Government of South Africa during this period.

Mr. Caborn asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to implement a ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa.

The Prime Minister: This was one of the possible further measures in the Commonwealth Accord for consideration by Commonweath Heads of Government. We are not committed to any of these measures. But they may be discussed at the Commonwealth review meeting next month.

Select Committees

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister what were the main recommendations accepted by Her Majesty's Government from the reports of the 14 departmental Select Committees during (a) March 1983 and March 1984 and (b) March 1984 and March 1985.

The Prime Minister: The tables below show the main recommendations accepted by Her Majesty's Government from the reports of the departmental Select Committees published between (a) March 1983 and February 1984 and (b) March 1984 and February 1985. In addition, during this period there have been numerous lesser recommendations which have been accepted and suggestions or statements made in reports which the Government have noted.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	(a) March 1983 to February 1984
AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE Session 1982-83 First Report: Organisation and Financing of Agricultural Research and Development May 1983	There should be a Chief Scientist post at Deputy Secretary level. Chief Scientists should have access to the Minister. Food Research needs to be given a higher priority and must be properly funded. Government should support schemes to encourage universities to undertake outside work for CASE award scheme for joint sponsored research with industry. Institute Directors should be left with the maximum amount of freedom possible under the broad direction of objectives for the actual management and execution of research programmes.
DEFENCE COMMITTEE Session 1982-83 Second Report: British Forces Hong Kong April 1983	A fundamental restructuring of British Forces Hong Kong should await outcome of diplomatic negotiations over Hong Kong's future. No changes in force deployments should be made which might cast doubt on the United Kingdom's commitment to securing a stable future for Hong Kong. Provisions made for the normal and reasonable use of air conditioning by Service families, rather than its restricted use under financial duress.
Third Report: The Future of the Falkland Islands June 1983	The use of capital expenditure to avoid recurrent expenditure and to limit the size of the garrison requires each infrastructure project to be subject to careful scrutiny to ensure that it makes a proper contribution to the defence of the Islands and is an economical use of resources. Each item of equipment needed by the forces planned to reinforce the Falklands Garrison be examined to establish whether it is appropriate to be stored in theatre. The condition of all aircraft involved in the air bridge between Ascension Island and Stanley be closely monitored to ensure that any developing faults can be corrected before more serious difficulties arise. The priority of different capital schemes should not be left to separate decision making processes in the Ministry of Defence, in the Overseas Development Administration and on the Island and that arguments about the allocation of cost should not impede essential progress on road building and other projects. With the building of a new jetty at Stanley under consideration, and the possibility of a jetty being built at Mare Harbour, if road communications between Stanley, the airfield and Mare Harbour are improved the Ministry of Defence and ODA should combine to ensure that expensive facilities are not duplicated unnecessarily. The Ministry of Defence and the ODA should quickly reach agreement on the location and scale of a permanent hospital for both the garrison and the local community. The RFAs should be provided with weapons and equipment for self defence. Similarly, attention should be given to providing passive and active defence for at least some of the merchant ships.
EMPLOYMENT COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: Trade Union Legislation—Unions in the Government Communications Headquarters February 1984	The concessions offered by the unions as notifed to the Committee be thoroughly examined by the Government to satisfy themselves that they meet every requirement of national security.
ENERGY COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: Electricity and Gas Prices February 1984	Consumers organisations must have access to the maximum relevant information to enable them to reach a considered judgment.
HOME AFFAIRS Session 1982-83 First Report: Representation of the People Acts April 1983	The Home Office should take steps to collect information about the various ways in which EROs interpret their statutory duty, with a view to formulating a code of "best practice". The Home Office should redesign Form A.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	The civil rights arising out of the status established by the British Nationality Act 1948 and the Ireland Act 1949 should not be disturbed and no group of citizens within the United Kingdom who at present enjoy the right to vote should be disfranchised.
	The Home Office should review the existing criteria for eligibility for absent voting facilities, and it should be permissible to apply for a postal vote due to absence "by reason of employment".
	Applications for postal votes should be entertained from holidaymakers.
	The level of the deposit should be increased to £1,000.
	A candidate should be given the option of employing an addressed or an unaddressed service for the delivery of election material.
Second Report: Ethnic and Racial Questions in the Census May 1983	The Manpower Services Commission should monitor the take-up of all its programmes by ethnic origin.
	The form of any ethnic questions should not compel people to define themselves solely by their own or their ancestors' immigrant origin. It should enable them to identify themselves in a way acceptable to them whilst at the same time meeting the need of users who need to measure disadvantage and discrimination.
	The Commission for Racial Equality should advise OPCS on planning and promotion of an ethnic question in the Census.
Third Report: British Nationality Fees May 1983	The Home Office should extend to all forces forthwith the procedure, which it has developed in consultation with the Metropolitan Police, which reduces delays, cuts police time and costs, yet maintains adequate standards.
	The use of "pro-formas" be extended to all police forces forthwith.
	Costing should be based upon an efficient whilst still effective operation.
SCOTTISH AFFAIRS Session 1983-84 First Report: Dampness in Housing February 1984	Whole life costing for new building should become the norm with full consideration given to the maintenance and running cost implications of new building.
	A publicity and information campaign should be carried out to give householders a better understanding of the nature of the condensation problem.
	An ultimate objective must be the provision of well insulated homes equipped with heating systems which can provide a continuous low background heat throughout the house.
TRADE AND INDUSTRY COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: The United Kingdom's trade with the ASEAN countries March 1983	Government should seek to devise Aid/Credit schemes not merely reactive but rather designed to match the aggressive approach of our competitors and give evidence of the United Kingdom's determination to win overseas business and thus assist the future development of South East Asia in particular but also other parts of the developing world.
Third Report: Machine Tools and Robotics May 1983	Government should encourage public sector investment in new plant and equipment.
	Government to encourage better links between educational establishments and industry as regards research work.
	Government to assist in promotion of joint ventures.
TRANSPORT COMMITTEE Session 1982-83 Second Report: Serpell Committee Report on the Review of Railway Finances March and April 1983	A clear statement of Government policy towards the railways, including the specification of financial and operational targets, is urgently required, and must be made before the appointment of the new Chairman of the Railways Board.
Third Report: Transport Aspects of the 1983 Public Expenditure White Paper March and May 1983	The Government should carry over to the next year any underspend on the road construction programme.

(b) March 1984 to February 1985

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE Session 1984-85 First Report: The Implementation of Dairy Quotas November 1984	The Minister should investigate the United Kingdom's arrangements for those who are both milk wholesalers and producers with the aim of making them more flexible.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
Second Report: The Effect of Feedingstuff Prices on the United Kingdom Pig Industry and Poultry Industries July 1984	The Committee welcomed the idea of an Inter-Professional Body for poultry producers.
DEFENCE COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984 June 1984	Future Defence White Papers should include a fuller account of the objectives of defence policy and more information on equipment costs. In future White Papers the comparison of the balance of forces on the Central Front should include forces in the three Soviet Western Military Districts. Fuller coverage should be given to British nuclear and nuclear-capable systems. Statements should contain information on the likely availability of the United Kingdom's merchant fleet for defence purposes.
Second Report: The Physical Security of Military Installations in the United Kingdom July 1984	The Government's proposed Royal Ordnance Factory guard force should replace the Ministry of Defence Police at certain factories only — the Ministry of Defence Police will be retained at all factories for at least three years. A ROF security Directorate should oversee security with the ROFs. Appropriate improvements should be made in the physical security measures at the ROFS. The 1984 police surveys of the ROFs should provide a satisfactory initial basis for the security standards which the ROF security Directorate should set. The Government should consult fully with Parliament and others about its proposals for the ROF guard force. The principal recommendations made by the Metropolitan Police in respect of RSAF Enfield should be implemented. The arrangements for security exercises at military installations should be improved. The Government should make lasting improvements in the security of nuclear establishments. Where possible Ministry of Defence Police or RAF Police rather than Servicemen should be responsible for handling unathorised intruders at nuclear bases.
EDUCATION, SCIENCE AND THE ARTS COMMITTEE Session 1984-85 First Report: The effects of Abolition of the GLC and Metropolitan Countries upon Support for the Arts April 1984.	The Government to make available additional central funding to provide for the needs of bodies in the GLC and MC areas.
EMPLOYMENT COMMITTEE Session 1984-85 First Report: The Equal Opportunities Commission's Draft Code of Practice November 1984.	The Secretary of State should approve the draft code.
ENERGY COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 Ninth Report: Energy Research, Development and Demonstration August 1984	The Committee recognised the considerable evidence of broad agreement with the thrust of its report, by the Government, as demonstrated by reviews of the UKAEA, ACORD, the creation of the Energy Efficiency Office and the enhanced budget for the Energy Efficiency Demonstration Projects Scheme.
Session 1984-85 Fourth Report: Winter Supplementary Estimate for BNOC December 1984	Departmental minutes notifying Parliament of contingent liabilities should be copied to the relevant departmental Select Committee.
ENVIRONMENT COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: Green Belt and Land for Housing May 1984	Draft circulars on Green Belts and Land for Housing

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	Circulars should state unequivocally that Green Belts have a broad and positive planning role that of open spaces whose presumption against development can better shape urban areas particularly on a regional scale.
	The circular should contain a fourth objective, to assist urban regeneration.
	The circular should use the phrase "as far as can be seen ahead" to define the longevity of Green Belts.
	In drawing boundaries no account should be taken of the condition of land: this should be specified in the circular.
	The Government should make it clear that, once fixed, boundaries will not be moved to release Green Belt land which is or has become derelict.
	The need to give Green Belt status land between urban areas within conurbations should be explicitly set out in the circular.
	The draft circular should give greater emphasis to countryside enhancement which should become a factor within Green Belt development control.
	The Government should build the concept of countryside management into the draft circular, and consider if more can be done to promote such a service in Green Belt areas.
	National and local government should give full support to Groundwork-type initiatives in all Green Belts, including additional funding if evidence exists that such funding will generate considerable extra investment of private and voluntary sector resources.
	Development should only be allowed in the most exceptional circumstances, and never when land has been deliberately allowed to become derelict.
	The draft circular should emphasise that the best means of protecting valuable amenity land is to ensure an acceptable choice is elsewhere.
	The Government should investigate the problems of adducing title to property identified in evidence to the Committee and take action to remove this problem by statutorily guaranteeing absolute title if necessary.
	Government should monitor the operation of land availability studies and specify clearly in the circular how frequently they should be conducted.
	The Secretary of State should consider more active use of his reserve powers.
	The Government should assess why local authorities and developers are encountering difficulties in Urban Development Grant applications and take remedial action.
Second Report: Department of the Environment's Main Estimates 1984-85 June 1984	The Department should either seek a quicker or more certain path to viability for those on the British Board of Agreement or seek proper powers from Parliament to continue financial support beyond 1984-85.
	The possibility of providing a continuing grant to the Zoological Society as a learned body should be reconsidered and the necessary powers sought.
	There should be specific statutory authority for grants to voluntary bodies.
	The Department should continue its efforts to adjust payment of housing subsidy during the course of the year to prevent payment in advance of need.
Third Report: PSA Main Estimates 1984-85 June 1984	PSA should delegate to departments more operational and financial responsibility for the maintenance of their own buildings.
	PSA should seek a simpler and more comprehensive presentation of the information analysing the financial provision which accompanies the Supply Estimates.
	A proper assessment should be made of the relative costs of designing different types of scheme by different methods. PSA's staffing and design practices should be actively managed to minimise costs.
Fourth Report: Acid Rain July 1984	BRE should be commissioned to conduct detailed research into the effects of acid rain on different types of stone and concrete in a variety of environments.
	Suitable cases of acid rain damage should as a matter of course be referred to BRE, and PSA should use a selection of buildings in different materials to monitor any damage additional to natural weathering.
	A substantial research progrmme on the effect on buildings of low-level emissions should be initiated.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	The Government should give urgent and immediate consideration to the cost benefit of preventing the avoidable erosion of both historic and modern buildings.
	The Forestry Commission, using its own and West German experts should conduct a survey on the same lines as that in Sweden.
	Detailed NOx and ozone monitoring should be undertaken and research into acid rain and trees should be carried out.
	The Government should commission research on the effects of acid rain on materials, and on means of protecting them, as a matter of urgency.
	Research on visibility degradation should be commissioned.
	The Government should commission research in this country on all aspects of risk to human health to which US, Swedish and German research has drawn attention, with a view to establishing whether similar risks exist in this country.
	A rural network of monitoring stations at different altitudes over the whole country should be set up.
	Greater impetus should be given to the perfection of PFBC technology for commercial use.
	The necessary resources should be devoted to FGD by the CEGB, not least in order to reduce its costs.
	Any programme to limit NOx and hydrocarbons emissions from motor vehicles should be based on lean-burn technology.
	Those industries reliant on high combustion temperatures, for example the cement and glass industries, should not have NOx controls put upon them.
	In any review of the desirability of combined heat and power/district heating, full account should also be taken of the pollution aspects highlighted by the Report.
	The Government should make a long-term commitment to air pollution research.
Session 1984-85 First Report: Operation and effectiveness of Part II of the Wildlife and Countryside Act January 1985	Conservation should be given a greatly increased priority in the training and work of ADAS staff, with increased formal guidance from MAFF on conservation objectives.
	A joint working party should be set up to review the Financial Guidelines and to consider the increased use of a system of standard payments.
	Consideration should be given to extending section 43 to include areas in addition to moor and heath.
	The criticisms made to the Committee, particularly about the performance of Internal Drainage Boards, should be taken into account in the revision of the DOE guidelines for water and drainage authorities.
	A provision, analagous to that which gives Water Authorities explicit duties towards nature conservation and the countryside should be extended to the Forestry Commission.
	DOE and MAFF should take action to break the deadlock in negotiations, if necessary by amending Sections 36 and 37 of the Act, so as to give the NCC or the Secretary of State adequate powers to enable the NCC to set up Marine Nature Reserves.
Second Report: British Board of Agrément— March 1985	Greater responsibility should be placed upon the building industry during the certification process for building materials, without diminishing the value and credibility of certificates issued by the Agrément Board.
FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE Session 1984-85
Fourth Report: FCO and ODA Supply Estimates 1984-85 July 1984	Bilateral Loans and Grants All outstanding commitments should be included in Table 1, even where no disbursement is expected in the relevant year.
	The Estimates should clearly indicate in Table 1 those loans whose terms have been changed.
	Dependent Territories (Vote 8 Subheads C1 to C6 and D1) Figures, including those for technical cooperation should be given for each dependent territory in the tables annexed to the aid vote.
First Report: The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges December 1984	The Government should strongly pursue a firmer policy towards application of the Convention.
	It is lawful to scan bags electronically and the Government should be prepared to do so.
	There is no reason why records should not be kept of the size or weight of diplomatic bags entering the country.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	FCO should make clear to diplomats that should the criminal law be broken there is a very real possibility that they will be required to leave the country.
	The Government should use the power to limit the size of a mission in cases where there is cause for concern about the overall nature of the mission's activities.
	FCO should inform themselves about those arriving to take up posts as mission staff.
HOME AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
Session 1983-84
First Report: Remands in Custody May 1984	The Government should commit itself in principle to introduce statutory time limits on periods in custody before trial, and should embark on experiments to see what the limits might be.
Session 1984-85
First Report: Compensation and Support for Victims of Crime December 1984	The Government should consider providing supplementary funds to allow victims support schemes to employ properly qualified co-ordinators on a permanent basis
	The review by the Treasury of allowances payable to witnesses and others should be completed as a matter of urgency and these allowances should be increased.
	A leaflet should be prepared describing as concisely as possible the available sources of compensation and such a leaflet, together with the CICB claim form if appropriate, should be supplied to the victim when the crime is first reported.
	There should be a gradual increase in staff of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board over the next couple of years with a view to reducing the backlog of business.
	The CICB should undertake the responsibility of laying down the guidelines for the level of compensation orders in the courts, provided always the special circumstances of each individual case should continue to be taken into account by the court.
	The Home Office should explore with local authorities and gas and electricity boards the feasibility of entering into block insurance arrangements with their tenants and subscribers.
Second Report: Chinese Community in Britain January 1985	The Home Office should publicise the possibility of joint applications by Local Authorities for Section 11 funding.
	The Manpower Services Commission should take steps to publicise its services among the Chinese
	The Department of Health and Social Security should take steps to inform itself about the health needs of the Chinese and ways of dealing with them, and whenever appropriate issue guidance on the subject to health authorities.
SCOTTISH AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
Session 1984-85
First Report: The impact of Airport Privatisation on Scottish Lowland Airports Policy January 1985	No change should be made to the existing (Scottish Lowland Airports) policy in advance of privatisation.
	The BAA's Scottish airports should not be privatised separately from BAA's London airports.
SOCIAL SERVICES COMMITTEE
Session 1983/84
First Report: Griffiths NHS Management Inquiry Report March 1984	A debate in the House of Commons should take place on the Griffiths Report.
	The Chief Nursing Officer should be appointed to the National Health Service Supervisory Board.
	The National Health Service Training Authority to provide courses for management training for clinicians.
	Allow the greatest possible degree of flexibility to health authorities implementing the recommendations of the Griffiths report.
Second Report: Children in Care April 1984	A Review of the guidance on registration of childminders.
	Research should be commissioned into sexual abuse of children.
	Instigate a Research project on monitoring procedures.
	Establish a Working Party on Child Care Law.
	Review into revision of Boarding-out regulations.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
	Reports by the Social Services Inspectorate should be made available to Parliament and the Social Services Committee.
Third Report: Perinatal and Neonatal Mortality Report: Follow-up July 1984	This report reinforced a number of recommendations made in 1980. The majority of the recommendations were accepted by the Government.
Fourth Report: Public Expenditure on the Social Services July 1984	As a routine, the Department investigate the most striking results of their programme budget analysis. A thorough view of the justification for, and administration of, grants under subhead H1(1) of class XI Vote 1.
Session 1984-85 First Report: Compensation Payments to NHS Staff January 1985	Where the Department is uncertain of the number of cases likely to arise, they should include a token estimate in the original estimate. Regional control totals and details of early retirements over the past year should be published annually, and these should differentiate between those arising from competitive tendering and others.
Second Report: Community Care with Special Reference to the Adult Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped February 1985	The Minister must ensure that mental illness or mental handicap hospital provision is not reduced without demonstrably adequate alternative services being provided both for those discharged from hospital and those who would otherwise seek admission. Nobody should be discharged from hospital without a practical individual case plan jointly devised by all concerned with mechanism for monitoring its implementation or its modification in the light of changing conditions. Future DHSS and local community care policy documents should have greater regard to those mentally disabled people living outside institutional care.
TRADE AND INDUSTRY COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: The British Steel Corporation's Prospects April 1984	Government to study second sourcing implications of Phoenix II proposals Government to demand that other EEC nations fulfill the capacity reductions promised by them. Government to press European Commission to ensure that conditions distorting fair competition are ameliorated.
Second Report: The Growth in the Imbalance of Trade in Manufactured Goods between the United Kingdom and Existing and Prospective Members of the EEC June 1984	Government to bring pressure to bear to ensure that the terms of the Treaty of Rome are enforced. Government to ensure that EEC seeks reduction in high level of Spanish tariffs. Government to resist a long transitional regime for Spain motor products. Government to give attention to developing a simple and accessible mechanism of investment support for manufacturing industry, as part of current review.
Fourth Report: The Wealth of Waste December 1984	A Minister should be given overall co-ordinating responsibility across departments for recycling policy. The Government should encourage Waste Disposal Authorities to offer financial rebates to Collection Authorities to stimulate glass recycling through bottle banks. The Government should implement Sections 12-14 of Control of Pollution Act 1974 as soon as possible. The R&D Work at Warren Spring Laboratory should be enhanced and greater collaboration with industry encouraged.
First Report: The Operation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department January 1985	The formation of ECGD's non-statutory remit to operate at no net cost to public funds is both understandable and desirable. The Government demand that the terms of the GATT and the Treaty of Rome, as they affect the operations of national credit insurance agencies, are adhered to by all parties and member states. The Government call for greater transparency in the operations of ECGD's competitors, in order that aid and credit are clearly identifiable.
TRANSPORT COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: Transport Aspects of the 1984 Public Expenditure White Paper May 1984	Tables showing capital expenditure at constant prices over the previous five years should be included in future Public Expenditure White Papers. The maintenance standards of trunk roads and local roads should not deteriorate, subject to overall public expenditure constraints.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
Second Report: The Organisation, Financing and Control of Airports in the United Kingdom July 1984	The Government should introduce legislation to reconstitute the airports in company form in preparation for privatisation. An Airports Holding Board should be constituted in company form. The individual airports would operate as semi-autonomous subsidiaries of the Board. There is a need for decentralisation with the BAA, with management at each airport being given greater independence. The retention of the Scottish reports as a single grouping. Local Authority Airports Once a Company had been created, the local authorities should be free to buy or sell their shares or to create more shares which could be sold into the private sector. They should be free to sell a majority interest. CAA's Highlands and Islands Aerodromes The Scottish Office should continue to provide financial support towards the running of these socially essential airports
Session 1984-85 First Report: Road Safety December 1984	Advertising campaigns publicising the dangers of drinking and driving backed up by strong police enforcement efforts, should be carried out not only at Christmas, but at other times of the year. The Department of Transport should introduce regulations which require all new cars to be fitted with rear seat belts. Priority should be given to research into ways of modifying the front of vehicles in order to mitigate the severity of injuries to pedestrians. The Department should continue to pursue the possibilities of publicity campaigns to reduce accidents to cyclists.
TREASURY AND CIVIL SERVICE SELECT COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 Sixth Report: Estimates 1984-85: HM Treasury and HM Customs and Excise June 1984	Any change, which makes comparisons between the current and immediate past year difficult to make, should be fully explained in the Estimates.
Eighth Report: Acceptance of Outside Appointments By Crown Servants September 1984	The rules should be redrafted to show that Crown Servants at Grade 3 and above need to apply for approval to take up business appointments. Departments should review their arrangements for bringing the rules to the attention of those who are affected. Applications for approval should be submitted in writing using a standard form; applicants should have the right to an interview, and prospective employers should be informed when conditions are imposed. Offers of employment and approaches from outside employers should be reported to those in authority. The role of the Advisory Committee should be extended to include applications from officers of Grade 2 and above and such other cases as the Prime Minister refers to them. The Committee should review periodically a selection of decisions taken by departments; the hearings of the Committee should continue not to be in public; and the Government should add one senior back bench Member of the House of Commons to the Committee. The Government to publish statistical reports on the workings of the system.
Session 1984-85 First Report: The Government's Economic Policy: Autumn Statement December 1984	The Treasury include a departmental split for the current year's estimated outturn as an integral part of future Autumn Statements.
Second Report: The Structure and Form of Financial Documents presented to Parliament December 1984	The timescale of the expenditure plans should be extended from one to three years. All changes to the Public Expenditure White Paper should be made in 1986. The Treasury to detailed proposals.

Session, report and date	Main recommendations accepted
WELSH AFFAIRS COMMITTEE Session 1983-84 First Report: The Impact of Regional Industrial Policy on Wales May 1984	The Report formed part of a general consultation exercise. The recommendations which were reflected in whole or in part in the final decisions were: The existing machinery for administrating RSA should be extended to take over the administration of the new RDG Scheme. Consideration should be given to increasing the cost per job limits applicable to the RSA Scheme. On prescribing rates of RDG, limits should not be set which are more restrictive than those prevailing in other countries with whom we are in competition, especially those within the European Community. In deciding how to measure statistical criteria for the Assisted Area Map, the Government should take into account the suggestions set out in the Annex to the Report.
Session 1984-85 First Report: Public Transport in Wales January 1985	The Government concluded that the objective of achieving greater local involvement in Welsh rail Services should be achieved by building on the links between British Rail and local authorities using existing powers.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

ENVIRONMENT

Litter

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission a schools litter campaign poster to be used in a national campaign.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Keep Britain Tidy Group, to which we give financial support, already includes local poster competitions in its environmental education programmes, which are widely used in schools throughout the country. This local approach is very effective. The winning poster entered by schools as part of the group's annual Beautiful Britain in Bloom competition subsequently has a wide distribution.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authorities as to the operation of the present Litter Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have not had any recent discussions with local authorities as to the operation of the present Litter Act.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to introduce a national campaign on television and in the national press on the problems caused by litter.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have no plans for a national advertising campaign on litter as such. We already give financial support to the Keep Britain Tidy Group, which campaigns nationally against littering. In conjunction with the group we are currently sponsoring the production of a series of television fillers. Litter abatement projects will form part of a new environmental initiative announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government on 14 July at column 683.

Fly Tipping

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions there have been in England and Wales in each of the last three years for the fly tipping of rubbish.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prosecutions for the dumping of rubbish or surplus materials on land are usually made under the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 or, if the materials involved are controlled waste, under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

The number of prosecutions in each of the last three years for which figures are available are as follows:

	1982	1983	1984
Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978	605	641	639
Control of Pollution Act 1974	52	104	85

Land (Thamesdown)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the amounts of unused and underused land owned by public bodies within the borough of Thamesdown; and if he will list the sites.

Sir George Young: The information held by my Department is that contained in the land register for the borough of Thamesdown, established under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, namely:

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the working of the Merseyside Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am very satisfied with the development corporation's progress.

In 1981 the Merseyside Development Corporation was charged with the regeneration of 350 hectares of derelict and polluted docklands. Its progress in dealing with the task has been spectacular. Already over 120 hectares have been reclaimed and provided with access and services for new users. Its most notable successes have been the international garden festival in 1984—now being further developed by the private sector; restoration of the Albert dock in partnership with the private sector and the restoration of water to the south docks; 120 houses are under construction at the Dingle, new factories have been created in Bootle, and Wapping warehouse is being refurbished for flats; all in partnership with the private sector or other agencies. Despite having to operate in a hostile economic climate MDC is succeeding in creating a climate of confidence in its area in which the private sector is prepared to invest.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created by the Merseyside Development Corporation at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: Between 1981 and March 1986, 1,320 new permanent jobs have been created in the MDC area. This is additional to the 1,800 jobs retained as a result of the MDC's activities.

In addition, an average of 660 construction workers are employed on MDC projects at any one time. This figure is expected to increase to about 1,400 over the next five years as new projects are begun.

Albert Dock Village, Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created in the Albert dock village, Liverpool, at the latest date.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 300 permanent jobs had been created at the Albert dock village by March 1986. In addition, between 350 and 400 people are employed on construction work at any one time. When the project is completed, in five year's time, it is expected to provide 1,500 permanent jobs.

Task Force (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the working of the task force on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Merseyside task force deals with a range of functions appropriate to a regional office of my Department, including housing matters, derelict land grant, the urban programme and the funding of the Merseyside Development Corporation. It is involved also with local authorities, the Housing Corporation and private companies in promoting special initiatives to tackle particular problems in the area. There is close collaboration at local level with the Department of Industry, MSC, and other Government Departments.

The task force makes an important contribution to the Government's policies aimed at securing the regeneration of the area.

Long-term Water Research Committee

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish the report of the long-term water research committee.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. I have published the report today and copies are being placed in the Library.

Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now received a full report from the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission following the identification of weaknesses in some of its financial control procedures.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to the reply, 25 March 1986, c. 426]: This report has now been received and copies are available in the Library. In addition, I am also making available to the House copies of the report made by the commission's external auditors to which I also referred. These reports show that a detailed analysis has been made of the weaknesses and appropriate corrective action has been initiated.

WALES

Sheep (Restrictions)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the procedure which should be followed by farmers in Wales who wish to claim compensation from the Government for losses incurred as a result of the ban on the movement of lambs in parts of Gwynedd and Clwyd.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In his statement to the House on 20 June my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food confirmed that the Government will, if necessary, be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers. It is, however, too early to assess the extent of any losses or compensation.

Radioactivity

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the earliest date on which the three farms on Anglesey which had the highest levels in sheep of radiocaesium could be excluded from the ban on sales; with what frequency he intends to monitor such farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Intensive monitoring of sheep is being concentrated on those areas where previous tests suggest there may be an early opportunity to remove restrictions. We cannot at this stage estimate when particular farms in Anglesey may be derestricted.

Further data relating to radiocaesium levels in lambs within the designated area of Clwyd and Gwynedd between 30 June and 8 July are being published today. Readings from lambs in some parts remain above the action level. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House. Monitoring is continuing and we shall announce further reductions in the area to which restrictions apply as soon as it is possible to do so.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the first date on which notification was given to his Department that lambs had been identified in Cumbria with a level of radioactive caesium in excess of 1000 bequerels/kilogram.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Routine monitoring of radiation levels in lambs by the Minstry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food revealed such levels on 22 May. Our officials were told during the following week.

Leaflets and Forms

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the leaflets, forms and pamphlets which his Department publishes in Welsh or a Welsh/English bilingual format.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Orders in Council (Northern Ireland)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will he will publish a table showing, for the Session 1984-85, in respect of Orders in Council made under section 1(1) of the Northern Ireland Act the time spent on each (a) on the Floor of the House, (b) in Statutory Instruments Committee or (c) in the Northern Ireland Committee, indicating those orders which substantially applied to Northern Ireland legislation already in force in Great Britain or in England and Wales.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested in relation to Orders in Council made under paragraph 1(1) of schedule 1 to the Northern Ireland Act 1974 is as follows:

Title of Order in Council	Time Spent (Hours Minutes)

* Based on Great Britain Bills but significantly changed.
† Substantially similar to Great Britain Bills.

The following orders, made under paragraph 1(1) of schedule 1 to the Northern Ireland Act 1974, were subject to negative resolution. They flow from and are made for purposes corresponding to related Great Britain Acts.

Child Abduction (NI) Order 1985.

Friendly Societies (NI) Order 1985.

Sex Discrimination (Amendment) (NI) Order 1985.

Social Security (NI) Order 1985.

Milk (Cessation of Production) (NI) Order 1985..

Rent (Amendment) (NI) Order 1985.

Health and Social Security (NI) Order 1984 (Order made in 1983/84 session but prayed against in 1984/85 session: 16 minute debate in Standing Committee).

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Mason asked the Lord Privy Seal how many reports were published by the 14 departmental Select Committees during (a) March 1983 to March 1984 and (b) March 1984 to March 1985; and how many of the reports were debated in the House.

Mr. Biffen: The 14 departmental Select Committees published 28 reports in the year to 31 March 1984 and 71 reports in the year to 31 March 1985. Of these reports, 11 were debated on Estimates days and 14 were referred to on the Order Paper as relevant to a debate.

Travel Vouchers

Mr. Spencer asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to provide for the issue of travel vouchers for National Express coaches to hon. Members wishing to travel by long-distance coach rather than by British Rail to their constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: Facilities are available for hon. Members to seek reimbursement from the Fees Office for the cost of travel by long-distance coaches between Westminster, their constituencies and their homes. Consideration will be given to the provision of travel vouchers for use on long-distance coaches if demand warrants it.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of (a) men and (b) women who are classed as category A prisoners as of 1 July.

Mr. Mellor: The present numbers (at 9 July 1986) are 323 adults (including one woman) and four young offenders (all males). A further 122 adults (including three women) are provisionally categorised A.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of (a) male and (b) female prisoners who are subject to the provisions of rule 43, as of 1 July.

Mr. Mellor: The table details the number of sentenced prisoners subject to the provisions of rule 43 as of 1 June 1986, this being the most recent set of data available. The information is based on returns from regional offices and individual establishments.

Prisoners subject to rule 43 on 1 June 1986

Prison (Drugs)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Prison Officers Association on the increase of drugs smuggled into Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We attach much importance, as does the Prison Officers Association to keeping unauthorised drugs out of prison department establishments and we are determined that relevant counter-measures should be taken. Following the production of a report by the POA about the misuse of drugs, the director general of the Prison Service met representatives of the association in October 1984 and broad agreement was reached about a programme of action. The director general reported the outcome of the meeting to my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary who wrote to the general secretary in November 1984 setting out the steps which were being, or were to be, taken. There has been no meeting with the association since then specifically on this subject, although it has featured on the agenda of a number of other meetings with officials, including those of the prison department Whitley council. In July 1985, the prison department extended an invitation to the POA to have a further meeting about drugs. This was not taken up by the association but it remains open to the association to ask for a meeting.

Republic of Ireland (Extradition)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what machinery exists to obtain the return from the Republic of Ireland to the United Kingdom of a suspect for questioning by police in relation to a serious criminal offence committed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The procedure for the return of fugitives to and from the Republic of Ireland is governed by broadly reciprocal legislation under which warrants issued in one jurisdiction may be endorsed and executed in the other. The procedure covers the return of persons accused or convicted of indictable offences, or of offences punishable on summary conviction with six months' imprisonment or more for which there is a corresponding offence under the law of the requested country. Work is in progress under the auspices of the intergovernmental conference on a number of issues relating to this procedure.

Crime Clear-up Rates (Leicester and Brighton)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the respective clear-up rates for all offences in the police divisions covering Leicester and Brighton in each year since 1978.

Mr. Mellor: The information collected centrally relates only to police force areas, and is given in the following table.

Clear-up rate for notifiable offences recorded by the police*

	Leicestershire	Sussex
1978	57	56
1979	54	53
1980	54	50
1981	50	47
1982	46	45
1983	47	40
1984	44	38
1985	45	36

* Offences cleared up as a percentage of the total number of offences recorded by the police.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on co-operation and co-ordination between the Metropolitan and City police company fraud department and the volunteer accounts panel of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in the investigation and detection of fraud cases.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since October 1985 there have been five panels of volunteer accountants, each with a nominated co-ordinator, to help the Metropolitan and City police company fraud department. This arrangement has helped to make investigation more effective.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to (a) the number of City and financial fraud cases in each year since 1979, (b) the total amounts involved and (c) the number of police man-hours devoted to their investigation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Such information as is available is published on page 245 of the Fraud Trials Committee report.

Johnson Matthey Bank

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date of the inquiry by the fraud squad into the Johnson Matthey Bank affair.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that 32 City of London and five metropolitan police officers have spent a substantial period on this operation. To the end of June 1986, the additional cost of equipment and police overtime involved in this inquiry was £124,000. This excludes the additional, cost of overtime incurred by the metropolitan police officers attached to the inquiry.

Strip Searches

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to review the use of strip searches on women prisoners in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Strip searching is a routine security measure, of long standing, to which all prisoners—male and female (and including those on remand) — are subject. We have recently reviewed policy and practice in relation to prison department establishments in England and Wales and are satisfied that strip searching remains essential in the interests of security.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department prints any forms or leaflets in Gaelic or in a Gaelic/English bilingual format.

Mr. Hurd: No. In general the responsibilities of the Home Office south of the border are exercised in Scotland by the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made any arrangements to print information concerning the Data Protection Act in Gaelic.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the proportion of the current total prison population who are serving life sentences.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, 4·6 per cent. of the persons in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 31 May 1986 were serving life sentences, including custody for life and detention during Her Majesty's pleasure or for life under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have been released, on licence, from a life sentence have subsequently been reimprisoned for murder or attempted murder in the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: Eight life sentence prisoners released on licence in the last 10 years, five of whom had been convicted of murder, have subsequently been re-imprisoned for offences of murder.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have been sentenced to life imprisonment have been released on licence in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the numbers of prisoners first released on life licence in the years 1973 to 1983 is published in "Reconviction and Recalls of Life Licensees", Home Office statistical bulletin issue No. 3/85. Sixty-eight persons were first released in 1984 and 66 in 1985 (excluding those who were deported on release).

Prisons

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons are currently being (a) built, or (b) renovated.

Mr. Mellor: Five new establishments are being built. Ten more are at various stages of planning and design. Renovation continues all the time in every prison department establishment. About 100 existing establishments have major capital work either in hand or planned.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional places will be created in those prisons currently being (a) built, or (b) renovated.

Mr. Mellor: About 2,900 additional places will be created in those prisons under construction. The 10 further projects in planning or design will when completed provide about 5,300 places.

About 4,000 places will ultimately be created in existing establishments as part of the ongoing renovation-modernisation programme although work on the particular place producing elements within that programme may not yet in every case have started.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money will have been spent on those prisons currently being (a) built, or (b) renovated by the time they are completed.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated cost of the five new prisons under construction is £118·5 million. The estimated cost of the 10 further projects now at various stages of planning and design is £329·2 million. The estimated cost of renovation, modernisation and redevelopment schemes in the major capital programme (ie schemes costing £30,000 or more) in progress is £450·8 million. Major capital schemes in the forward prison building programme that have not yet started are estimated to cost a further £601·4 million. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of costs in this way for minor capital and building maintenance and repair work, but during this financial year the estimated cost of the former is £2·2 million and of the latter £26·8 million.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number of prisons have been (a) built, or (b) renovated since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1979 five new prisons have been built by the Property Services Agency. Renovation in the form of maintenance and repair, and or refurbishment, modernisation or redevelopment work has taken place at every prison department establishment.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number of additional places have been created through (a) the building and (b) the renovation of prisons since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1979 2,347 additional places have been created in new prisons built by the Property Services Agency and 769 net additional places have been created at existing prison establishments.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent on (a) the building and (b) the renovation of prisons since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: In the financial years 1979-80 to 1985-86 £114·2 million at current prices was spent on new prison building projects undertaken by the Property Services Agency and £399·5 million on renovation-modernisation schemes undertaken by the Home Office Directorate of Works.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the categorisation and allocation of prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: We receive a small number of letters from hon. Members, boards of visitors, the POA and the public about categorisation and allocation in general or in relation to particular establishments and a somewhat larger number of letters or petitions by or on behalf of individual prisoners about their allocation.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the Government guidelines on visits to prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The arrangements for visits to prisoners are set out in section A of prison standing order 5, as amended in November 1981 and March 1986. A copy of SO 5 and the amendments were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding removing Crown immunity from prisons.

Mr. Mellor: None, other than questions from hon. Members on 6 and 27 February and 28 April 1986 — columns 226-27, 661-62 and 301 respectively.

Prisoners' Letters (Censorship)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the censorship of prisoners' letters.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly receive letters from hon. Members, and the Department receives petitions from prisoners and letters from their solicitors, about particular items of prisoners' correspondence or about the general arrangements for controlling such correspondence.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours were worked in each prison's workshops in each year from 1980 to 1985; inclusive.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available and I will be writing to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Western European Union

11. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what new defence initiatives he is proposing within the ambit of the Western European Union.

Mr. Younger: A report on the work of the WEU was placed in the Library at the end of May. The United Kingdom has played a full part in the development of a programme of work for the WEU and, for example, supports the areas of study described in the communiqué of the meeting at ministerial level in Venice on 29-30 April. A copy of this communiqué is also in the Library.

Royal Wedding

15. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what units of the armed forces will be on duty for the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew; and for what purposes.

Mr. Stanley: The members of the armed forces on duty for the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew will be drawn from all three services and from a wide range of units which are as follows. Their duties will principally be ceremonial.

The list referred to is as follows:

Royal Navy
- Commander in Chief Naval Home Command
- Commander in Chief Fleet
- Commandant General Royal Marines
- Flag Officer Plymouth
- Flag Officer Scotland Northern Ireland
- Naval Air Command
- Flag Officer Portsmouth

Army
- Household Division
- Household Cavalry Regiment
- The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery
- Royal Signals
- Coldstream Guards
- Scots Guards
- Irish Guards
- Welsh Guards
- Cheshire Regiment
- Royal Army Medical Corps
- Royal Military Police

Royal Air Force
- RAF Halton
- Central Band of the RAF

Royal Navy

19. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on procurement of capital equipment for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Lee: As I said on 17 June 1986 Official Report column 890 it is our intention within the resources available to us, to modernise our surface and underwater fleets appropriate to the threat.

Racial Discrimination

20. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about alleged racial discrimination in the Army.

Mr. Freeman: Recently, my Department has received seven letters from hon. Members, Members of another place and members of the public. In addition a further seven letters from the public addressed to Her Majesty the Queen have been passed to the Department.

Chemical Weapons

21. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the force goal stating the requirement for modernisation of the United States proportional share of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation chemical deterrent with binary munitions has been formally adopted by the North Atlantic Council.

Mr. Stanley: Since France left the integrated military structure, all Alliance force planning has been conducted by the Defence Planning Committee, which is therefore the competent body for the adoption of NATO force goals. The meeting of the Defence Planning Committee in Ministerial Session on 22 May concluded the process of adopting the NATO Force Goals 1987-1992, including the chemical weapons force goal addressed to the United States.

Strategic Defence Initiative

22. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the papers presented to his officials at the meeting on 19 June in Edinburgh by Dr. Henry Thompson, Jane Hesketh, Professor Robin Milner and Dr. Philip Odor of the University of Edinburgh relating to the feasibility of the strategic defence intiative programme; and what conclusions he has reached.

Mr. Lee: Whilst officials were impressed by the technical content of the papers presented to them on 19 June it remains the Government's policy to support the United States SDI research programme as the means of discovering whether or not a strategic defence system is feasible; and to promote British participation in the research work.

Civil Defence

23. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to present recruitment into the Home Service Force.

Mr. Freeman: At 30 April 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the strength of the Home Service Force was 3,133 against a current establishment of some 4,200. It is growing at a rate of about 60 per month towards the target of about 5,000 by 1990.

Gurkha Regiments

24. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Gurkha regiments.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 329 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-1).

Northern Ireland

25. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the current deployment of security forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: Currently 10 regular battalions and nine battalions of the Ulster Defence Regiment are deployed in Northern Ireland in support of the Royal Ulster constabulary. Additional support is provided by other Army units and elements of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force.

British Nuclear Test

26. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent test of a British nuclear weapon.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) earlier today.

Defence Contracts

27. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he takes to ensure access to defence contracts for new businesses.

Mr. Lee: The MOD is constantly seeking ways to extend access to defence contracts for new businesses. Among the measures to this end which have been introduced recently, or are to be introduced in the near future, are the conclusion of an agreement with the CBI of a Code of Practice regarding competition at the sub-contract level and, shortly, the fortnightly open publication listing major invitations to tender and MOD Contracts. These, and many other measures, for example the booklet "Selling to the MOD", should all assist in opening up defence work to new businesses.

Ulster Defence Regiment

28. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement about the future role of the Ulster Defence Regiment.

Mr. Stanley: The Ulster Defence Regiment makes an indispensable contribution to Army operations in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Northern Ireland. There are no plans to change this role.

Advanced Early Warning System

29. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost of the proposed advanced early warning system.

Mr. Lee: As my hon. Friend knows, we are currently assessing bids from companies competing to meet the United Kingdom Airborne Early Warning requirement. Until our assessment is complete and a decision taken on the way forward, I am unable to say what the cost might be.

RAF (Aircraft Procurement)

30. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give further details of the effect of reduced real levels of future departmental spending upon the procurement of military aircraft for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 30 June 1986 at columns 713-14. As he then made clear, decisions will be taken in the normal way, as they arise.

Nimrod Programme

6. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the future of the Nimrod advanced early warning programme.

Mr. Younger: We have received commercial proposals from seven companies to meet the United Kingdom's need for an airborne early warning system: Airship Industries, Boeing Aerospace Co., GEC Avionics, Grumman International, Lockheed California Co., MEL and Pilatus Britten-Norman. In addition, we have had proposals from the United States Government to supply either of the systems in current United States military service through foreign military sales arrangements. These responses are now being assessed and I hope to make a decision in the autumn.

Small Ship Orders

31. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the result of his consideration of small ship orders which might be accelerated.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has carefully examined the possibility of bringing forward any small ship orders by MOD which would be suitable for bidding by Ailsa yard, but he has found none which could be offered before autumn 1987 at the earliest. A preliminary inquiry has been issued to shipbuilders who may wish to tender for up to four fleet minesweepers.

Willsworthy Shooting Range

32. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for building works at the Willsworthy shooting range within the Dartmoor national park.

Mr. Freeman: We are considering the replacement of the buildings which presently constitute Willsworthy camp. If proposals emerge, we shall of course consult the Dartmoor national park committee.

Type 23 Frigates

33. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the order of type 23 frigate 02.

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence if pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 494, he is yet in a position to announce follow-on orders for type 23 frigates.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member and my learned Friend the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Arms Limitation

34. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with his United States counterpart during his recent visit to Washington in June on the effect of the strategic defence initiative programme on any discussions to limit arms stocks.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend had a very useful discussion with Mr. Weinberger on a wide range of issues. The details are confidential, but I can inform the hon. Member that the Secretary of State reaffirmed our full support on SDI research, which the United States has made clear is in conformity with the ABM treaty. He also reaffirmed our support for the United States positions at the bilateral Geneva negotiations, and our hope that the latest Soviet proposals tabled at these negotiations may mean that the Soviet Union are prepared to enter serious negotiations.

Basic Training Aircraft

35. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the latest estimate of when the new basic training aircraft will complete evaluation trials.

Mr. Lee: The main phase of the MOD evalution trials will be completed prior to delivery of the first aircraft to the RAF which we expect to be in the spring of 1987. Some further trials work will continue for a few months afterwards.

Trident Submarine

36. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to invite inquiries for the second Trident submarine contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Lee: We expect to invite inquiries shortly.

Formaldehyde (Gruinard Island)

37. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Defence what account his Department took of public safety considerations when awarding the contract for the road transportation of formaldehyde to be used in the decontamination of Gruinard island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In selecting a prime contractor for the task of decontaminating Gruinard island the Ministry of Defence took full account of safety considerations, including the proposed methods of handling formaldehyde. The Ministry was not, however, involved in the prime contractor's selection of a sub-contractor to transport the formaldehyde to Gruinard island.

Nuclear Deterrent

38. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the practicability of replacing the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent with a similar level of deterrence by conventional means.

Mr. Stanley: None. There is no practicable means of providing with conventional forces a level of deterrence similar to that provided by the United Kingdom's independent strategic nuclear deterrent.

Western Europe

39. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has given to the Gorbachev proposal to reduce the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Warsaw Pact troop strength in western Europe.

Mr. Younger: We have made clear that we welcome Eastern recognition of long-standing Western concerns about conventional disarmament. While there are a number of questionable elements in the Budapest statement of 11 June — such as the presumption that parity in conventional forces already exists in the whole of Europe — we shall be considering the Eastern ideas carefully, both nationally and in the NATO high level task force. Meanwhile, there is ample time for the Warsaw pact's words to be reflected in a practical and positive way in the negotiations in Vienna and Stockholm.

Drugs Misuse

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of alleged misuse of drugs have been investigated in (i) the Army, (ii) the Royal Navy and (iii) the Royal Air Force in each year since 1979 and in the current year to date; in how many cases in each year in each category any action has been taken against alleged offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: All three services pursue a vigorous and comprehensive programme of education and prevention in relation to drug abuse, supported by appropriate investigative, disciplinary, and administrative procedures where such measures fail. The message conveyed is that drug abuse cannot be tolerated in the Armed Forces and that prohibition will be vigorously enforced. The statistical information requested is as follows:

Notes:

1. The Royal Navy's figures are not directly comparable to those of the other two Services because:
   a. they do not include convictions in civilian courts for which records are not readily available and
   b. the Royal Navy's policy is to try almost all drug cases whilst the other two Services have tended to deal with very minor cases administratively.

2. The RAF figure for 1984 reflects the fact that from the beginning of that year all minor offences have been subject to formal disciplinary action rather than being dealt with administratively as previously.

3. All Royal Navy and RAF figures from 1984 include convictions for monor drug-related offences charged respectively under Section 39 of the Naval Discipline Act or Section 69 of the Air Force Act. The Army does not produce a breakdown of offences charged under Section 69 of the Army Act which is used for a wide variety of misdemeanours and no Section 69 offences are therefore included in the Army's figures.

4. Each case investigated can involve more than one individual.

5. It is not known whether any Royal marines were convicted under the Army Act in 1979; figures for subsequent years include such convictions (three in 1983 and two in 1985).

6. Reliable statistics are not available in respect of investigations in the Army in 1979 and 1980. Positive investigations in the Army relate to cases which, following initial investigation, indicated there was a case to be answered.

7. Figures are not availble for the Royal Air Force in respect of the number of investigations which were acted upon.

8. The figure for individuals convicted in 1984 for the RN/RM differs from that previouly quoted in reply to a question from Lord Boston of Faversham on 14 October 1985 (Vol. 467 col. 464/6). The figure of 44 given on that occasion did not cover the whole calendar year period.

Ethnic Monitoring (Armed Forces)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Commission for Racial Equality code of practice is being taken into account in his review of the feasibility of ethnic monitoring in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 16 June 1986 at column 471.

Payments Policy

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to apply his Department's interim payments policy as between large and small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department's intention in introducing a revised interim payments policy is to provide a greater incentive for contractors, both large and small, to complete their contracts in a timely and satisfactory manner. Nevertheless, the policy will be applied flexibly, and the interim payment arrangements on individual contracts will take into account a number of factors including, where appropriate, the particular interests of small firms.

RAF (Woolwich)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 23 June, Official Report, column 25, if he will list the functions of the Royal Air Force units based at Woolwich.

Mr. Freeman: The air publications and forms store at Woolwich is charged with stocking and the dissemination throughout the Royal Air Force of related RAF publications; the RAF signals unit is responsible for the manufacture and servicing of telecommunications equipment for both aircraft and ground stations; and the RAF movement unit (London) acts as a freight distribution centre for deliveries of RAF priority freight throughout the South East of England.

SCOTLAND

Housing Study Courses

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards housing education in Scotland, in the light of the recommendations in the report of the transbinary town and country planning working group, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; how many postgraduate housing study courses there are in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are three postgraduate housing courses at higher education institutions in Scotland, one of which is offered by Edinburgh College of Art in conjunction with Heriot-Watt university. I shall be considering the future of the course at Edinburgh College of Art in the context of decisions which have yet to be taken in the light of recommendations in the report to which the hon. Member refers.

Patients (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if there has been any change between 1984 and 1985 in the manner in which waiting lists of patients are calculated.

Mr. John MacKay: No.

Patients (Cross-boundary Inflow)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the net cross-boundary inflow of patients into each health board in Scotland in each year since 1978 in total and in each specialty.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that figures for the cross-boundary flow of psychiatric and obstetric patients are not available in the form requested. Figures for the cross-boundary flow of patients by medical specialty could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures for non-psychiatric and non-obstetric patient discharges are as follows:

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters or cards he has now received concerning cuts in the Greater Glasgow health board's services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Over 21,000 representations have been received, nearly all of which are on preprinted postcards. There has been no reduction in the Greater Glasgow health board's financial allocation. Indeed, the board has received an appropriate share of the increased resources which the Government have made available to the Health Service since 1979 and for the current year received an increase of 6·2 per cent. over its allocation last year. Greater Glasgow is now the best-funded board in Scotland. The measures currently being considered by the board to achieve economies in its budget stem from the need to reduce previous over commitments and to redistribute resources according to changing priorities and demands. It is for the board to decide what detailed measures to take in the light of its own priorities.

Dundee Dental Hospital

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to provide a substantive reply to the letter of 11 February 1986 from the hon. Member for Dundee, East on the subject of charges for dental bridgework at Dundee dental hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: I have written today to the hon. Member on this matter and regret that it has taken some time to consider the issues involved.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount of Government support for the Gaelic language in each financial year since 1974-75; what is the amount in 1985-86; what amount has been estimated for 1986-87; and, for each year, if he will divide the total amount into relevant expenditure headings.

Mr. Rifkind: The figures are as follows:

Central Government funding to Gaelic organisations 1974 to 1987

	1974-75 £	1975-76 £	1976-77 £	1977-78 £	1978-79 £	1979-80 £	1980-81 £	1981-82 £	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	Estimate 1986-87 £

n.a. Figures not available.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the leaflets and forms which his Department prints in Gaelic or in an English/Gaelic bilingual format.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will express Government financial support for the Gaelic language in each year since 1974-75 on a per capita Gaelic speaker basis.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: As a rough guide, and excluding Scottish Arts Council expenditure on arts bodies, for all years except 1984-85 and 1985-86 the figures are as follows:

Year	*Amount per Gaelic speaker £
1974-75	0·25
1975-76	0·43
1976-77	0·72
1977-78	1·18
1978-79	1·21
1979-80	1·04
1980-81	1·44
1981-82	1·94
1982-83	2·11
1983-84	3·05
1984-85	4·29
1985-86	6·97
1986-87	†8·00

* The census 1971 Scotland Gaelic report shows that 88,415 of the population can speak, read or write Gaelic. This figure has been used to calculate the amount per Gaelic speaker up to and including 1980-81. From 1981-82 the 1981 census figure of 82,620 Gaelic speakers was used.
† Estimate.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants employed within his Department are Gaelic-speaking; and what proportion of total staff this figure represents.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not maintain comprehensive records of Gaelic speaking staff.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to provide forms for the 1991 census in Gaelic.

Mr. Rifkind: Census forms are prescribed by regulations made under the Census Act 1920, which requires the regulations to be laid before Parliament. There is no legislative provision for forms to be prescribed in Gaelic.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered making it his policy to release press statements, where appropriate, in a bilingual Gaelic-English format.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish information office issues news releases in Gaelic when it is appropriate to do so. Three such texts were released last yeer on behalf of the Scottish Education Department, dealing with a speech by my predecessor at Sabhal Mor Ostaig in Skye, a report by Her Majesty's Inspectorate on Stoneybridge primary school, South Uist, and my reaction to the document "Towards a National Policy for Gaelic" respectively. In each case, the information was also available in English.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate in which regions or other areas of Scotland it is possible for parents to register births, marriages and deaths in the Gaelic language.

Mr. Rifkind: Procedures for registering births, marriages and deaths in Scotland are governed by legislation which makes no provision for the use of Gaelic and all forms are printed solely in English. However, Gaelic names are recorded in the registers.

Information on the number of registrars able to speak Gaelic is not held centrally.

European Bureau for Lesser Spoken Languages

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any permanent liaison has been established between his Department and the European Bureau for Lesser Spoken Languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: An official from the Scottish Education Department attends meetings of the Scottish and United Kingdom committees of the bureau.

The Scottish Committee covers the Gaelic, Scots and Shetlandic languages.

"Management Training for Leisure and Recreation in Scotland"

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the report "Management Training for Leisure and Recreation in Scotland"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I hope the report will be available shortly.

Dounreay Reprocessing Plant (Inquiry)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what would be the estimated cost to his Department of holding a one-day session of the local public inquiry into the proposed reprocessing plant at Dounreay at Lerwick, Shetland.

Mr. Rifkind: The cost to the inquiry reporters unit of holding a one-day session at Lerwick of the inquiry into the proposed reprocessing plant is estimated at about £5,000.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of budget has been allocated to his Department's planning inquiry reporters unit for the local public inquiry into the proposed reprocessing plant at Dounreay; and what proportion has already been spent.

Mr. Rifkind: The unit's costs for the Dounreay inquiry have not been separately budgeted. They will be met from class XVI, vote 21 and contained in the Scottish Office central services budget. The sum already spent is £69,500.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gaelic Language

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his Department's forms and leaflets are printed in Gaelic or in a bilingual Gaelic/English format.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Budget

Mr. Leighton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his statement of 11 July on the exceeding of the budgetary discipline guidelines in the budget in the European Economic Community he will set out the guideline figures, the calculations used to produce it and the multiple by which it has been exceeded.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Customs Officers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs officers have been employed by the Government for each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986]: The number of Customs and Excise officers employed on customs duties at ports, airports and inland premises at 1 April for each year since 1979 is as follows:

	Number
1979	7,591
1980	7,231
1981	7,088
1982	6,861
1983	6,717
1984	6,552
1985	6,715

The comparable figure for 1986 is estimated to be 6,900. The figure provided for on 1 April 1987 is 7,250.

The numbers of preventive officers included in the above table are as follows:

	Number
1979	3,445
1980	3,214
1981	3,027
1982	2,890
1983	2,795
1984	2,721
1985	2,823

The comparable figure for 1986 is estimated to be 3,000. The figure provided for on 1 April 1987 is 3,300. In addition, there are currently 262 specialist drugs investigators.

Scottish Trustees Savings Bank

Mr. Dewar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies expects to reply to the representations from the Scottish Trustees Savings Bank Depositor's Association contained in its letter dated 15 April.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986]: I understand that the Chief Registrar has replied to Mr. Ross.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Donaghadee Road, Ballyharry

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has approved the design of a scheme to realign the Donaghadee road at Ballyharry, Newtownards; at what stage is the planning of this scheme; and if he will make a statement about the future programme.

Mr. Needham: A scheme for this road is presently being re-assessed and this review should be completed in the autumn.

Housing Executive

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to give the Northern Ireland Housing Executive powers to repurchase houses sold to sitting tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has powers under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to purchase houses in order to provide housing accommodation. Houses sold to sitting tenants could be re-purchased under these powers.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive may also repurchase defective houses sold to sitting tenants under part II of the Draft Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 approved by this House on 9 July.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland currently receive board and lodging allowance under supplementary benefit regulations; and what are the figures for the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
December 1981	777
December 1982	1,033
December 1983	1,070
December 1984	1,481
April 1985	1,129
May 1986	2,122

Notes

1. The numbers for 1981-1984 were derived from the Annual Statistical Enquiry and are subject to sampling error; those for April 1985 and May 1986 represent actual counts.
2. The numbers include all categories of boarder claimants.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost per week to the Exchequer of board and lodging allowance for bed and breakfast for a single person in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The estimated average cost is £35·33 per week.

Rented Accommodation (Subsidies)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost per week of rent and any subsidy paid by the Exchequer to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive of a single person's accommodation rented from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: The smallest unit of accommodation now built by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive is designed for two persons, although it may be allocated to a single person. The average weekly rent charged for such one-bedroom accommodation built during 1985-86 is £13·59 while the average weekly economic rent would be £60·28.

Strip Searches (Women Prisoners)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there are any plans to review the use of strip searches on women prisoners in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Strip searches are a normal feature of prison security arrangements used in prisons throughout the United Kingdom. The procedures used in Northern Ireland are similar to those used for many years in comparable prisons in Great Britain. The need for and frequency of searches are kept under close review and I am satisfied that the level of searching women prisoners in Northern Ireland is the minimum consistent with security requirements.

Portadown (Incident)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary about incidents of disorder in Portadown on the weekend of 5 and 6 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary kept my right hon. Friend fully informed of events in Portadown during the weekend of 5 and 6 July. The organisers of the Orange Lodge church parade in Portadown were served by the police with an Order under Article 4(1) of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 imposing a number of conditions. One of those conditions was that the march should remain local in character. When the police sought to prevent that condition being broken at the entrance to Obins street there was an altercation in which stones and other missiles including one petrol bomb were thrown at the police.

There was some further public disorder during the parade caused by hooligan elements from both sides of the community. The parade ended shortly before 3 pm and order was restored. Twenty seven members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and three civilians were injured, one plastic baton round was fired by the police and 4 people were arrested. So far three people have been charged with disorderly behaviour and a number of other persons have been identified with a view to possible prosecutions.

This was a tragic waste of an opportunity for those who wish to march along so-called traditional routes in Portadown to demonstrate their willingness to co-operate with the police in the interests of public order and good relations in the community there.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the 18 complaints, objections and requests for clarification that have been called for by the Irish Government on the Anglo-Irish Agreement as a result of his press interview released on Friday 4 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

WALES

Sheep (Sales Ban)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the biological half-lives of caesium-134 and -137 which he has adopted for planning purposes in connection with the ban on lamb sales in North West Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Activity from radioactive caesium can remain in the tissues of mature animals which have ingested it for a period of between 50 and 100 days although for young animals such as lamb the period is 20 to 30 days.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Advice and Assistance

Mr. John Fraser asked the Attorney-General if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated provision for 1986-87 for net expenditure on legal advice and assistance of £94·4 million showing how that total is anticipated to be spent between the different classes of work covered by legal advice and assistance.

The Attorney-General: Of the £94·4 million, approximately £59 million is for legal advice and assistance—the Green Form scheme—£12 million is for assistance by way of representation—ABWOR—and the remainder for the 24-hour duty solicitor scheme. Within the £59 million for the green form scheme, if the pattern of previous years is followed, roughly 50 per cent. will relate to family matters, 25 per cent. to criminal matters, and 25 per cent. to other civil matters.

Elections (Civil Service)

Mr. Martin asked the Attorney-General what facilities were provided in the Land Registry during working time and on Government premises for the promotion of particular candidates and for the holding of ballots in the recent Civil and Public Services Association elections; on what criteria facilities were granted for particular meetings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registry provided accommodation and paid time off—up to half an hour — for members of the Civil and Public Services Association to attend balloting meetings and cast their votes in the recent elections. Such meetings are held at times which minimise disruption to business and the service to the public.

Within the facilities provided, it is for union representatives to supervise the balloting arrangements in accordance with the union's rules and therefore the Department is not in a position to say whether or not these procedures involve the promotion of particular candidates.

The facilities approved by the Land Registry are consistent with those applied to the rest of the Civil Service and within the terms of the Civil Service national facilities agreement governing trade union activities which reflects the statutory requirements.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falkland Islands Development Corporation

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Falkland Islands Development Corporation since its establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The Falkland Islands Development Corporation — FIDC — has now been fully operational for two years following the inaugural meeting in July 1984. Its second annual report to be published on 17 July 1986 reveals that it has been involved in a wide range of activities funded from its £4 million budget, provided by the Overseas Development Administration — ODA — ranging from small grants for local businesses to substantial commitments for projects such as a market garden, a wool mill, a dairy, tourism facilities and a shopping complex at the new Mount Pleasant airport.

In a short time, the FIDC has established itself as a major force for development in the Falklands. I shall be considering over the next few months what further contributions it would be appropriate to make towards the FIDC's budget, on the basis of the report expected shortly of a joint review of the FIDC's operations by the Falkland Islands Government and ODA representatives.

Aid

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid Britain is giving in the current year to (a) Ghana, (b) Kenya, (c) Nigeria, (d) Tanzania and (e) Uganda.

Mr. Raison: Estimated bilateral aid expenditure in the financial year 1985-86 was:

(a) Ghana	£6 million.
(b) Kenya	£21 million.
(c) Nigeria	£3 million.
(d) Tanzania	£14 million.
(e) Uganda	£3 million.

It is not yet possible to say what the level of aid expenditure will be in the current financial year.

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to reconsider the level of aid to (a) Ghana, (b) Kenya, (c) Nigeria, (d) Tanzania and (e) Uganda in the light of these countries boycotting the Commonwealth Games.

Mr. Raison: The level of our aid to individual countries is kept under regular review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs Offences

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the range of fines, prison sentences and suspended prison sentences imposed for drug offences in Avon for the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1980 to 1984 is given in the following table; corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

Sentences imposed at Avon magistrates courts and Bristol Crown court for offences involving controlled drugs by type of sentence

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been imposed by magistrates in Avon on people for being in the possession of drugs in the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1980 to 1984 is given in the following table: corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

Convictions at Avon magistrates' courts for the offence of unlawful possession of a controlled drug

Custody

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people left custody (a) after serving sentences and (b) after being held in custody before trial or sentence in the most recent convenient year.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated from central records, which are approximate, that about 94,500 sentenced prisoners, including fine defaulters, were released from prison department establishments in England and Wales in 1985. The corresponding figure for discharges of remand prisoners is not available. However, the information published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" on receptions gives an approximate indication of the numbers discharged. Table 2.2 of the latest issue for 1984 — Cmnd. 9622 — shows about 29,500 persons — provisional figures — received on remand in 1984 who were not recorded as having subsequently been received under sentence.

Milton Keynes Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of prisoner it is intended to accommodate at Milton Keynes prison.

Mr. Mellor: Milton Keynes will be a local prison taking the full range of prisoners held in such establishments.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a unit for category A prisoners will be provided at Milton Keynes prison.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present no plans for providing a discrete unit solely for category A prisoners at Milton Keynes, but it is likely that some category A inmates will be accommodated at this prison.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a unit for disruptive prisoners of the kind recommended by the control review committee will be provided at Milton Keynes prison.

Mr. Mellor: The establishment of a unit of the kind recommended by the control review committee is one of the options being considered for this establishment which will not receive its first prisoners until 1992.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are currently in post to deal with City and financial fraud; and how this number compares with the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of officers in the Metropolitan and City police company fraud department engaged in the investigation of company fraud is as follows:—

	Metropolitan Police Officers	City Police Officers	Total
1979	163	46	209
1980	163	46	209
1981	163	46	209
1982	153	46	199
1983	144	53	190
1984	147	53	200
1985	147	53	200
1986	147	53	200

The Metropolitan police manpower increases which my right hon. Friend announced on 20 May should enable the Commissioner to increase the strength of the squad in due course.

Police Helicopter (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many times during the past 12 months a Metropolitan Police helicopter has been used in Newham; what incidents were involved; and what arrests resulted from information received from the helicopter crew.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that between 1 July 1985 and 30 June 1986 the Metropolitan police helicopters carried out 282 assignments in the London borough of Newham. Details could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but the assignments included assisting at scenes of crime and in the search for suspects, traffic management and searching for missing children. A total of 95 arrests resulted from the incidents in which the helicopters were used.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost to the taxpayer of funding provided to the Commission for Racial Equality for the most recent 12-months period for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: In the financial year 1985-86 grant in aid totalling £9,447,322 was paid to the Commission for Racial Equality.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 4 July, concerning the number of accesses to the police national computer, if he will give comparable figures for the year to June 1985 on the same basis.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The total number of accesses in the year to June 1985 was as follows:

Index	Number of Accesses
1. Stolen and Suspect vehicles 2. Vehicle owners	18,774,836
3. Chassis/engine Numbers	886,740
4. Fingerprints	233,219
5. Fingerprints—Scenes of Crime	16,809
6. Criminal Names	1,346,806
7. Wanted/Missing Persons	1,455,335
8. Disqualified Drivers	635,772
9. Convictions	2,802
10. Major Investigations	50,851
There have also been the following joint accesses:
To indices 6 and 7	1,157,537
To indices 6, 7 and 8	5,374,679

Police Forensic Science Services

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 272, he has yet reached any conclusions, following his study of the book "Error of Judgment" by Chris Mullin, about the implications for the efficiency of the police forensic science services of the evidence contained in that book about the preparation of the prosecution case in the trial relating to the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As I mentioned in that reply, I am considering the material in Mr. Mullin's book in the context of my review of the case as a whole. Any wider implications which may emerge will be carefully considered.

Concessionary TV Licence Fee

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the recommendations of the Peacock report regarding pensioners on supplementary benefit and the television licence fee.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Two early-day motions—Nos. 1059 and 1065—have been tabled calling for the implementation of the Peacock committee's recommendation that certain pensioners in receipt of supplementary pension be exempt from the licence fee. One hon. Member has written on behalf of a constituent who opposes the recommendation, and two letters have been received from members of the public, one in favour and one against the recommendation.

Confessions (Write-offs)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for each of the past five years, what was the number of write-offs obtained by Metropolitan police officers from confessions by prisoners serving sentences for other unrelated offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Prison Service (Court Duties)

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what stage has been reached in the scrutiny led by the efficiency unit of the prison service's court duties.

Mr. Hurd: The Lord Chancellor and I have received the scrutiny team's report on court's escorts and we are considering its recommendations. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the progress that has been made in the fight against drugs since the ministerial group on drug abuse was set up two years ago.

Mr. Hurd: The ministerial group on misuse of drugs, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, was set up in July 1984 to supervise the Government's five-point strategy against drug misuse. Since then it has implemented and co-ordinated a wide range of initiatives designed to stifle the supply of and the demand for drugs. The results have been impressive: we have seen more international action, more seizures, more arrests, greater awareness among the general public, and particularly the young, of the dangers of drug misuse, better services for drug misusers, more effective co-operation among service providers at local level, and more community action. Vital new legislation, with all-party support, to confiscate the proceeds of convicted drug traffickers has recently been enacted and will come into effect as soon as possible. I am placing in the Vote Office and the Library a summary of our initiatives and achievements since the group was established. The group has overseen substantial achievements. I pay tribute to the work of its chairman and members, both ministerial and official.

The situation is of course still very serious. Too many people are still willing to take drugs; the quantity of hard drugs available remains far too great. Our attack on drug misuse will be sustained as long as may be necessary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mass Lobby

Mr. Hayward asked the Lord Privy Seal what was the cost and the number of man hours of staff of the Palace of Westminster involved in preparation for, and control of, the mass lobby of the House of Commons which took place on Tuesday 8 July.

Mr. Biffen: Mass lobbies are an accepted and regular feature of parliamentary life at Westminster. The authorities of the House and supporting staff undertake the work involved in preparing for and controlling them as part of their normal duties. It is not therefore possible to quantify the costs in terms of man hours of the mass lobby which occurred on Tuesday 8 July.

Parliamentary Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will provide figures showing the number of (a) statements, (b) private notice questions and (c) applications under Standing Order No. 10 made in each of the past 10 Sessions and to date; if he will show for each Session the highest number of (i) statements, (ii) private notice questions and (iii) applications under Standing Order No. 10 in any one week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested in the first part of the question is as follows:

Session	*Private Notice Questions	*Statements	Standing Order No. 10 applications
1976-77	23	89	44
1977-78	19	93	34
1978-79	23	39	66
1979-80	40	139	83
1980-81	8	78	46
1981-82	9	106	61
1982-83	7	60	48
1983-84	48	132	84
1984-85	26	105	61
1985-86	32	80	60

* Excludes questions or statements about business of the House.

The other information requested is not readily available.

SCOTLAND

Leith Hospital

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future of Leith hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: As part of a wide-ranging review of services aimed at reducing inappropriately and under-used beds and increasing the provision for the elderly, Lothian health board has proposed to withdraw all services except for out-patients from Leith hospital and to provide a new 72-bed hospital mainly for geriatric patients at Leith. The board has sought my right hon. and learned Friend's approval to withdraw services from Leith Hospital and its proposal, along with the comments received during extensive public consultation, is being considered.

Prisons

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many self-inflicted deaths there have been in Scottish prisons since 1979, showing, (a) their location, (b) the numbers under 21 years of age and (c) the numbers of remand prisoners.

Mr. John MacKay: There have been 32 self-inflicted deaths in penal establishments in Scotland since 1979.

(a) the locations are as follows:

1979(3)
Aberdeen Prison
Barlinnie Prison
Edinburgh Prison

1980(1)
Barlinnie Prison

1981(3)
Polmont Borstal Institution
Perth Prison
Edinburgh Prison

1982(3)

1985(6)
Perth Prison
Barlinnie Prison (3)
Glenochil Detention Centre
Glenochil Young Offenders Institution

1986(5)
Perth Prison
Edinburgh Prison
Barlinnie Prison (2)
Cornton Vale Institution

(b) 11 were under 21 years of age (4 of whom were on remand);
12 were adult remand prisoners;
9 were adult convicted prisoners.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report of the committee on alternative regimes in Scottish prisons, set up in 1981, will be published.

Mr. John McKay: The internal working party on alternative regimes was set up in 1983, but has not yet reported. There is no commitment to publication.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage of convicted prisoners currently engaged in (a) sewing mailbags, (b) other work, (c) full-time education and (d) no occupation.

Mr. John MacKay: The position at 31 March 1986, the latest date when figures are available, showed that 7 per cent. of convicted prisoners were engaged in manufacturing and repairing mailbags, 84 per cent. in other productive work, 1 per cent. on full-time education and 8 per cent. were not effectively employed. The 8 per cent. covers prisoners who were awaiting or under punishment, sick disabled or under assessment.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what rules govern the regime for remand prisoners in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The Prison (Scotland) Rules 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 565), in particular rules 108 to 128 and rule 133.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payphones in total are available to prisoners in Scottish prisons; in which prisons they are available; to which categories of prisoner they are available; and if he will ensure they are made available to remand prisoners throughout the Scottish system.

Mr. John MacKay: 32 payphones are available to prisoners in the following establishments:

	Number
Her Majesty's Prison Aberdeen	1
Her Majesty's Prison and Institution Cornton Vale	3
Her Majesty's Prison Dumfries	1
Her Majesty's Prison Dungavel	2
Her Majesty's Prison Edinburgh	7
Her Majesty's Prison Friarton	1
Her Majesty's Prison Greenock	2
Her Majesty's Prison Inverness	1
Her Majesty's Prison Low Moss	2
Her Majesty's Prison Penninghame	1
Her Majesty's Prison Perth	6
Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institution Castle Huntly	1
Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institution and Detention Centre Glenochil	2
Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institution Noranside	1
Her Majesty's Remand Institution Longriggend	1

Access to payphones in these establishments is available to sentenced prisoners in security categories B, C and D.

The question whether remand prisoners might be allowed access to payphones, and if so under what conditions, is under consideration.

Social Welfare Services

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will review the working of section 12 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 in the light of problems faced by claimants and social work departments as a result of disruption of Department of Health and Social Security services, as occurred in the strike in the Strathclyde Department of Health and Social Security region on the afternoon of Friday 20 June.

Mr. John MacKay: The co-operation of regional councils in Scotland in helping to ensure that emergency payments are made to persons when regular social security payments are prevented for any reason is very much appreciated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. As regards the recent problems in Strathclyde region to which the question refers, it is for him to decide what arrangements may be required in any particular circumstances to ensure that emergency payments can be made. Such arrangements do not depend on the making of payments by local authorities under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. The question whether legislation on wider local authority powers needs to be clarified is under consideration.

Macaulay Institute and the Hill Farming Organisation

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make publicly available the report of the steering group on the amalgamation of the Macaulay Institute of Soil Research and the Hill Farming Organisation; and when he will announce his decision on the location of the new institute.

Mr. Rifkind: The steering group report is being made available to interested parties today, and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. I am grateful to the members of the steering group for their careful analysis of the various matters relevant to the establishment of the new institute, including their consideration of the question of its location. There are good arguments for supporting location either in Aberdeen or Edinburgh. I have decided that the interests of agricultural science in Scotland would be best served by locating the new institute in Aberdeen. Of the two sites in Aberdeen which have been appraised, Bucksburn offers greater advantages, and I am asking my officials to initiate action now towards the establishment of the new institute on that site.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science Budget

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the Government's response to the first report from the House of Commons Education, Science and Arts Committee, Session 1984-85 on the future of the science budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have written today to the Chairman of the Committee with the Government's response. It is being published as a White Paper (Cmnd. 9849).

It is important to maintain a healthy and vigorous science base, for the efficiency, competitiveness and innovative capacity of the national economy and for the wider well-being of the United Kingdom. My Department's expenditure on the science base — some £19 yearly for every citizen of the United Kingdom—is only part of the total resources that the nation — Government and the private sector—devotes to research and development. The science community and others who spend the taxpayer's money have a duty to address not only their particular allocation and use of resources and how to get best value for them, but also larger questions. These are: what resources the nation should devote to science; its balance between pure, strategic and applied research; and the choice and selective pursuit of priorities in the national interest. With my Department the University Grants Committee and the universities, the research councils, and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils are considering these matters, setting priorities, developing selectivity, and undertaking redeployment, rationalisation and concentration to ensure greater value for money. This activity must continue. The private sector, where our investment nationally in civil R and D is lagging behind that of our competitors, must also recognise and play its proper part particularly in strategic and applied research and development, and in the identification of future exploitable areas of science. The Committee's report is a welcome stimulus and contribution to informed public discussion of these important matters.

Energy Efficiency Year

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what contribution his Department is making to Energy Efficiency Year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The architects and building branch of the Department is involved in a number of projects which aim to promote energy efficiency in schools and colleges. Three more versions of the computer programme for calculating energy values under the energy requirements for new school buildings were issued in May. The calculation procedure is also demonstrated in the design guide which accompanies BS8207, the new energy head code of the British Standards Institution.

A DES broadsheet describing cost-effective examples of the use of heat pumps in rural schools is due to be published in a few weeks' time. A publication on energy conservation options in upgrading schools with coal-burning boilers is due later this year. A mobile recirculatory fume extraction cabinet which was developed by the Department's laboratories investigation unit is now marketed commercially; it recirculates filtered air back into the laboratory and thus saves energy.

Other current projects which have a bearing on energy efficiency include the monitoring of energy consumption in schools in a sample of 24 local education authorities; a study of ventilation in schools; and the preparation of guidance on the maintenance of heating plant. A research project is also planned on the application of passive solar energy designs to school buildings. As far as the Department itself is concerned, an official has been given energy management responsibility for the buildings occupied by the DES.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report total Government expenditure on schools for the last year for which data are available, together with projections for the next three years at (i) outturn and (ii) real prices; and what proportion of this expenditure was or is expected to be, accounted for by teachers' salaries, including and excluding employers' contributions.

Mr. Dunn: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to public expenditure on schools and so the expenditure by both central Government and local authorities is given in the following table.

*Public expenditure on schools

	Cash (£ million)			1986-87 real terms (£ million)†
	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87

Teachers' salaries‖ as percentage of local authorities institutional recurrent expenditure	69	69	69	69	69	69

Notes

*There are no firm plans for 1987-88. The information is taken from the Government's expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) dated January 1986. The 1984-85 figures are based on the latest returns of outturn expenditure.

†The cash figures for 1984-85 and 1985-86 have been repriced to 1986-87 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

‡Mainly grants for building work at voluntary schools and fees at independent schools.

‖It is not possible to give figures exclusive of employers' contributions to national insurance and superannuation. However, it is estimated that in 1984-85 these elements represented about 15 per cent. of total salary cost.

Education Statistics

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to how many and what percentage of young people in Avon have entered higher education beyond A-level, indicating whether to university, polytechnic or to colleges of higher education, for the past five years;

(2) how many and what percentage of children in Avon have taken the general certificate of education O-level and certificate of secondary education examination, and with what subsequent examination results, for the past five years.

Mr. Dunn: Information for school leavers from maintained schools in Avon is given in the table.

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to how many teachers were employed, and pupils were enrolled in (a) secondary schools and (b) primary schools in the county of Hampshire in each of the last 10 years, and to the teacher-pupil ratio in each case for each year;

(2) what information he has as to the number of children who have taken (a) O-levels and (b) the CSE examination in each of the last 10 years, indicating, the subjects taken and passed, in each of the following areas (a) the borough of Gosport, (b) the borough of Fareham and (c) the county of Hampshire.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many students from Hampshire have been enrolled for (a) university and (b) other further education in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Walden: The following table shows numbers of students normally resident in Hampshire attending universities anywhere in Great Britain and colleges anywhere in England. Data for universities and the public sector before 1976 and 1979 respectively are not readily available.

Teaching Staff (Statistic)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the full-time and full-time equivalent teaching staff employed in schools, non-advanced further education, advanced further education and universities for the last year for which figures are available, together with estimates for the next three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information available is set out in the tables. The first table covers institutions other than universities. It is not possible to make projections for 1987-88 and subsequent years, since levels of local authority current expenditure remain to be determined. The second table covers universities, and gives figures for the most recent year for which they are available. The Department does not make estimates of future levels of university teaching staff members.

† Figures for 1986-87 have been calculated from plans for student numbers and student: staff ratios contained in the 1986 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd, 9702).

‡ The division of total lecturer numbers between maintained sector advanced and non-advanced further education relies on data from the annual monitoring survey of FE institutions. This will not be available for 1985-86 until Autumn 1986, and the figures shown are estimates.

South African Observatory

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that South Africa should not have use of the Science and Engineering Research Council's equipment at the South African astronomical observatory.

Mr. Walden: No.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will terminate all financial support by the Science and Engineering Research Council for astronomers to use the South African astronomical observatory.

Mr. Walden: No.

The interagency agreement by which SERC jointly funded the South African astronomical observatory with the South African Council for Scientific and Industrial Research has been suspended for five years from 1986. Unless the agreement is renewed there will be no guaranteed right of access by United Kingdom astronomers to SAAO, nor guaranteed funding for those who obtain observing time.

However individual United Kingdom astronomers are free to apply to the director SAAO for observing time. If they are successful they may apply to SERC for travel funds to use the SAAO. Such requests will be considered on their scientific merits in competition with other requests to use foreign telescopes.

South Africa (Commonwealth Accord)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the measures which have been taken to discourage such cultural and scientific events as were agreed in the Commonwealth accord on southern Africa adopted on 20 October 1985.

Mr. Walden: The Government are committed to discouraging such events as were agreed in the Commonwealth accord on southern Africa adopted on 20 October 1985. No proposals for such events in my right hon. Friend's area of responsibility have come to his attention.

Howe Dell School, Hatfield

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to make a decision on the future of Howe Dell school in Hatfield.

Mr. Dunn: Hertfordshire county council's proposals to cease to maintain Howe Dell school in Hatfield are being considered: at present further information is awaited from the local education authority. Consideration of the proposals will be completed as quickly as is compatible with a full and careful examination of all the relevant issues.

Medical Students (Manchester)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for the future numbers of medical students in Manchester.

Mr. Walden: The University Grants Committee notified the University of Manchester on 20 May of planning numbers for medical students until 1989-90. These envisaged no change in present intake levels.

DEFENCE

Supplies and Equipment

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the proportion of current defence expenditure which is accounted for by payments of value added tax and excise duties in respect of purchases of supplies and equipment for the armed forces.

Mr. Lee: The effort involved in gathering this information would be disproportionately high. What I can say, however, is that the amount of VAT paid by the Ministry of Defence was 5·3 per cent. of total defence expenditure in the financial year 1985-86.

Mine Detection and Disposal Vehicles

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he anticipates announcing a decision in the competition to provide the Royal Navy with a new generation of remote underwater mine detection and disposal vehicles.

Mr. Lee: Tenders for the remote controlled mine disposal system have been received and are being assessed.

Armed Forces Accommodation (North Yorkshire)

Mrs. Elizabeth Shields asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much armed forces accommodation is currently vacant in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: As at 31 March 1986, the MOD owned a total of 4,314 married quarters in north Yorkshire, of which 840 were vacant. Of these about 20 are surplus to requirements and will be sold.

There is a requirement for the remaining 820, some of which have been allocated for planned deployments, some of which are undergoing works services to make them fit for future deployments and some of which may be demolished and replaced by new quarters. There are no empty barracks.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will terminate the no-visa agreement with South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no present plans to institute a visa requirement for South Africans entering the United Kingdom.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to withdraw his reservations on the recommendations adopted by the United Nations Security Council Committee established under United Nations Security Council resolution 421 of 1977, designed to close existing loopholes in the United Nations mandatory arms embargo on South Africa and seek their adoption by the United Nations Security Council.

Mrs. Chalker: Our position was recorded in paragraph 82 of the report (S-14179) of the United Nations Security Council committee to which the hon. Member refers. This position has not changed.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Mr. Robert Mugabe, Prime Minister of Zimbabwe;

(2) if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with President Kaunda of Zambia.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend's meetings with Presidents Kaunda and Machel and with Prime Minister Mugabe provided an opportunity to explain the commitment of the 12 EC Governments to working for a genuine negotiated settlement in South Africa. My right hon. and learned Friend believes that these discussions increased understanding for his mission and were particularly valuable in preparation for his talks in South Africa next week.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he had with Mr. Shevardnadze about southern Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend gave Mr. Shevardnadze an account of his mission to southern Africa in his capacity as President of the European Council. He made clear to Mr. Shevardnadze our view that the aim should be to persuade the South African Government to create the conditions in which an end to apartheid can be brought about through peaceful negotiations. In order to create these conditions we have impressed on the South African Government the need to release black political leaders and end the ban on black political parties.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency plans have been made with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in case of sanctions against South Africa for the replacement of those minerals currently imported from South Africa indispensable to the United Kingdom economy.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no such plans.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the controls which exist, to enforce the embargo on the imports of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and paramilitary equipment from South Africa, as agreed in the Commonwealth accord on southern Africa adopted on 20 October 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

Under powers provided by the Import of Goods (Control) Order 1954 applications have to be made for specific import licences for any imports of arms or ammunition from South Africa. No arms, ammunition, military vehicles or paramilitary equipment are procured from South Africa for the armed forces.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any controls over the provision by South Africa of licences for the manufacture of military or paramilitary equipment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

No.

Hong Kong

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the state of law and order in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: The overall law and order situation in Hong Kong is good. Hong Kong's reported crime rates are lower than those of most cities of comparable size. The maintenance of law and order is primarily the responsibility of the Royal Hong Kong police force, which has a strength of 25,420 disciplined staff supported by 5,505 civilian staff and 4,847 part-time auxiliaries. Developments in the crime situation are closely monitored by a central fight crime committee, which comprises senior Hong Kong Government officials and community representatives, and by the territory's 19 district crime committees.

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied that the container terminal facilities in Hong Kong are adequate to support its position as one of the leading ports in the world.

Mr. Renton: In 1985 the port of Hong Kong handled over 13,000 ocean-going vessels. Over one third of this traffic was containerised. Hong Kong is the world's third largest container port after New York and Rotterdam, and may be about to overtake the latter. The Kwai Chung container terminals at present comprise six berths with over 2,300 m of quay and 88 hectares of cargo handling area. The Hong Kong Government have drawn up a programme for the phased development of additional terminal facilities. Under the programme 15·5 hectares of seabed are now being reclaimed in order to provide additional back-up facilities. In addition, the Hong Kong Government announced last year that a further 28 hectares of seabed would be reclaimed to provide three additional berths and associated terminal facilities.

Commonwealth Membership (Economic Effects)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his assessment of the economic effects of the United Kingdom's membership of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Eggar: Over the period 1984-85, the countries of the Commonwealth accounted for some 10 per cent. of the United Kingdom's external trade, took 39 per cent. of net new outward investment by United Kingdom companies and contributed 38 per cent. of the earnings from outward direct investment by United Kingdom companies. Over the same period, the United Kingdom ran an annual trade surplus of £1·1 billion with the countries of the Commonwealth.

EMPLOYMENT

College of the Air

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Paymaster General if he will discuss with the Open University the role it can play in establishing the College of the Air; what account he is taking of the Open University's track record and experience in providing such education and training and of the role of the Open University in providing education and training for disabled students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Representatives of the Open University have been involved in discussions about the setting up of a College of the Air. Full weight is being given to the record and experience of the Open University, including the provision made for disabled students.

Restart Programme

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what proportion of people interviewed on the Restart programme are referred to Department of Health and Social Security benefit offices on the grounds that they are earning more than £4 a week.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Tourism

Mr. Batiste asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made in removing obstacles to tourism and improving job prospects in the industry since publication of the Government's report "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs —The Business of Tourism" in July 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have today published a further report entitled "Action for Jobs in Tourism" which provides a detailed review of progress on the action points in "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs" and describes other new developments, either planned or already in progress, which will help to strengthen tourism's contribution to employment generation. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library. It is the Government's intention to publish an annual survey of tourism activities on these lines, complementing the annual reports of the statutory tourist boards.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research and Development

1. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the current level of support from his Department for research and development.

Mr. Channon: My Department plans to spend £415 million in 1986-87 on support for research and development.

Council of Ministers (Presidency)

2. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the objectives which his Department aims to achieve during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers.

Mr. Channon: We will aim to achieve faster progress towards completing the internal market, a successful launch of the new GATT round, better relations wih the United States and Japan, and agreement on a new research and development framework programme for 1987 to 1991.

Privatisation

4. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his latest intentions with regard to the timetable for the privatisation of state-owned industries for which he is responsible.

Mr. Channon: Subject to market conditions, the Government intend to return Rolls-Royce to the private sector during the first half of 1987. Decisions on the method and timing of returning other businesses to the private sector will be announced when they have been taken.

Bankruptcies

11. Mr Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms were declared bankrupt in 1984, 1985 and 1986 to date.

Mr. Howard: Bankruptcies in Great Britain in 1984 and 1985 were 8,521 and 7,074 respectively. Provisionally, there were 3,221 in the first five months of 1986. Unincorporated businesses usually account for between 75 and 80 per cent. of total bankruptcies.

46. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate how many bankruptcies have taken place in the last 12 months.

Mr. Howard: The provisional number of bankruptcies in England and Wales for the period 1 June 1985 to 31 May 1986 is 6,936. The figure includes receiving orders and administration orders.

Manufacturing Trade

19. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the balance in manufacturing trade with the European Economic Community and the rest of the world, respectively, over the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: In the 12 months ending May 1986 there was a crude deficit on manufacturing trade with the rest of the European Community of £10·3 billion. In the same period there was a crude surplus on this trade with the rest of the world of £4·5 billion.

Textile Goods (Tariffs)

20. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action Her Majesty's Government intend to take in the face of the list of tariffs in United Kingdom textile goods outlined in the recent National Economic Development Office report.

Mr. Butcher: In the new GATT round it will be an important objective to secure reductions in tariff and other barriers to exports of textile and other products. In the meantime the Community's mandate for the multi-fibre arrangement negotiations provides for more favourable treatment for those countries which maintain open markets than for those which do not.

Regional Policy

21. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the total sums, at 1979 prices, devoted to regional policy in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Comprehensive figures are available for financial years only. The figures for Great Britain for 1979-80 and 1985-86 at 1979-80 prices are £519 million and £355·5 million respectively.

53. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made in his review of regional policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my recent reply to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross).

South Africa (Export Credit)

22. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the overall value of export credit given to investment in South Africa over the last 12 months.

Mr. Butcher: No new investment insurance liabilities were taken on during this period for South Africa.

EC (Exports)

23. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of exports to other member countries of the European Community in the most recent year for which figures are available; and how this compares with the value in 1978 at constant prices.

Mr. Butcher: In the year to May, United Kingdom exports to the other 11 members of the European Community amounted to £35·5 billion compared to £14·5 billion in 1978. These figures are at current prices. Constant price figures are not available, but a rough estimate of the increase in volume would be about 45 per cent.

Technology Education

24. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to encourage the teaching of technology in schools.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Trade and Industry is actively promoting the teaching of technology in schools through a number of projects. British School Technology provides a teacher training service and supplies buses converted into mobile technology classrooms. The central aim of the science and technology regional organisation network is "to enhance young people's understanding of science, technology, engineering and industry".

Expenditure on these and related activities in 1986-87 will be about £1 million.

British Leyland

25. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the chairman and managing director of British Leyland; and what items will be discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I meet Mr. Day frequently to discuss items of mutual interest.

Regional Policy (North of England)

26. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received proposing changes in regional policy for the north of England.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department has received several representations about regional policy from the north of England since the beginning of the year. In addition Ministers have met hon. Members on a number of occasions to discuss the policy.

US (Investment)

27. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the level of United States investment in the United Kingdom in (a) 1984 and b) 1985; and how many jobs he estimates this investment created or safeguarded.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The total numbers of known decisions to invest in the United Kingdom by companies from the United States were 156 in 1984 and 193 in 1985. The Department estimates that these decisions will lead to the creation or safeguarding of over 50,000 jobs.

British Steel

28. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest profit figures for British Steel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The British Steel Corporation's report and accounts for 1985-86, published last week, show a profit for that year of £76 million, after interest but before exceptional items. This is BSC's best result for over a decade and, as I am sure the whole House will agree, reflects the greatest credit upon the chairmen, board and work force of the corporation.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

29. Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide an up-to-date report on the current state of negotiations on the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Butcher: The European Commission is conducting the negotiations on renewal of the MFA on behalf of the Community in accordance with the mandate approved by the Council of Ministers on 11 March. I am confident that a protocol of extension of the MFA will be negotiated by the end of July, when the present arrangement expires. In parallel the Community has reached provisional agreement with a number of supplier countries on the renewal of bilateral agreements. My hon. Friend the Minister of Trade is keeping in close touch with the industry and other interested parties as the negotiations progress.

33. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My hon. Friend is maintaining close contact with the industry as negotiations progress and receives representations from them on a wide range of points. He has also received representations from the trade unions, the World Development Movement, importers, consumers and local authorities.

37. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My hon. Friend is maintaining close contact with the industry as negotiations progress and receives representations from them on a wide range of points. He has also received representations from the trade unions, the World Development Movement, importers, consumers and local authorities.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provisions European Economic Community negotiators are making in discussions about the multi-fibre arrangements for the possibility that the United States Government may be unable to sign the new multi-fibre arrangement if the Bill to be debated in Congress on 6 August to cut back clothing and textile imports from Third world countries is passed.

Mr. Alan Clark: Negotiations on a renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement will resume in Geneva on 21 July. The United States is playing a full part in the negotiations. I am hopeful that a conclusion acceptable to all parties will be reached.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting on 2 and 3 July in Geneva in relation to the new multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The GATT textiles committee met on 2 July. There is a broad consensus that the MFA should be renewed, but detailed drafting of a new protocol has not yet started. The committee will meet again on 21 July, with the objective of concluding a new protocol before the end of the month.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the anticipated duration of the new multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The duration of renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement is still under discussion. The European Community is seeking an extension for four or five years.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quota growth rates in relation to the multi-fibre arrangement have been incorporated into the agreements so far initialled.

Mr. Alan Clark: The details of provisional agreements between the European Community and supplier countries cannot be publicly disclosed while negotiations with other countries are still in progress. I am satisfied that these provisional agreements adequately safeguard British interests.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what analysis he has had conducted on the number of jobs likely to be lost in the clothing and textile industries of the European Economic Community and of the United Kingdom if the multi-fibre arrangement is renewed on the terms proposed by the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: The last study of the economic effects of the multi-fibre arrangement to be commissioned by the Government was that by Professor Silberston, published in December 1984. A copy is in the Library.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is his intention to seek the inclusion of a clause in the new multi-fibre arrangement to ensure that trade in clothing and textiles will benefit employees in the poorest countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. The European Community, with strong British support, is aiming to ensure that the renewed MFA gives special treatment for the poorest suppliers of textiles and clothing, such as Bangladesh. Employees in these countries can best be helped by providing markets for their goods.

Leyland Vehicles

30. Ms. Jo Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if there is any intention on the part of the BL board to separate Freight Rover from Land Rover within Leyland Vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Land Rover UK Ltd. includes Land Rover Ltd. and Freight Rover. Leyland Vehicles is a separate subsidiary of the Rover Group. The Rover Group has no plans to separate Freight Rover from Land Rover.

39. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the future of Leyland Vehicles.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The board of the Rover Group are considering the bids received for Leyland Bus and my right hon. Friend will make a further statement shortly. The chairman of the Rover Group has stated publicly that he is exploring the possibilities for collaborative and other arrangements with other manufacturers.

Steel Industry

31. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current state of the steel industry.

Mr. Channon: The profits recently announced by the British Steel Corporation together with signs of growing profitability among private sector firms such as Sheerness Steel and Arthur Lee, indicate that the industry is in a better condition now than for some years. The industry still faces major challenges, but the progress made in recent years is most encouraging.

Redundant Steel Workers

32. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the progress of the programme for the re-training of redundant steel workers.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. In appropriate cases, support for redundant steelworkers who wish to be retrained is provided either by the Government, through a scheme jointly funded with the European Coal and Steel Community, or by the British Steel Corporation.

Product Liability

34. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why primary agricultural products are to be excluded from the proposed legislation on product liability.

Mr. Howard: The Directive on product liability was conceived as a measure directed at manufactured or processed goods. It would not be appropriate to extend it to primary, unprocessed agricultural products whose characteristics are different in many ways from industrially produced goods. Primary agricultural products are particularly susceptible to environmental factors outside the farmer's control. Moreover, the mixing of large quantities of bulk agricultural supplies at trade markets would in any event make it very difficult to trace a particular product back to the farmer or other primary producer.

45. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from industry, following his statement of 1 July, Official Report, column 465, on product liability.

Mr. Howard: Since the statement two representations have been received from hon. Members enclosing earlier letters from constituents.

48. Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision he intends to make in the proposed legislation on product liability for compensation for injury or damage caused to consumers by poor quality imported goods.

Mr. Howard: Legislation to implement the EC directive on product liability will make manufacturers and importers of products from outside the Community liable, on an equal footing, for damage caused by defective products they put into circulation. The directive provides that, without prejudice to the liability of a producer, any person who imports into the Community shall be deemed to be a producer.

54. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has yet defined the meaning of misuse to be applied to the proposed legislation implementing the European Community directive on product liability.

Mr. Howard: The implementing legislation has not been drafted, so I cannot yet say precisely what words will be proposed. But we intend to make clear that the safety to be expected of a product should be determined by taking into account the use to which it would be reasonable to expect that the product would be put.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the dates on which each member country of the European Economic Community intends to incorporate the EEC directive on product liability into its domestic law.

Mr. Howard: All states are required to have their implementing legislation in force by July 1988. The precise dates on which they will implement the directive will vary slightly, but it is unlikely that many member states will have their measures in force much before then.

EC (United Kingdom Presidency)

35. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he hopes to achieve during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Community on matters for which he is responsible.

Mr. Channon: We will aim to achieve faster progress towards completing the internal market, a successful launch of the new GATT round, better relations with the United States and Japan, and agreement on a new research and development framework programme for 1987 to 1991.

42. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will detail his objectives during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Economic Community in matters for which he is responsible.

Mr. Channon: We will aim to achieve faster progress towards completing the internal market, a successful launch of the new GATT round, better relations with the United States and Japan, and agreement on a new research and development framework programme for 1987 to 1991.

Unfair Trading Practices

36. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of complaint about unfair trading practices have been referred to his Department's unfair trade unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paul Channon: More than 40 complaints have been referred to the unfair trade unit since 13 May. These have been carefully examined to ensure that, where appropriate, action is taken to remedy the problem.

Blank Audio Tapes

38. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received since his recent White Paper on the proposed levy on blank audio tapes.

Mr. Channon: So far, about 80 written representations have been received on the proposals for a levy on blank audio tape set out in the White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation", Cmnd 9712. Copyright interests have in general supported the introduction of a levy. Representations opposing a levy have come from the Tape Manufacture Group, the National Consumer Council and the Royal Institute for the Blind, among others.

Leyland Bus

40. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current position with regard to bids for Leyland Bus.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The board of The Rover Group is considering the bids received for Leyland Bus and my right hon. Friend will make a further statement shortly. The chairman of The Rover Group has stated publicly that he is exploring the possibilities for collaborative and other arrangements with other manufacturers.

Internal Market (EC)

41. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he intends to take during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Commission about the operation of the internal market.

Mr. Butcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) on 11 July.

Manufactured Goods (Deficit)

43. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the trade deficit in manufactured goods.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend meets the CBI regularly at the National Economic Development Council and on other occasions. At present he has no plans for a separate meeting on this subject.

50. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate the nature and size of the current deficit in the balance of trade in manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: In the three months ended May 1986 there was a deficit of £1 billion.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

44. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to increase the funds available for the services provided by citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Howard: My Department's grants both to the national and scottish associations of citizens' advice bureaux have increased substantially in recent years. In deciding future levels of funding, I will take into account the needs of the two associations and the resources at my disposal.

Sub-post Office Network

47. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the sub-post office network.

Mr. Butcher: Since the beginning of the year, the Department has received some 90 representations on the future of the sub-post office network from hon. Members and members of the public.

EUREKA

49. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his chairmanship of the EUREKA inter-ministerial conference on 30 June.

55. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EUREKA ministerial meeting in London on 30 June.

Mr. Channon: At the third EUREKA ministerial conference on 30 June, Ministers from 18 European countries and a member of the Commission of the European Communities welcomed the accelerating momentum of EUREKA. They announced 62 new EUREKA projects over and above the 10 announced at the second ministerial conference in November 1985, and agreed to set up a small independent secretariat in Brussels under M. Xavier Fels who will serve on secondment from the French Government.

In addition they endorsed procedures for work in EUREKA on collaborative projects and emphasised the need to identify appropiate measures to remove market obstacles to the success of EUREKA projects. They took note of continuing work in EUREKA to encourage management development on a Europewide basis, and on the possible provision of a clearing house for information on sources of venture capital for EUREKA projects.

Iceland, as the last remaining member of EFTA, became a member of EUREKA. The EUREKA chairmanship has now been passed to Sweden.

Shipbuilding (Orders)

51. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current orders for British shipbuilding.

Mr. Peter Morrison: World market conditions remain very depressed, but there are a number of hopeful prospects for new orders for shipbuilding yards in Great Britain. Details are commercially confidential. However, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Dunfermline East (Mr. Brown) on Tuesday 6 May 1986, which listed current orders won by British Shipbuilders since January 1985. As regards Harland and Wolff, the private sector and the warship yards, a number of orders were notified to my Department during the period 1 January 1985-31 May 1986. The list follows. Yesterday, my right hon. Friend announced that he will be planning orders for three type 23 frigates as soon as contract terms have been settled. Two will be built at Yarrow, and one at Swan Hunters.

Consumer Protection

52. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government plan any further initiatives in consumer protection.

Mr. Howard: Initiatives on a wide range of issues of consumer interest are current in hand. The Government intend, as soon as parliamentary time allows, to introduce legislation to establish a general prohibition of misleading price indications, a general safety requirement and provisions to implement the European Community directive on product liability. Before the end of the year I shall be placing before the House draft regulations implementing the recent European Community directive on misleading advertising. Over the coming months I shall also be placing before the House draft regulations on electrical plugs and sockets; the surface temperature of cookers; the safety of gas cookers; on asbestos products; and on unsolicited goods.

My Department has recently issued a consultation document on our proposals for the implementation of the European Community directive on doorstep selling and will shortly be completing a review of the existing legislation on pyramid selling which I expect to result in proposals for strengthening and simplifying that legislation. Next year we will be considering possible changes in the legislation on supply of goods and services which may be necessary when the expected report from the Law Commissions on this subject is received.

A number of consumer issues, including toy safety, a review of the notification system for unsafe projects and a draft directive on consumer credit, are being progressed in the European Community where I shall be chairing a meeting of the Council of Ministers to discuss these and other questions on 29 October.

Anti-Discrimination Measures

56. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the ethnic minority and implementation of the programme of action on women in the Civil Service in relation to staff in his Department.

Mr. Butcher: The Department is participating fully in the phased ethnic monitoring survey being conducted throughout the Civil Service. By the end of 1986 well over half the Department's staff will have been surveyed and the survey of the remainder is planned to be completed by the middle of 1987. Since October 1985 all new entrants to the Department have been invited to participate in the survey.

The Department continues to implement the programme of action for women in the Civil Service. In particular, further efforts are being made to identify posts suitable for part-time and job sharing arrangements; a leaflet has been prepared informing staff how the Department may be able to help those coping with changed domestic responsibilities; and the Department has established a training course for women in management.

Industrial Grants

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account his Department takes of the impact on the health of national and local populations of industrial developments when considering grant applications from private industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Industrial developments for which grant from this Department is sought are subject, like other industrial developments, to the normal range of statutory permissions and controls relevant to health. It would generally be for the companies concerned, together with the relevant authorities, to satisfy themselves that they were in compliance with these controls. This Department would not therefore normally make any separate assessment in this area though where we were aware of potential difficulties we should discuss them with the companies or authorities concerned.

European Trade Marks Office

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the sites considered by Her Majesty's Government for selection as the United Kingdom's candidate for the site of the proposed European Trade Marks Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Government issued a brochure in April giving a short list of four sites—at Harrow, Croydon, St. Katharine-by-the-Tower and Cockspur street by Trafalgar square—from which it is expected that the London candidate for the Community Trade Marks Office will be chosen in the very near future. The short list resulted from a detailed search of the property market during which a substantial number of sites were considered.

Textiles (Turkey)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the recent understanding concluded with clothing and textile manufacturers in Turkey.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community and Turkey have recently signed a voluntary restraint agreement covering a number of sensitive clothing products. Taken together with the corresponding arrangements on textiles which were signed last year, this provides for a comprehensive voluntary restraint regime in respect of textiles and clothing from Turkey. Both VRAs will be monitored carefully by the Commission and by the Government.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of funding provided for trade missions to South Africa and for participation in exhibitions and trade missions in South Africa for the period from November 1985 to June 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: At the time of the agreement reached by Commonwealth Heads of Government in Nassau last October that there should be no Government funding for trade missions to South Africa or for participation in exhibitions or trade fairs in that country, the British Overseas Trade Board was firmly committed to supporting three trade missions visiting South Africa in November and one group of British companies participating in a trade fair in Johannesburg, also in November. The cost of honouring these commitments totalled £40,385. The BOTB has since provided no financial support for either trade missions to South Africa or participation in local trade fairs.

English Estates

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been created by English Estates in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following estimates are arrived at by multiplying the area of premises occupied by the average employment per 1,000 sq m.

The estimated employment arising from new occupations in English Estates premises in each of the last three years

	Liverpool	Merseyside
1983-84	319	1,789
1984-85	298	2,509
1985-86	707	2,303

The estimated total of those employed in all English Estates occupied premises at the end of the financial year

	Liverpool		Merseyside
	Total	Change on previous figure	Total	Change on previous figure
31 March 1983	2,950	—	10,406	—
31 March 1984	2,873	−77	11,793	+1,387
31 March 1985	3,434	+561	13,929	+2,136
31 March 1986	3,753	+391	14,772	+843

Note:

The figures above are estimates of the gross number of jobs housed in English Estates premises. In order to assess the net employment effects of English Estates activities for Merseyside and Liverpool, it would be necessary to estimate the additionality, displacement, supplier effects and local income multipliers associated with these jobs. Estimates of these particular factors are not available for specific sub-regions.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the current English Estates projects on Merseyside at the latest date and the anticipated dates of completion.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Mercury court project which involves the conversion of the previous Liverpool Exchange station and hotel is expected to be ready for letting this November. This involves 29,352 sq m of high quality office space in central Liverpool.

Reclamation of the previous Tate and Lyle sugar refinery is expected to be completed next February. Projects being completed this month comprise a 7,328 sq m factory at Huyton and a 2,359 sq m factory at Wavertree. Projects at the firm planning stage comprise units at Speke — 2,032 sq m — and hi-tech units at Wavertree — 2,583 sq m — expected to be completed in April and July 1987 respectively.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when English Estates expects to complete the Liverpool Exchange station project.

Mr. Peter Morrison: English Estates has completed construction of Mercury court — the previous Liverpool Exchange station and hotel. The fitting-out prior to letting is due for completion this November.

Germany (Visit)

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Germany.

Mr. Channon: I visited Bonn and Munich on 24 June for discussion on a wide range of Community and international issues with Dr. Bangemann the Federal Minister of the Economy and Dr. Franz Josef Strauss, the Bavarian Minister-President. My visit confirmed the continuing closeness of the United Kingdom and German views on the major industrial and trade policy issues.

ENVIRONMENT

New Towns

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the details of each of the advances T1 to T419 included in the New Towns (Extinguishment of Liabilities) Order 1986 with the date when made.

Mr. Tracey: Long-term loans from the Secretary of State have been the principal source of finance for the new towns programme. Individual loans cannot be linked to specific activities or items of expenditure. The advances included in the draft New Towns (Extinguishment of Liabilities) Order 1986 are all 60-year fixed interest annuity loans repayable by half-yearly instalments. Information on the amount of the advance, principal outstanding at 31 August 1986 and interest accrued to 31 August is included in the draft order. Dates on which the initial advance was made are not readily obtainable; the date of the first repayment and the interest rate for each of the loans from T1 to T419 listed in the draft order are as follows:

Opencast Mining

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors he takes into account in considering applications for permission for opencast mining.

Mr. Tracey: All applications are considered on their merits, but my right hon. Friend has regard to the guidance contained in Department of the Environment circular 3/84 "Opencast Coal Mining".

Multiple Occupation

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in relation to the confirmation of compulsory purchase orders on properties which have been subject to a control order as houses in multiple occupation.

Sir George Young: Compulsory purchase orders made under the Housing Acts are considered on their merits. Guidance on the submission of orders is given in appendix L to circular 6/85.

Council Tenants (Co-operatives)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to enable council tenants to receive direct funding from local authorities to form co-operatives on estates where 51 per cent. of the tenants indicate by ballot their preference for local autonomy in terms of allocation, transfers and repairs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Housing and Planning Bill currently before Parliament already contains provisions enabling tenants' associations to require a local authority to consider and give a reasoned response to proposals for the delegation to them of housing management functions. The Bill also gives the Secretary of State power to pay grant to assist new and more responsive, more efficient ways of managing public sector housing.

Dog Licence Fees

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when a decision will be announced regarding the public response to his Department's consultation paper on dog licence fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply of 11 July, what charges are to be made by the London residuary body for the use of County hall by the organisers of the London Marathon.

Mrs. Rumbold: This is a matter for the London residuary body. I understand that, as in previous years, no charge will be made.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the outstanding claims for Government grants on behalf of the Greater London council and now due to the London residuary body.

Mrs. Rumbold: This question could not be answered without disproportionate cost since the information is not held centrally.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests have been made by the London residuary body for borrowing consents since 1 April.

Mrs. Rumbold: The London residuary body wrote to the Department on 8 July raising a number of questions about borrowing in 1986-87. We are considering our response.

Trust for London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment from what source the funds will be drawn to establish the Trust for London in its first year of existence.

Mrs. Rumbold: The grant to the Trust for London will be made by order under section 49 of the Local Government Act 1985 which provides for the making of grants to eligible charities out of money received from the disposal of land by the residuary body.

County Hall (Disposal)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is prepared to allow bids from outside the United Kingdom to be considered by the London residuary body for the disposal of County hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Commercial bids for the disposal of County hall will be considered by the LRB wherever they come from.

Form ACCR 84/5

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures gained from form ACCR 84/5 for each local authority, showing (a) total accumulated capital receipts derived from section 1, column 6, row 5 of the form and (b) cash-backed accumulated capital receipts derived from section 2, column 6, row 6 of the form.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library a table giving the information requested from Forms ACCR 84/85 submitted by local authorities. The table shows (a) total accumulated capital receipts including repayments of loans to housing associations, derived from section 1, column 6, row 5 of the Form; (b) total accumulated receipts excluding repayments of loans to housing associations, derived from section 1, column 6, row 5 less row 1 of the Form; and (c) cash backed accumulated capital receipts derived from section 2, column 6, row 6 of the Form. The totals for the 3 columns, including estimates for the two authorities for whom figures are not yet available, are: £6·7 billion; £6·2 billion and £3·7 billion respectively.

Urban Programme

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the total urban programme for the financial years 1978-79 to 1986-87 (estimated); and if he will list the outturn urban programme grants paid to each partnership, programme and designated authority and the estimated figure for 1986-87, comparing for each authority the level of funding in each year with (a) housing subsidy receivable and (b) block grant.

Mr. Ridley: I will answer this question shortly.

Planning Appeals (St. Albans)

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the percentage of planning appeals to him which were successful (a) in total and (b) expressed as a percentage of the total number of planning applications in the area covered by the St. Albans district council in each of the years from 1983 to 1985.

Mr. Tracey: I will answer this question shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Germany (Ministerial Visit)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the purpose of the recent official visit to the Federal Republic of Germany by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Brent, North (Dr. Boyson).

Dr. Boyson: I made a one-day fact finding visit to gain firsthand experience of German lignite development in the Cologne area. Continuous opencast mining methods have been developed over the last 30 years so that the six lignite fired power stations in this area now provide one third of all West Germany's electricity. The Northern Ireland operation would be much smaller, but there is much we can learn from the German experience. I was impressed by the efficient yet sensitive way in which mining and restoration has taken place and the impact that the cheaply produced electricity is having in encouraging industrial and commercial growth.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the allocation for second contract or overtime payments from education and library boards for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland at present and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The education and library boards meet directly the cost of these payments to full-time lecturers as shown in the table.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the number of full-time youth training programme places allocated to each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland at present and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the number of hours' attendance by part-time youth training programme trainees at each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland at present and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information for the current academic year is not yet available, but figures for the last three years are as follows:

YTS Places

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the number of full-time youth training programme places allocated to each of the Government training centres, youth and community workshops and other providers currently and for each of the past three years.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contribution the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference is making to the reduction of sectarian discord and violence.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much money in additional expenditure has been provided to the Yorkshire regional health authority and the Trent regional health authority over the past seven years under the resource allocation working party formula;

(2) how much money was transferred from regional health authorities in the south-east under the resource allocation working party in each of the past seven years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Information on each region's resource growth from 1978-79 to 1984-85 was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 11 June at columns 219-22.

Single Payments

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what methods are adopted by assessment officers in his Department to comply with the requirements of paragraph 5(3) of single payments circular S36/85.

Mr. Major: It is usually the practice for local offices to make inquiries about the prices at which items of reasonable quality are available at shops in the areas in which their claimants are likely to shop. A list of guide prices based on these enquiries is compiled in accordance with circular S36/85 which offices are advised to keep under regular review: the prices of individual items should be reviewed if at any time it becomes apparent that suitable items are no longer available at the guide price. Adjudication officers are also advised that the guide price should not automatically be used as the maximum for any item and that they should carefully consider reasons put forward by the claimant as to why a higher amount may be appropriate in an individual case.

Unemployed Claimants

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unemployed claimants in Brighton and Leicester, respectively, received help with mortgage interest payments in each year from 1979.

Mr. Major: Information in the form requested is not available.

NHS Patients

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the numbers of (a) in-patients, (b) day cases and (c) out-patients treated in the National Health Service for every year since 1970.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the precise information he seeks. For the numbers of in-patient cases — not patients — and total out-patient attendances. I refer him to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 7 July at columns 67-68. The available information on day cases and new out-patient attendances is given in the table.

N/A Not available

Fraud

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are currently involved in fraud work in Scotland.

Mr. Major: 417 staff have been allocated to undertake fraud work in Scotland in 1986-87.

Hypothermia

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures his Department recommends for the measuring of the body temperature of suspected cases of hypothermia.

Mr. Whitney: The way in which a patient's temperature is ascertained, and the procedure employed, is a matter for the professional judgment of the doctor or nurse concerned. The Department's current professional guidance, which was given in a circular letter—CMO 25/74—issued on 2 December 1974 by the then Chief Medical Officer and Chief Nursing Officer, draws attention to the advisability of taking the deep body temperature with a low reading thermometer where there is a suspicion of hypothermia.

Legionnaires' Disease

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to make Legionnaires' disease a notifiable disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No, as I understand that the present system whereby doctors report cases of legionellosis to the communicable disease surveillance centre via its national surveillance programme is satisfactory.

Organ Donors

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what ways the Chief Medical Officer's proposed voluntary code of practice regarding organ donors differs from the current practice, as laid out in the booklet "Cadaveric Organs for Transplantation", revised edition 1983.

Mr. Whitney: The code of practice "Cadaveric Organs for Transplantation", issued by this Department in 1979, and revised in 1983, is concerned primarily with criteria for establishing brain-death. The Chief Medical Officer wrote earlier this year to the medical profession's representative bodies requesting their views on a voluntary code of practice under which doctors would agree, whenever a patient who was clinically suitable as an organ donor died, to ensure that the relatives were asked for permission for the organs to be removed.

Wellfield Hospital, Hatfield

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will hold discussions with the chairman of the North-West Thames regional health authority to ascertain progress on the construction of a geriatric centre at Wellfield hospital in Hatfield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The scheme to provide additional facilities at Wellfield hospital, Hatfield is fully delegated to North West Thames regional health authority. The region is expected to consider an approval in principle submission for the scheme later this year. Following approval in principle, the region's performance in carrying out the scheme will be monitored by the Department as part of routine management arrangements for health-building schemes.

Queen Elizabeth II Hospital, Welwyn Garden City

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will hold discussion with the chairman of the North-West Thames regional health authority to ascertain progress on the construction of a physiotherapy gymnasium at Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Welwyn Garden City; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The scheme containing the new physiotherapy gymnasium at Queen Elizabeth II hospital, Welwyn Garden City is fully delegated to North West Thames regional health authority. The region's performance in carrying out the scheme is being monitored by the Department as part of routine arrangements for the management of health building schemes. It is expected that competitive tenders for construction will be sought towards the end of this year.

Blind Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the North of England Regional Association for the Blind about the voucher scheme for glasses; what reply is being sent to the association's letter to the Minister with responsibility for the disabled dated 12 June; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The North Regional Association for the Blind was among those consulted on our proposals for the voucher scheme. Its comments, along with all the others received, were fully considered and when final decisions were taken letters were sent to all concerned advising them of the outcome.

The letter of 12 June was on a different subject, the provision of low vision aids. My hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Services replied on 14 July. A copy of that reply has been placed in the Library.

Pharmaceutical Inspection Convention

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what overseas inspections were carried out over the last five years in individual countries covered by the pharmaceutical inspection convention.

Mr. Hayhoe: The pharmaceutical inspection convention arrangements preclude the necessity for overseas inspections. A total of 17 joint inspection training visits have been made in Austria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Portugal and Sweden in the last five years.

Licences (Medical Products)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abridged product licence applications for medical products were received by his Department in 1985; how many product licences were granted in 1985 on the basis of an abridged application; and if he will provide comparable figures for the years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: The total figures for all product licence applications* of all kinds and licences granted for the years 1981-85 are:

	Applications Received*	Licences Granted
1981	1,043	765
1982	1,282	934
1983	1,158	783
1984	922	641
1985	1,365	649

* These figures relate to initial applications received and do not take account of applications which are rejected as incomplete at a later stage.

It is estimated that approximately 98 per cent. of applications received and licences granted relate to abridged applications.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abridged applications for product licences for medical products received by his Department in 1985 remained to be processed at the end of March 1986.

Mr. Hayhoe: Approximately 800.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for exemptions from the need to hold a clinical trial certificate in respect of medical products were received by his Department in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and how many of these applications were dealt with in a period in excess of 35 plus 28 days stipulated in the Medicines (Exemptions from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 164).

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Applications for clinical trial exemption	Number not dealt with within 35 plus 28 days
1981	208	9
1982	232	8
1983	261	9

1985	240	15

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many product licences were issued by his Department in 1985 for new chemical entity medicinal products; and how many new chemical entities were represented in this number of licences.

Mr. Hayhoe: Nineteen product licences were issued in 1985 for medicinal products involving new active substances — formerly referred to as "new chemical entities"; these represented 14 new active substances.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state anonymously the period of time taken to process each product licence application in respect of a new chemical entity medicinal product received by his Department in 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: Of the 67 product licence applications received in 1985 involving such products, there were 16 applications where a product licence was granted in 1985 and the approximate times taken for processing these are shown in the table. The remaining applications are either still under consideration or have been withdrawn — refused.

North-Western Regional Health Authority

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken or will be taking to satisfy himself that the North-Western regional health authority's strategic plan is financially viable and feasible to implement.

Mr. Whitney: A detailed assessment is made of all regional strategic plans. In making that assessment we need to be satisfied about financial viability and feasibility of implementation.

Medical Statistics (Manchester)

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans the North-Western regional health authority has for further acute bed reductions in central Manchester health district;

(2) what has been the effect on waiting lists at the Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital of recent bed reductions.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the implications of the reductions in acute beds in central Manchester as a result of reduced funds for the targets contained in the North-Western regional health authority's strategic plan.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the implications of reductions in acute specialty facilities in central Manchester for access rates to such specialities of residents of that district;

(2) whether the proposed closure of beds at the Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital has been synchronised with the expansion of matching facilities in gaining districts.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the effects on the medical and nursing staff at the Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital of ward closures and withdrawal of funding by the regional health authority.

Mr. Whitney: North Western regional health authority has wide-ranging plans for improving health services in Manchester and across the region as a whole. I suggest right hon. and hon. Members address any detailed inquiries on these plans to the chairman of that authority.

NHS Facilities (Manchester)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the comparable level of the National Health Service facilities in (a) central Manchester and (b) other districts in the Manchester area.

Mr. Whitney: A wide range of statistical information on National Health Service and community facilities at district level is collected by the Department. Details are published in "A Guide to Health and Social Services Statistics" DHSS May 1984, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospitalisation Rates (Patient Transfers)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the implications of steps taken to reduce hospitalisation rates in one district for the hospital treatment of patients from other districts.

Mr. Whitney: This will depend upon the steps taken and the local situation, and is a matter for the regional and district health authorities concerned.

Hospital Facilities (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been treated over the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available in each of those wards in Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital planned for closure over the next three years; and what alternative facilities will be made available if such wards are closed.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many wards are planned for closure at the Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital in the next three years; which specialities will be affected by these ward closures; and how many beds will be reduced in each of those specialties.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money the closure of wards will release at the Manchester royal infirmary and St. Mary's hospital; and what will be done with this money.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the degree of public consultation on and the public response to the proposed reductions in central Manchester's acute beds.

Mr. Whitney: Work has just begun on a major redevelopment of the Manchester royal infirmary which will affect the pattern of care in the district. Right hon. and hon. Members may wish to address their detailed inquiries on the consequences of this development and consultation arrangements to the chairman of Central Manchester health authority.

University of Manchester Medical School

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effects the additional reductions in acute beds will have on the training of undergraduate medical students at the university of Manchester medical school.

Mr. Whitney: None.

Acute Hospital Services

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a cost-benefit analysis is normally undertaken by health authorities prior to the publication of proposals for the reduction of acute services.

Mr. Whitney: This is a matter for local decision, but the Department expects health authorities to take full account of both needs and available resources in considering changes in service provision.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Warley, East constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department over the same period.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Thurrock in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change that represents;

(2) what was the percentage change in (a) staff handling supplementary benefit and (b) all staff at the local offices of his Department in Thurrock over the same period.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Family Income Supplement

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average family income supplement payment made to (a) couples, (b) single parents and (c) other family income recipients.

Mr. Major: At the end of March 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the average weekly payments made to families receiving family income supplement were:

	Average weekly payment £
2-parent families	12·60
1-parent families	14·20
All families	13·30

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make an official response on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the London ambulance service in the light of the facts and arguments presented in the joint union publication, Ambulance Alert, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Whitney: We have not yet received a copy of the publication. When we do receive it we will consider it and make any comments known in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long it takes on average between the sampling of lambs for the purpose of establishing the level of radioactivity and the time when the results of these samples are known to his Department's officials; and what was the longest delay in obtaining such results in the period since 1 May.

Mr. Jopling: The time between obtaining samples and the results becoming known to my officials range generally from three to seven days depending on the pressure of work at the laboratories and their location in relation to the sampling area.

It would take a disproportionate amount of time to obtain the information requested in the second part of the question since information appropriate to each sample would have to be examined.

Grouse

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether checks for radioactivity will be carried out on grouse shot and intended for human consumption after 12 August.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department is making arrangements for tests to be carried out on grouse.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 14 and 15 July.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting which was chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The main topic considered by the Council was the level of access for New Zealand butter to the United Kingdom market after present arrangements expire at the end of 1986. The Government regard the Commission's proposal, for quantities of 77,000 tonnes in 1987 and 75,000 tonnes in 1988, as consistent with the arrangements agreed when the United Kingdom joined the Community and with subsequent undertakings by Heads of Government. Moreover, all except one member state had been prepared to suport these figures when formerly proposed by the Commission in 1983.

On this occasion the proposal was acceptable to 11 member states, this despite the fact that farmers throughout the Community just as in Britain, have had their production cut back because of the dairy surplus. Only the Irish could not support the proposal and the Foreign Affairs Council next week will consider it further.

The Council had a discussion on the Commission's proposal for changes in the support system for beef, which had been left for later decision during the farm price negotiations last April. They also considered for the first time the set of proposals for socio-structural measures, which the House debated on Tuesday 8 July. There was considerable divergence of views on both matters and the Council will need to return to them at later meetings.

The council also adopted a number of measures. One concerned the setting up of a register of vine producers and another provided aid for the restructuring of vine-growing in Portugal, parallel to arrangements already made for other member states. These mark new stages in the Community's increasingly successful policy to reduce the wine surplus. Other regulations adopted by the Council dealt with inward processing arrangements in the milk sector, a minor amendment to the mechanism governing trade with Spain, and the treatment of raw cane sugar produced in the overseas departments of France.

ENERGY

Deaths and Injuries

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the numbers of deaths and injuries recorded in the last five years during the production of energy from (a) coal, (b) oil, (c) electricity, (d) hydro-electric sources, (e) nuclear and (f) other in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply. Information is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The available information for deaths and injuries reported to the Health and Safety Executive, arising from the production of energy in Great Britain is shown in the following table:

	Electricity industry		Gas industry
	Deaths	Major industries*	Deaths	Major industries*
1981	6	103	0	46
1982	10	96	1	43
1983	4	105	1	32

†1985	4	119	16	47

* As defined under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1980.
† Provisional.

For information on the coal mining and nuclear industry I would refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend gave to a question by the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Sir David Price) on 12 May, columns 340-41.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the present level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is a fairly steady flow of representations; some are in favour of higher, and some in favour of lower, interest rates.

Intermediate Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the output of intermediate goods, less oil, and so on, given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Grimsby on 14 July 1980, Official Report, column 413.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986]: The figures requested are shown in the following table:

*Index of output of the production industries intermediate goods industries excluding oil, gas, electricity and water industries
1980 = 100

	Not stock adjusted†	Stock adjusted†
1969	118·5	—

* The oil, gas, electricity and water industries comprising classes 13, 14, 16 and 17 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980, which are part of the "Intermediate goods industries" category published in the Monthly Digest of Statistics, have been excluded from this table.
† Since the index of production was rebased in 1983, the estimates have included an adjustment for changes in stocks to compensate for the use of sales indicators.

CIVIL SERVICE

Political Activities

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will define the precise terms of the restrictions on political activities which apply to civil servants; and which restrictions apply to which grade.

Mr. Luce: The rules governing the political activities of civil servants are set out in the "Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code", paragraphs 9923 to 9957, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Primary Route Network

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the updating of the primary route network will begin following the recent review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A plan for updating the network has been produced by the Department after extensive consultations with the local highway authorities. The changes will be implemented over the next four years.

The primary route network of main roads, which are specially signed by green-backed direction signs, provides the best routes for long-distance journeys or parts of journeys which cannot be made on motorways.

The green-backed signs were first introduced in the 1960s and are widely recognised and followed by drivers. Since that time, many miles of motorway have been built but the primary route network is still essential to provide effective through routes linked with the motorways and covering all parts of the country.

More than 20 years of improvements to our roads and the changing demands on our road network to cater for increases in traffic and changes in the location of people and activities have made it necessary to bring the primary route network up to date.

The network will continue to be kept under review and further changes will be made as and when required.

Airports Act 1986

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the implementation of part I of the Airports Act 1986.

Mr. Moore: I have now approved the British Airport Authority's proposals for reorganisation, submitted under section 1 of the Airports Act 1986, together with a scheme for the transfer of property, rights and liabilities to the subsidiary companies.

In line with Government commitments, a separate subsidiary company will be established to operate each of the BAA's seven airports. There will also be an intermediate holding company in Scotland. Group services will be supplied by a division of the main BAA holding company, which will charge for its services on a commercial basis. The restructuring will take effect on 31 July 1986.

Copies of the proposals and scheme have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I have also today published orders under section 2 of the Airports Act 1986 appointing 1 August 1986 as the day on which the British Airports Authority will be dissolved and its business vested in a successor company. The name of the company which I have nominated by order for this purpose is BAA plc.

Immediately before the appointed day—1 August—the BAA's loans from the National Loans Fund, totalling £43,503,340, will be written off by virtue of section 3 of the Airports Act 1986. I shall require BAA plc to issue loan-notes of equivalent value to me on the appointed day. I shall direct BAA plc to issue further securities to me, under the powers in section 4 of the Act, nearer to the time of flotation.

M4 (Service Area)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to provide an additional service area on the M4 near Reading.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We accept the need for a service area on the M4 between its junction with the M25 and the existing area at Membury. Consultants have been asked to carry out a comprehensive search for potential sites.

Heathrow Airport (Traffic)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the total road traffic flows per day into Heathrow airport, (b) the proportion of this traffic which originated its journey in central London and (c) the proportion of daily traffic flows on the A4 Cromwell road/Talgarth road which is travelling to and from Heathrow airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The best information presently available suggests that some 60,000 vehicles enter Heathrow airport each day. About 9 per cent. start their journeys in central London. Around 8 per cent. of the traffic on the A4 east of the Chiswick flyover is travelling to and from Heathrow.

Liverpool Freeport

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the working of the Liverpool freeport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: It is too early to say precisely what the full benefits of the freeport will be, but I found the remarks of the chairman of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company in the 1985 report and accounts most encouraging.

M25

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to make a statement about the possibility of widening certain sections of the M25;

(2) when he expects to receive the report from Brian Colquhoun & Partners on traffic forecasts for the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The report has just been received. We hope to make an announcement when we have decided what measures to take.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 17 July 1986

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984

Mr. Coombs asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the working of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984.

The Attorney-General: The working of those provisions of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 which have been brought into force has been satisfactory.

HOME DEPARTMENT

House of Commons (Mass Lobby)

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the cost and the number of police man hours involved in the arrangements for, and policing of, the mass lobby of the House of Commons which took place on Tuesday 8 July.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that policing the mass lobby of the House of Commons on 8 July involved 196·5 police man hours. No overtime was necessary and no additional costs were incurred by the Metropolitan police on the event.

Metropolitan Police (N Division)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of incidents of racial harassment and threat reported to N division of the Metropolitan police at Highbury vale and Holloway in the current year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Twenty.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of racially oriented crime have been reported in 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and each month of the current year in N division of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The numbers of reported racial incidents in N division are as follows:

	Number
1982	31
1983	34
1984	71
1985	73
1986
January	8
February	5

June	10

Firearms

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the reasons for the recent actions of the chairman of the firearms steering group with regard to the possession of part 5 weapons by part 1 firearms certificate holders.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the Chief Constable of Merseyside has circulated to other chief officers of police, for their information, a copy of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of R v Clarke, in which the court dismissed an appeal against conviction under section 5(1)(a) of the Firearms Act 1968.

Courthouse, Basildon

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the need for a new magistrates' courthouse in Basildon.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. We are expecting to hear shortly from Essex county council which is responsible in consultation with the Magistrates' Courts Committee, for providing the new magistrates' courthouse.

Police Authorities

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the operation of those new police authorities formed in those areas covered by the recently abolished metropolitan counties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police joint authorities established by the Local Government Act 1985 took up their responsibilities as police authorities under the Police Act 1964 on 1 April and are discharging their functions in accordance with the establishment and support services schemes which my right hon. Friend has approved for each for 1986-87.

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role is being played by specialist units of the Metropolitan police in investigations into the conduct of Mr. John Stalker of the Greater Manchester police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The conduct of the investigation into allegations against Mr. John Stalker is entirely a matter for the Chief Constable of West Yorkshire acting under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority.

Hazardous Substances (Road Transport)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers received hospital treatment following leakage of ethyl mercaptan from a container being transported between Fawley and Reigate on 10 July; and how many police officers in England and Wales have received hospital treatment after inhaling toxic substances being transported by road in the last 12 months for which figures are available;

(2) how many fire officers have received hospital treatment after inhaling toxic substances being transported by road in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that four police officers received hospital treatment as a result of this incident. Information is not centrally available about the numbers of police or fire officers who have received hospital treatment as a result of similar incidents.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change in real terms between 1979 and 1986 in (a) the cost of a firearms certificate, (b) the revenue derived from firearms certificates and (c) the cost of administering the firearms certificate system; how many certificates were issued in 1979 and in the last period of 12 months for which figures are available, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1986, c. 62]: The information is as follows:

(i) Cost of a firearms certificate[1]

	1979	[2]1986	[3]Change in real terms
	£	£	per cent.
Issue	16	25	−9·5

[4] Estimated figures based on a sample survey of police forces.

[5] Estimated figures based on procedures recommended in the 1984 working party report on the administration of the Firearms Act 1968.

[6] In 1985 the numbers of firearm certificates issued and renewed were 11,663 and 44,212 respectively. Equivalent figures are not available for 1979.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka Refugees (India)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and other assistance the United Kingdom is providing for Sri Lankan refugees in India.

Mr. Eggar: Under the joint funding scheme we have provided £7,557 to Christian Aid for vocational training of Sri Lankan refugees in the Mandapam refugee camp at Madurai in Tamil Nadu.

Gibraltar Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the annual management fee now paid to Appledore for running Gibraltar dockyard;

(2) if he will list all the payments that have been made to Appledore for running Gibraltar dockyard since it took over its management.

Mr. Eggar: Publication of such information is a matter for Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited—GSL—and its owner the Gibraltar Government. Appledore's management agreement with GSL became effective on 1 January 1985.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the profit and loss account for Gibraltar dockyard since Appledore took over.

Mr. Eggar: The 1984 Accounts of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited—GSL—have been published by GSL. I shall seek to make a copy of these accounts available to the House of Commons Library. The publication of GSL's accounts for 1985 is a matter for GSL and its owner, the Gibraltar Government.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Domestic Plugs and Sockets

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he anticipates that the draft regulations concerning the safety of domestic plugs and sockets will come into effect.

Mr. Howard: We intend to submit the draft Plug and Socket Regulations to Parliament early next Session. The general provisions of the new regulations will apply as soon as parliamentary approval is obtained. This includes meeting the requirements of the relevant safety standards for all products within the scope of the new regulations, except that 13-amp plugs will not have to conform to certain amendments to BS 1363 until six months later. A further period of grace will be allowed for manufacturers to adapt to the mandatory approval scheme for 13-amp plugs. This scheme will come into force 12 months from the date the regulations are made.

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he intends to introduce to assist small manufacturers with the cost of complying with the proposed plug and socket safety regulations.

Mr. Howard: No such assistance is necessary. These regulations will formalise safety practices already observed by most manufacturers in the United Kingdom. The only additional cost would be that of gaining the mandatory approval which will be required by the new regulations, for 13-amp plugs only. This would be insignificant.

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he intends to take to ensure that the proposed plug and socket safety regulations are effectively applied to imported goods.

Mr. Howard: The proposed new regulations will apply to imports as well as to home manufactures. In addition, the Consumer Safety (Amendment) Act 1986 gives enforcement agencies new and more effective powers to identify unsafe imported consumer goods and prevent them from reaching the shops.

South Africa

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the extent of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for exports to South Africa in each of the years 1974 to 1979; if such cover is still available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The ECGD has historically insured a substantial proportion of United Kingdom exports to South Africa, but it has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details of exposure on individual markets as such action could be detrimental to ECGD's commercial interests. Cover remains available within ceilings on individual contract values and overall exposure.

As with all markets, ECGD maintains a continuous review of developments, but no changes in cover arrangements for South Africa are proposed.

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes have taken place in the policy of his Department on trade with South Africa since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department's policy on non-military trade with South Africa remains fundamentally unchanged. We continue to believe that civil trade with other countries, including South Africa, should be determined by commercial considerations, not by the character of the Government of those countries.

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many trade missions to South Africa took place in each of the years 1974 to 1979; and what was their cost to public funds.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of outward missions financially supported by the British Overseas Trade Board —BOTB—that visited South Africa in each of the years 1974-9, and their cost to BOTB was:

	Missions	Cost £
1974	17	72,000
1975	15	79,200
1976	17	72,000
1977	17	67,550
1978	12	52,725
1979	14	67,620

I have no information on the number or cost of United Kingdom trade missions that visited South Africa without BOTB support in the above period.

GEC-Plessey (Merger)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to make a statement on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the proposed merger of the General Electric Company and Plessey.

Mr. Howard: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission are due to report to my right hon. Friend by 19 July. My right hon. Friend will make an announcement on the report as soon as is practicable.

Indonesia (Soft Loans)

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in establishing a soft loan facility to assist United Kingdom companies pursuing project business in Indonesia.

Mr. Channon: I am pleased to announce that a concessional loan facility for Indonesia has now been finalised. It will support contracts for United Kingdom exports, against identified projects, to a value of some £140 million over the next three years. This was agreed in a memorandum of understanding which was signed between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Republic of Indonesia in Jakarta on 16 July 1986. I very much hope that valuable contracts currently being negotiated by United Kingdom companies in relation to agreed projects can soon be finalised, and thereby bring real economic benefits to both our countries.

ENERGY

Windscale

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give an explanation for the delay between 1952 and February 1985 in reporting the release of radioactive iodine 131 from the plutonium reprocessing plant at Windscale.

Mr. Goodlad: Operations at Windscale in 1952 were conducted for defence purposes by the then Ministry of Supply. I am advised by British Nuclear Fuels that the report of this incident, which came to light in February 1985, shows that the levels of radioactive iodine released in the spring and summer of 1952 were such that any health risk would have been small. As regards the reasons why this information was not made public at the time, I cannot, of course, answer for the actions of a previous Administration.

Coal-burning Power Stations (Emission)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the volume of uranium and uranium by-products released into the atmosphere by the processes of coal-burning power stations; what is the resulting level of radiation; and how these compare with the level of emissions from nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: The National Radiological Protection Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board have estimated that radioactive emissions to the atmosphere from United Kingdom coal-fired power stations due to uranium, thorium and potassium amount to about 100 giga-bacquerels pergigawatt-year of electricity generated. The collective committed effective dose equivalent for the United Kingdom population from United Kingdom coal-fired power stations in 1983-84 — which supplied 21·3 gigawatt-years of electricity — was about 100 mansieverts. The atmospheric emissions from nuclear power stations — which supplied 4·6 gigawatt-years — gave a collective dose of about 10 mansieverts. For comparison, the annual collective dose from the natural background is 100,000 mansieverts. The radiation dose from all normal operations of the nuclear industry, including fuel reprocessing, amounts to only about one part in a thousand of the natural background.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions nuclear materials (a) produced for, or (b) assigned to, military purposes have been transferred to civil use for each year since 1956; and if he will state whether each transfer was (i) permanent, or (ii) a loan, and, for each instance, the nuclear material involved, the chemical form it was in when it was transferred, the physical form it was in when transferred, the site it was transferred to, the purpose for which it was destined and the quantity involved in each sub-category above, respectively.

Mr. Goodlad: This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the percentage of electricity generated in each European Community state by coal, nuclear, oil, hydro, wind or other sources providing more than 1 per cent. of national electricity output.

Mr. Goodlad: Information about electricity generation in the Community is contained in the European Commission's regular publications, "Eurostat Statistical Yearbook" and "Energy Monthly Statistics". Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The latest available information, based on these sources, is summarised in the following table:

EEC: Percentages of total net electricity production for each energy source*

River Barrages

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Energy to what extent in his studies of the energy potential of barrages across major estuaries he has included consideration of the likely impact of such barrages on wading birds, and, in particular, the redshank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Severn tidal power group has included in its recent report a preliminary examination of the environmental impact of a tidal barrage in the Severn estuary. This report has now been published and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Before a decision is taken on the construction of a barrage in any estuary in the United Kingdom, a full environmental study on that estuary would be necessary.

British Gas Consumers

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assurances he has received from the British Gas Corporation about the future quality of service to domestic gas consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received a letter from Sir Denis Rooke, the text of which is as follows:

Dear Peter

CUSTOMER BENEFITS UNDER ESSENTIAL SERVICE

In the light of the importance which British Gas attaches to the maintenance of a safe and efficient gas supply service in Great Britain, and the various comments which have been made in Parliament and elsewhere about the effect of Privatisation on gas safety and our attitude to the provision of service to our customers, I would like to make clear that it is our intention, so long as the system of price control set out in the published draft Authorisation remains in force, to continue to provide services for our domestic customers on the basis set out below.

1. For Emergency Service, up to thirty minutes work or the time taken to make safe whichever is the longer will be provided free of charge. Parts to the value of £2·50 will be provided free, but where the value exceeds £2·50 the full amount will be charged.

2. The target for attending gas escapes will be within 1 hour of receipt of report where the escape has not been controlled, or 2 hours where the escape has been controlled, for example, where the customer's control tap has been turned off.

3. The normal target for inspecting appliances needing repair as opposed to routine servicing will be to attend within two working days. However, it may not always be possible to achieve this target during periods of extended inclement weather and peak demands. In such circumstances priority will be given to the aged and the infirm, and to customers without heating.

4. A free safety check on appliances and installations will be provided on request for elderly or disabled persons living alone.

5. A range of safety services at special prices will continue to be provided. The nature and direction of these will be reviewed from time to time in the light of circumstances and experience. Currently a gas fire safety check at £5·85 and a basic inspection check on the house pipes and one appliance are provided. The basic inspection check is currently priced at £11·39 together with a London weighting supplement where appropriate. A range of special controls for disabled or visually handicapped customers' appliances is available at a current price of £2·53 each (including fixing).

6. Work on customers' appliances and installations treated as Essential Service for the purpose of our accounts, that is to say, remedial and other services provided to customers in furtherance of the safe or proper use of gas or gas fittings, will continue to be priced in accordance with our policy of encouraging customers to report faults and potentially dangerous situations. We will aim not to increase the present charges for these services by more than the rate of inflation. Charges will be notified annually to the Gas Consumers' Council.

7. The prices quoted above include VAT at 15 per cent.

This assurance is given on behalf of the Corporation and it is our intention that it will be renewed by the Board of the successor company after vesting.

Yours ever

Denis

SCOTLAND

Tertiary Education (Report)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet decided his response to the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's report on a future strategy for higher education in Scotland, published on Monday 9 December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have considered the advisory council's report with very great care, in the light of the views expressed during public consultations earlier this year, and have reached the following decisions.

The council notes that population trends will be of crucial importance to higher education policy-making for the 1990s and has no doubt about the basic demographic projections. I acknowledge its endorsement of the high variant of the projections published by the Scottish Education Department in November 1985 as a reasonable assessment of future demand for higher education, but accept that the projections should be regularly reviewed. I understand the concern expressed by the council and others about the possible effects of population trends on the supply of qualified manpower. The council's proposals in this regard require a response by higher education institutions as well as Government.

The Government note the council's recommendation that all reasonable steps should be taken to encourage greater participation in higher education, particularly from groups where participation is low. The Government stand by the principle of access to higher education for all those who have the motivation, maturity and intellectual competence to benefit from it; and its projections allow for a rise in participation. The report recognises that curriculum reforms at school level have a role to play in this. It is to be hoped that a stable settlement of salaries and conditions within the teaching profession will soon allow us to reap the full benefit of the advances which are being made.

I share the Council's view that recognition of the national certificate is a means by which access to higher education can be extended. The Government's commitment to the national certificate is firm and I ask those who are responsible for setting entry standards to higher education to heed the council's comments. I also urge higher education institutions and validating bodies to respond to the recommendation that formal arrangements for credit transfer should be extended, and to consider what can be done to reduce non-completion rates. This may require a careful examination of course content, methods of assessment and quality of teaching.

The council acknowledges the role of continuing education in maintaining the supply of qualified manpower and in updating skills. Its emphasis on post-experience vocational education and the development of multi-institutional links to build on individual institutions' strengths is welcome. I accept the need for a focus for continuing education in the Scottish Education Department and have taken action accordingly. Responsibility for the co-ordination of continuing education policy is now focused in the division with general responsibility for vocational education. As a first step in the direction proposed by the council we have also established a Scottish scheme for professional, industrial and commercial updating—PICKUP—on a pilot basis in the current year. This was announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for industry and education on Tuesday 8 July 1986.

The taxpayer cannot however be expected to meet the costs of higher education for mature entrants or for those engaged in professional updating to the extent that is appropriate for young initial entrants, and the Government agree that more employers should meet the cost of fees. It is entirely appropriate that they should also provide support through sponsorship, as the council suggests, and in other ways. However, employers' responsibilities do not end there. If the higher education system is to respond to future economic requirements, industry, commerce and the professions must state their requirements; and the Government welcome the recommendation that they should co-operate more fully with higher education institutions in course design and delivery. Co-operation is a two-way process. Although there is some concern in academic circles about higher education becoming too closely linked with the short-term needs of industry and commerce, the Government share the council's belief that improved responsiveness to such needs is not incompatible with preserving a broadly based system.

An adequate response will require a sufficient supply of manpower with the qualifications to meet future technological challenges. The council acknowledges the steps which the Government have taken in this regard through its "Switch to Technology" programmes in the universities and the Scottish central institutions. I have already assured the central institutions that the additional resources provided under "Switch" will be consolidated in their recurrent grant baselines after 1987-88.

The "Switch" programmes constitute substantial new investment in the higher education system; if that investment is to be repaid, an adequate supply of school leavers qualified for entry to technological courses is essential. The council recognises this and the Government will continue their efforts to bring this about. Reforms of the school curriculum in Scotland which aim to give all pupils the opportunity to study mathematics and science and to introduce more pupils to computing and other skills will proceed, and priority will continue to be given to the training of teachers of mathematics and physics. We are taking steps to improve technology teaching in schools by introducing new degree courses for prospective technology teachers. The first intakes to these new courses will be in Autumn 1987.

Curricular reforms must, however, be supported by changes in emphasis in the guidance given to school pupils. The careers advisory service has a most important role and my hon. Friend has already announced the decision to reinforce the advice which is available through the appointment in Scotland of a schools-engineering co-ordinator, who will be attached to the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) and funded by my Department. It will be the co-ordinator's task to work with others in improving the presentation of engineering and technology as a possible future career. The aim will be to create among schoolchildren, their parents and schools a greater awareness and understanding of the opportunities which such a career can offer. Emphasis will be given to providing encouragement for girls to enter technological careers.

Higher education institutions must also be able to recruit academic staff with the necessary technological qualifications. I have noted what the council has to say in that regard. However, industry has a part to play in alleviating some of the difficulties which arise. Staff exchanges with higher education institutions could ease pressure in key areas and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for industry and education wrote earlier this year to a number of companies in Scotland to seek their support for such co-operation. Some have responded positively and I hope that all will give close attention to the council's remarks.

It is my belief that responsiveness to economic needs is not incompatible with preserving a broadly based tradition in higher education. Consultations have shown that there is wide support for the recommendation that a full range of academic subjects should continue to be offered in Scotland's higher education system. The strength of that support is acknowledged. The Government reaffirm the value which they attach to the arts and humanities as well as to technological and related disciplines. However, the council does not propose that every educational establishment must offer every possible academic course: the preservation of a broadly based tradition need not preclude rationalisation. Nor should it mean that specialisation by institutions, where appropriate, is to be discouraged. Attention must be paid to this if resources are to be released for desirable developments.

The council recommends the provision of additional funding for applied research in the central institutions and for research in education in the colleges of education. The Government note that it does not suggest that the central institutions should match the universities in fundamental research. However, if the findings of research are to be transferred effectively into industrial products and processes, support for the applied and developmental stages may be required. Industry should itself contribute significantly to this, but there is no doubt a place for funding by Government. I am therefore prepared to consider whether resources can be found from within the Scottish block for some additional applied research funding for the central institutions on a selective basis; but that will depend on other priorities and there can be no guarantee that money will be found. I shall also consider whether resources can be found to provide funding for a more secure foundation for educational research in the colleges of education.

The council envisages no radical change in the structure of higher education in Scotland. I welcome its support for the central institutions for their responsiveness to the requirements of employers, and I welcome also its encouragement of informal links and cooperation among institutions. I have paid much attention to the differing opinions about the recommendation that there should be a feasibility study of a Scottish Institute of Technology —SIT. There is a sharp division of opinion not only among the central institutions at large, but also among those particular establishments which would be directly involved if a SIT were established. The principals of those establishments have collectively made it clear to me that their support for a SIT would be virtually conditional on its being given university status. Like the council, I do not regard university status for individual central institutions or groups of them to be a practical proposition in planning for the 1990s. Given the relative lack of enthusiasm for the SIT proposal among its potential members, I have therefore decided to reject the council's recommendation of a feasibility study. I am, however, prepared to consider, in consultation with the central institutions, what steps might be taken within the resources available to improve publicity for them collectively.

I am announcing separately today my decisions on the council's recommendations on the college of education sector and on future arrangements for the planning and funding of higher education in Scotland.

Conservation (Highland Region)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total acreage within the Highland region over which there is some form of presumption in favour of conservation; if he will give a breakdown of the type and acreage of respective conservation classification relevant within this total; and if he will express the total as a percentage of the total acreage within the Highland region.

Mr. Ancram: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pipeline Assembly Yard, Tain

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 506, to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, if he will indicate (a) on what date he received formal advice that the proposed pipeline assembly yard at Tain, Ross-shire, would affect indirectly a substantially greater part of the site of special scientific interest than the 0·24 per cent. directly affected, (b) from what source he received such advice and (c) to what extent in considering such advice, he took into account the findings of the independent appraisal carried out into the matter by Dr. John Smith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Highland regional council's notification of the planning application, received on 7 April, enclosed an objection by the Nature Conservancy Council indicating that consequences could be expected well beyond the immediate development area. My right hon. and learned Friend also noted the report prepared by Dr. John Smith at the request of Land and Marine Engineering Ltd., the applicant for planning permission; and a letter dated 17 April from the Nature Conservancy Council stating that it considered the report inadequate.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, columns 506-7, if he will indicate, of those letters of objection received by him via Highland regional council to the proposed pipeline assembly yard at Tain, Ross-shire, how many respectively (a) referred to the site of special scientific interest designated area, (b) referred to other issues, and (c) and, of those falling within category (b) above, how many of these issues have now been resolved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The planning application was notified to my right hon. and learned Friend under procedures which apply where a planning authority propose to grant planning permission for a development affecting a site of special scientific interest, against the advice of the Nature Conservancy Council. His subsequent decision to call in the application was based on his consideration of the views expressed about the effects of the proposed development on the nature conservation interest. In reaching that decision it was not necessary for him to consider other grounds of objection in detail.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is yet in a position to announce the details of the public inquiry into the proposed pipeline assembly yard at Tain, Ross-shire, with particular reference to (a) the commencing date, (b) the anticipated length of time it will take, (c) the number of objectors to be heard and (d) the identity of the objectors to be heard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Arrangements are being made to hold the public local inquiry in Tain commencing on 23 September 1986. It is anticipated that the inquiry may continue until 26 September. No other details are known at this stage.

Morrich More

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 15 May, Official Report, column 506, to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, if he will express in acres (a) the total area of the Morrich More, (b) the area of the site of special scientific interest which forms part of the current planning application lodged by Land and Marine Engineering Ltd. and (c) if he will express (b) above as a percentage of (a) above.

Mr. Ancram: Following is the information:

(a) The Morrich More has no exact boundaries, but the area of the site of special scientific interest is 7,074 acres;
(b) 17 acres;
(c) 0·24 per cent.

Land Development (Highland Region)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will state in acres the total area of land within the Highland region taken up for urban category development; and if he will express this total as a percentage of the total area of the Highland region;

(2) what is the total area of developed industrial land currently under economic activity within the Highland region; and if he will express that area as a percentage of the total area within the Highland region.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not held centrally.

Land Reclamation (East Sands, Leith)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available additional funding for the Scottish Development Agency for the reclamation for industrial use of land at East Sands, Leith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no proposals currently before the agency for the reclamation of land at East Sands, Leith. In any event I understand that there are other sites in the area which are more readily available should there be a proven demand for industrial land.

Children in Prison

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a report has been received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland on children in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland has submitted his report to me. I have today placed copies of the report in the Library, of the House together with my response to the recommendation he has made; and I am sending a copy to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs; to the chairman of the Scottish all-party penal affairs group and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Chief Inspector of Prisons (Reports)

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether reports have been received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland on Low Moss prison, Shotts prison and Castle Huntly institution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received reports by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland on his inspections of Low Moss prison, Shotts prison and Castle Huntly institution. I have today placed copies of the reports in the Library, of the House together with my responses, and I am sending a copy to the members in whose constituencies the establishments are located; to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs and the Scottish all-party penal affairs group and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from the Scottish Home and Health Department.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the United Kingdom, the amount spent on education as a proportion of the gross domestic product for each year since 1970-71, together with the amounts spent on (a) nursery, (b) primary and secondary and (c) higher education, expressed as a proportion of the gross domestic product for each year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The readily available information is shown in the following table for selected years. Additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure on education as a percentage of GDP*

Hertfordshire

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) teachers, (b) lecturers and (c) non-teaching staff were employed in Hertfordshire in the public sector education system in each of the most recent 10 years for which he has information.

Mr. Dunn: The figures requested for teachers and lecturers are as follows. Information on the numbers of non-teaching staff is not available centrally.

Hertfordshire

Year (January)	*Teachers	†Lecturers

* Full-time plus full-time equivalent of part-time. Includes nursery, primary, secondary and special schools and teachers providing education otherwise than at school.

† Includes lecturers in the maintained and assisted sector only in establishments of further education, adult education centres and certain other miscellaneous establishments. Acceptable data for part-time lecturers not available before 1982.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of children in Hertfordshire who have taken O-levels or CSEs; in what subjects; and how many have achieved higher grade O-levels or CSE passes in the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) on 7 July, at columns 45-48.

Free School Bus Services

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will review the policy of a three-mile limit on free school bus services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I assume the hon. Member is referring to section 39(2)(c) and section 55 of the Education Act 1944. The Government are not satisfied with the present law on home to school transport. We do not consider that there is an agreed basis on which the law could be amended, but we are continuing to study the situation.

Teachers (Salaries)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table setting out the average salaries of school teachers over the period 1974 to 1986 in cash and constant prices, showing each year's average salary in constant prices in terms comparable to 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The following table sets out this information. The comparison with 1979 is given both as a percentage difference, and as a cash difference at April 1986 prices.

School Leavers (Hampshire)

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of children who have taken (a) O-levels and (b) the CSE examination in each of the last 10 years, indicating the subjects taken and passed, in each of the following areas: (a) the borough of Gosport, (b) the borough of Fareham and (c) the county of Hampshire.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986]: Information is not available centrally for areas smaller than local education authorities. Information for the academic years 1975-76 to 1978-79 on the numbers of school leavers from Hampshire maintained schools who attempted, and achieved higher graded O-level/CSE results in specified subjects or combinations of subjects are given below.

Information for the academic years 1979-80 to 1984-85 was given in my reply of 20 June to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), at columns 655-58.

PRIME MINISTER

Bournemouth

Q36. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Bournemouth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Cannock and Burntwood

Q39. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Cannock and Burntwood.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Harborough Magna, Rugby

Q79. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Harborough Magna, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Taxation and Unemployment

Q80. Mr. Favell asked the Prime Minister what estimate she has made of the effect on the level of unemployment of raising the standard rate of income tax by four pence in the pound.

The Prime Minister: Following long established practice of both Labour and Conservative Administrations the Government do not publish their projections of employment or unemployment, nor the effect of individual policy measures on them.

Feed Wheat

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister what information she has about the average selling price of feed wheat in 1985, as to its cost in real terms in 1970, 1979 and 1984, as to the cost of a 100 horse power tractor in 1985, and as to the cost of such a tractor in real terms in 1970, 1979 and 1984.

The Prime Minister: The average selling price of feed wheat in 1985 was £106·8 per tonne ex-farm. Developments in feed wheat prices in real terms, after adjusting by the retail prices index, are shown in the table for the years requested. Also shown are indices of tractor prices, adjusted by the RPI. These are compiled from manufacturers' list prices and relate to wheeled tractors of all sizes: generally the prices paid by purchasers will be lower than list price due to discounting, the extent of which has become substantial in recent years and varies between transactions. It should also be noted that price comparisons over time are particularly difficult because of continuing changes in the technical specification of tractors.

Indices of prices in real terms: 1985 = 100

	1970	1979	1984	1985
Feed wheat	138	145	111	100
All wheeled tractors	69	104	99	100

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Kensington on 3 June, Official Report, column 433, what would be the additional costs in terms of revenue forgone if, instead of making all income other than the credits taxable, each individual, counting husbands and wives separately, were allowed a non-transferable low income tax exemption, similar to age allowance, of (a) £15, (b) £20 and (c) £25 per week.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

Football Supporters (Conduct)

Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister if, when she next meets the chairman of the Football Association and the President of the Football League, she will discuss with them the lessons for the Government's objective of reducing the level of violence at football matches in the United Kingdom of experience of the conduct of British football supporters in Mexico for the World Cup; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: These matters were discussed at my meeting yesterday with representatives of the football authorities, including the chairman of the Football Association and the new president of the Football League. We reviewed progress with our joint efforts to combat football spectator violence by British fans at home and abroad. The good behaviour of British fans in Mexico, together with the marked reduction in domestic incidents last season, gives cause for optimism. But we agreed that careful planning and preparation remained vital; that we will continue vigorously to combat hooliganism, through the effective partnership between the Government and the football authorities.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister what information Her Majesty's Government have about the conduct of British football supporters whilst attending the World Cup tournament in Mexico; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received reports on the conduct of British football supporters in Mexico from my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for Sport, who attended the tournament from 8 to 15 June, and from Her Majesty's ambassador in Mexico. It seems clear that British supporters behaved well. Seven thousand to 9,000 attended the tournament, over four to six weeks; there were 31 arrests, mostly for minor offences against local byelaws. All but two were released quickly from custody. Clearly the careful planning and preparation by the Government, police and football authorities before and at the tournament were effective, as was the policing by the Mexican authorities. I pay tribute to the positive attitude of the British fans in Mexico, and to the efforts of the Mexican Government and police, of the football authorities and of the staff of Her Majesty's ambassador in Mexico.

South Africa (President)

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will give details of recent exchanges between the State President of South Africa and herself.

The Prime Minister: I correspond from time to time with many Heads of Government. It is not normal diplomatic practice to reveal details of such exchanges.

Fishery Protection (Faroes)

Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister what representations have been received from the Faroes Government about the activities of the Sea Shepherd recently involving the Faroese fishery protection vessel Olvur Halgi; what action is being taken; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No representations have been received from the Faroese or Danish authorities.

Canada (Prime Minister)

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with Mr. Brian Mulroney, the Prime Minister of Canada.

The Prime Minister: I had a good and useful meeting with Mr. Mulroney on 13 July in Montreal. We discussed several matters, including Canada's contribution to the international fund for Ireland. Mr. Mulroney committed C$10 million over the next 10 years. In addition we had a preliminary discussion of the issues which may arise at the Commonwealth meeting on South Africa in August.

Engagements

Mr. Favell asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 July.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 17 July.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 July.

Mr. Stern asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with President Mubarak of Egypt.

EMPLOYMENT

Inflation

44. Mr. Aston asked the Paymaster General why house prices are not included in the figures used to measure the rate of inflation.

Mr. Lang: House prices are included in the components which make up the retail prices index. They are taken into the calculation of owner-occupiers' housing costs which are based on mortgage interest payments.

Redundancy Fund

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General when rebates from the redundancy fund will be abolished; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The proposal to abolish the payment of employer's rebates for all but the smallest firms—those with fewer than 10 employees — is contained in the Wages Bill which is currently under consideration in another place. It is expected to come into effect on 1 August or upon Royal Assent of the Bill, whichever is the later.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General how much financial assistance has been given to firms on Merseyside by way of rebates from the redundancy fund in each of the past three years.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce some flexibility into the proposed cut-off date for rebate arrangements under the redundancy fund.

Mr. Trippier: No. The Government do not believe that it would be right to treat some employers differently from others. The precise cut-off arrangements, which will apply to all employers, are specified in schedule 6 to the Wages Bill currently before Parliament.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from Bibby Edible Oils Ltd. concerning rebates from the redundancy fund; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The managing director of Bibby Edible Oils Ltd. wrote to the Secretary of State on 10 June. A full reply was sent to his letter on 4 July, confirming that following enactment of the Wages Bill rebates will only be available to employers with more than nine employees if the redundancies took place before August 1986.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Paymaster General what was the amount of finance allocated to the Manpower Services Commission and the amount spent for each year since its inception.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department gives a grant in aid to the Manpower Services Commission to carry out its functions; contributions are also made by the industry department for Scotland and the Welsh Office in respect of the proportion of costs specifically identified with services in Scotland and Wales. The figures in the following table include those contributions:

	Allocation £	Expenditure £
1974-75	105,395,000	96,004,201
1975-76	278,236,000	249,262,721
1976-77	410,911,000	366,748,991
1977-78	466,836,000	432,451,262

	Allocation £	Expenditure £
1978-79	547,491,000	507,278,898
1979-80	623,306,000	610,613,792
1980-81	760,093,000	747,787,224
1981-82	1,014,620,000	943,039,503
1982-83	1,333,140,000	1,070,270,287
1983-84	1,446,706,000	1,272,336,000
1984-85	1,436,467,000	1,413,322,000
1985-86	1,581,296,000	*

* The final expenditure figure for 1985-86 is not yet available. It is expected to be close to the amount allocated.

European Social Fund

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will list in the Official Report the amount of assistance given to firms on Merseyside from the European social fund in each of the past three years.

Mr. Lang: The European Commission allocated the following amounts from the European social fund to private firms on Merseyside:

1986	241,084
1985	355,607

Separate figures for Merseyside relating to 1984 are not available.

Nuclear Installations (Safety)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Paymaster General what recent advice has been received from the Advisory Committee on Safety at Nuclear Installations—ACSNI—following the accident at Chernobyl; and if he will make a statement on his Department's reactions to this advice.

Mr. Trippier: Very few technical details on the Chernobyl accident have been released by the Russians so far. The Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations is, therefore, not in a position to make any sensible assessment or give any useful advice at this stage. The ACSNI is continuing to take a close interest in the matter.

M23 (Hazardous Load)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Paymaster General what role was played by the Health and Safety Executive in making safe a container of ethyl mercaptan parked off the M23 at Reigate on 11 July; and what time elapsed between the executive being alerted to the danger and its attendance on the scene.

Mr. Trippier: Responsibility for making safe the container lay primarily with the transport operator, with the police and fire services dealing with the immediate emergency arrangements needed. HSE inspectors attended at the request of the police. They gave technical assistnace to the police investigation into the circumstances which led to the incident. Inspectors were on site in under three hours.

Wages Councils (Northern Region)

Mr. Blair asked the Paymaster General how many wages council inspectors are currently in post in the northern region; and how many he proposes to retain in post in 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Currently there are seven outdoor inspectors in post in the northern division of the Wages Inspectorate. It is planned to reduce the number of posts to five in 1987.

Mr. Blair asked the Paymaster General how many establishments in the northern region come within the scope of wages councils; and how many prosecutions there have been under wages council legislation since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: At January 1986 there were 20,876 establishments on the register of the northern division of the Wages Inspectorate. Since 1979, six employers in that division have been prosecuted for offences under wages council legislation.

Handicapped Persons

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to which countries in western Europe and north America which have a quota system for the employment of handicapped persons as to the level of the quota as a percentage of the work force and the penalties imposed on companies in both the private and public sector which do not reach the quota.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive information is not readily available in the form requested. I understand, however that within the European Community, Belgium, Eire, France, Greece, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands have some form of quota scheme and that there is no quota scheme in Denmark. I also understand that neither Canada nor the United States of America has a quota scheme.

Summaries of the quota arrangements in those countries listed above as having quota schemes, except Greece, were published in 1979 in the Manpower Services Commission's discussion document on the quota scheme, a copy of which is in the Library. It was confirmed in 1981 that the position remained substantially unchanged, but we have no more up-to-date information. Information from Greece in 1981 showed that a proportion of posts in certain occupations in the public sector are reserved for disabled people.

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General what is the latest estimate of the unemployment rate of handicapped persons in the United Kingdom; what is the latest unemployment rate for the United Kingdom; and if he will provide comparable figures for each year from 1979 to the present.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

The available information on those unemployed affected by ill health or disability is from the labour force survey in Great Britain for the years 1984 and 1985 only:

Percentage of economically active population of working age unemployed and actively seeking work*

	Spring 1984	Spring 1985
Persons limited by† health problems or disabilities	21·6	23·4
All persons	11·2	10·7

* 16-64 years for men, 16-59 years for women.

† Those limited by health problems or disablement as to the kind of paid work they could do.

The following table shows the level of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom at June each year from 1979 to 1986 as a percentage of the working population. Figures before 1983 relate to estimates, The comparison are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions for certain older men, and by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Per cent.
June 1979	4·6
June 1980	5·6
June 1981	9·0
June 1982	10·4
June 1983	11·1
June 1984	11·2
June 1985	11·5
June 1986	11·7

Social and Regional Funds

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the European social fund and the European regional fund came to the United Kingdom for each year from 1973 to the present.

Mr. Lang: The percentage of the European Social Fund —ESF—and European Regional Development Fund—ERDF—allocated to the United Kingdom from 1973 to the present is as follows:

Year	Per cent. ESF	Per cent. ERDF
1973	31·5	—
1974	24·5	—
1975	29·6	28·7
1976	24·4	28·4
1977	37·1	28·9
1978	19·7	26·7
1979	25·4	27·1
1980	23·3	24·3
1981	24·9	21·7
1982	29·4	24·1
1983	29·8	21·7
1984	32	27·5
1985	23·7	26·4
1986	16·4	—

The United Kingdom first benefitted from the ERDF in 1975 and figures are not available for 1986.

Wages Councils (North-West)

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many prosecutions there have been in the north-west region under wages council legislation in 1979 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Trippier: No employers were prosecuted in 1979 for offences under wages council legislation in the north-west region. There were two prosecutions in 1980, on in 1981 and none in subsequent years.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for providing and marketing additional service areas on the motorway network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The general policy is to provide new motorway service areas where they are required at strategic locations and at approximately 30-mile intervals on motorways yet to be completed and on existing motorways where there is a gap in services provision.

The planned programme and the manner of marketing are as follows:

(a) Competitive tenders for sites being selected by Government
- (i) M25: Thurrock (tenders received), Clacket Lane near Westerham; and Iver
- (ii) M11: Birchanger, near Stansted (tenders received)
- (iii) M20: Hollingbourne, east of Maidstone, and Westenhanger, junction 11
- (iv) M4: Reading area
- (v) M40: Stockenchurch near High Wycombe; Ardley, junction with A43; Barn Hill, where the motorway crosses the Fosse Way
- (vi) M27: Meon near Fareham
- (vii) M42: Stoke—eastern section
- (viii) M56: Hapsford, at junction with A5117.

We are also investigating potential sites for the M54 and for the Birmingham northern relief road.

(b) Competitive tenders for one site to be proposed experimentally by operators on a stretch of motorway defined by the Department:
M42: Northern section, in the Tamworth/North Warwickshire area.

(c) The following sites have been negotiated as private initiatives
- (i) M25: South Mimms (under construction)
- (ii) M5: Sedgemoor northbound site, previously the Brent Knoll rest area. The southbound side of the site is now open
- (iii) M20: West Kingsdown.

In addition, we will consider private initiative service areas to augment the strategic network where a landowner or developer comes forward with a proposal and where we consider the competitive tendering method is inappropriate. In such cases, we will expect the developer first to discuss and reach agreement with the Department about design and access, as well as financial matters to safeguard the Exchequer, and, following that agreement, the Department will seek planning clearance for the proposal in conjunction with the developer.

Private Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that privately registered cars and vans which have been involved in serious accidents, but which are only subject to third party insurance and therefore not recorded under the serious damage repair procedure at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, Swansea are not then recycled illegally;

(2) what procedures are adopted by the police to ensure that privately registered cars and vans which have been involved in serious road accidents, but which are only subject to third party insurance, and therefore not recorded under the serious damage repair procedure at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, Swansea, are not then recycled illegally.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Arrangements already exist under which insurance companies and the police notify the Department of seriously damaged vehicles including some third party cases. However, I am aware of the difficulties in this area and officials will shortly be undertaking a review of the situation in consultation with the insurers, the police and other interests.

A19 (Repairs)

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on repairs to the A19 road with particular reference to the contents of the reports commissioned by his Department dealing with the contracts for the construction of the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The investigation into the defects of the A19 Teesside diversion and subsequent negotiations with the consultants and contractor have been completed. Settlements have now been reached.

Copies of the reports of the independent investigations by Maunsell and Partners and Cleveland county council have been placed in the Library of the House. The reports cover three areas of concern: the viaduct, the stage I carriageway and the stage II carriageway.

The viaduct is the most complicated problem and the difficulties lie in failure of the bearings of the main span to function fully to specification; some weaknesses in the support to the bearings of two of the main spans, weaknesses in the cross-bracing between the various beams in the main spans.

The cost of putting these right amounts to £200,000 and the report by Maunsell and Partners states that responsibility cannot be pinpointed precisely. The investigations report that at all times the road and bridge have been completely safe for use by traffic.

The stage I carriageway investigations found that the problems in the road were caused by a change in traffic flows and axle weights, particularly of heavy goods vehicles and no blame could be attached to either the consultant or the contractor.

The stage II carriageway independent investigations found that the surface had cracked and was showing signs of deformation. However, an appraisal of the report showed that the conclusions reached were based on a mistaken interpretation of the results of tests. The road will not have to be reconstructed and can be satisfactorily repaired by an overlay provided about two years before it might have been expected on a similar road carrying the same volume of traffic elsewhere. This work started in 1985 and will continue until 1987. The additional cost to the Department of bringing this work forward is of the order of £600,000.

The reports of two of the three independent investigations indicate certain deficiencies in the works as completed although it has not proved possible to identify the exact cause in every instance. Without admission of liability, the consultants and the contractor have separately entered into negotiations with the Department and in my view have responsibly reached settlements which amount to a substantial contribution towards the repair costs.

Roads Programme

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria as regards current access time to the motorway network he uses in assessing the demand for new motorways in England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such criteria are not used.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a breakdown by classification of road of the total new mileage and planned cost of new motorways and trunk roads to be constructed in Cheshire in each of the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are five schemes, representing 14·5 miles of new road valued at some £50 million in the national trunk road programme. They are:

Due to open to traffic (Financial year)	Road name	Scheme	Mileages	Estimated Cost £ million
1987-88	A52	Barthomley Link—M6	3·4	6·82
1989-90	A483	Chester Southern Bypass—Welsh Border	2·5	6·8
1990-91	A41	Chester Improvement	1·8	13·7
1991-92	A52	Nantwich Bypass	3·5	4·1
1991-92	A523	Macclesfield Relief Road	3·3	19·1

The following small schemes are included in the regional improvement programme.

Due to open (financial year)	Estimated cost £ million
1987-88 A5 Barbridge Bypass	0·60
1988-89 A550 Ledsham Station Diversion	1·00

In addition the Department is considering small improvement schemes on A41 at Mitton Green, Macefen and No Mans Heath and on A52 at Basford Bridge, expenditure on which could fall within the next five years.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a breakdown by classification of road of the total new mileage and cost of new motorways and trunk roads constructed in Cheshire in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Six new schemes have been constructed in Cheshire as part of the national trunk road programme, worth some £25 million. These are:

	Road name	Scheme	Mileage	Cost £ million
Opened to traffic
1981	M56	Hapsford East of Stoak	3·0	5·4
1981	M56	Stoak Interchange	2·2	*4·8
1981	M56	West of Stoak-Powey Lane	2·2	*6·7
1984	A51	Tarvin South West Bypass	2·1	1·8
To be opened
1986	A54	Kelsall Bypass	2·2	3·7
1986	A49/A51	Tarporley Bypass	3·1	3·0

* Estimated cost.

Registration Marks

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 30 June, how many registration marks have been transferred in each of the past 10 years to date; how much revenue has been collected therefrom in each of the periods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of registration marks transferred	Fee revenue £ million
1985-86	56,352	4·5
1984-85	47,747	3·9
1983-84	44,773	3·5
1982-83	37,550	2·1
1981-82	29,822	1·5
1980-81	30,564	1·5
1979-80	30,404	1·5
1978-79	26,034	1·3
1977-78	22,425	1·1
1976-77	50,352	0·1

Roads (Vehicle Restrictions)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those local authorities, as highway authorities, which have applied for weight restrictions on public roads for which they need his Department's agreement; and if he will make a statement on the extent of the use by local authorities of powers open to them;

(2) if he will list for each local authority in England and Wales the number of requests he has received for the imposition of restrictions on (a) coaches and (b) lorries on specified roads within their area; and if he will indicate how many have been approved and how many rejected.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not keep general records of this type.

Road Humps

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate for each local authority in England and Wales the number of requests he has received for road humps on public roads and the number which have been approved or rejected by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local highway authorities may install road humps on their own roads without reference to me, provided that they comply with the Highways (Road Hump) Regulations 1983. Some authorities have found these regulations too restrictive. New and more flexible regulations are expected soon following recent consultation with representative organisations.

Ethyl Mercaptan (Leak)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the circumstances in which a container leaking ethyl mercaptan was transported between Fawley and Reigate on 10 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am awaiting the results of detailed inquiries into this incident by the Health and Safety Executive and the police. I shall write to my hon. Friend when these inquiries are complete.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the movement of a container of ethyl mercaptan between Fawley and Reigate on 10 July was covered by the Dangerous Substances (Transport in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981;

(2) whether the Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984, due to take effect later in the current year, will apply to movements such as that of ethyl mercaptan between Fawley and Reigate on 10 July; and what part his Department will play in the enforcement of those regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 do not apply to tank containers having a total capacity of less than 3 cu m. The Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984, which came into effect on 1 January 1986, apply to ethyl mercaptan: the Health and Safety Executive is the enforcing authority for dangerous substances in transit.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport what road closures were necessitated on 10 and 11 July by the operations to make safe a container of ethyl mercaptan on an articulated lorry parked on the A217, and later off the M23, at Reigate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 10 July part of the A217 between the Blackhorse Lane roundabout and the Babylon roundabout was closed from 16.20 hours until 2 am on Friday 11 July.

The vehicle was then escorted along the A217 and eastbound on the M25 to an unused section of the M23 at its junction with the A23. It was escorted by three police vehicles during this journey to prevent overtaking. There were no road closures. Between approximately 20.00 and 21.00 hours on Friday 11 July while the manifold seal was replaced, the M23/A23 north of the junction with the M25 to the Coulsden junction (a distance of some three miles) was closed.

No road closure was necessary while the vehicle was subsequently moved to Gillingham, nor during its journey from there to Felixstowe, but police escort was provided throughout.

Merseyside Bus Services (Deregulation)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he plans to have on the subject of the deregulation of bus services in the county of Merseyside.

Mr. David Mitchell: The deregulation of bus services in the county of Merseyside is governed by the Transport Act 1985. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities is being consulted on the regulations being made under that Act. I shall be happy to consider any special representations which are made relating to the county of Merseyside.

Rural Roads (Dangers to Children)

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the dangers to school children walking to school on rural roads without pavements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have not received such representations. If the hon. Member has a particular problem or incident in mind, I shall be happy to look into it.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hedge Removal Grant

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the grant for removal of hedges in order to amalgamate fields was introduced; and when it was discontinued;

(2) what level of grant was paid to farmers in each of the last three years to assist them in removing hedges in order to amalgamate fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Fish and Fish Products (Imports)

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the value of fish and fish products, respectively, imported from the Faroe Islands in each of the last five years;

(2) what was the value of fish and fish products, respectively, imported from (a) Iceland and (b) Norway in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Cereals

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the proportion (a) of total cereals produced in the United Kingdom and (b) of cereals used in animal feed which will be liable for co-responsibility levy; and if he will give information on equivalent figures for the European Community.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 43]: I estimate that for both the United Kingdom and the Community as a whole the proportion of total cereals production liable to the levy will be about three-quarters and the proportion of cereals used in animal feed so liable around a half. These estimates are necessarily broad, given the uncertainties surrounding the size of the 1986-87 harvest and the proportions entering the different outlets both in the United Kingdom and in the whole Community.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he can list for the latest available date the stocks of European Economic Community surplus agricultural produce in each individual intervention store in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 365]: As at 31 March 1986 the stocks held at each location were as follows:

DEFENCE

Gibraltar Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate, at 1986 prices, the average cost of refit work at Gibraltar (a) before and (b) since Appledore took over.

Mr. Lee: Since the work content of individual refits varies, it is not possible to calculate a representative average cost.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much work in Royal Fleet Auxiliary refits is guaranteed to Appledore at Gibraltar dockyard.

Mr. Lee: A programme of assured naval work, notably on royal fleet auxiliaries, worth £14 million—at 1983 prices—is to be provided during the first three years of operation of Gibraltar Ship Repair Limited.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the annual costs of running Gibraltar dockyard, including refit work, in each year since 1979, in cash terms and at 1986 prices.

Mr. Lee: The following table shows operating costs, including overheads, for Gibraltar Dockyard:

Financial Year	Actual Cost £ million	Adjusted to 1986 prices £ million
1978-79	16·3	30·1
1979-80	16·9	27·2
1980-81	22·2	29·9
1981-82	23·8	29·7
1982-83	23·4	27·4
1983-84	25·4	28·2
*1984-85	14·5	15·4

* to 31 December only

From 1 January 1985 the costs of running Gibraltar Dockyard ceased to be the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence.

Falkland Islands (Air Service Contracts)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether all recent air service contracts to the Falkland Islands have been awarded on the basis of open competitive tender.

Mr. Stanley: All use of chartered aircraft in June and July to supplement the RAF flights to and from the Falklands has been decided after competitive tenders have been sought from British airlines operating aircraft of the required capacity.

Virgin Airlines

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of the recent contract awarded to Virgin Airlines to service the United Kingdom/Falkland Islands routes for transportation of troops or equipment.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 1 July at column 520.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the first application for supply of services to his Department by Virgin Airlines was received by his Department.

Mr. Stanley: Virgin Atlantic Airways first approached my Department about tendering for a contract on the Falkland Island route in July 1984.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what date the first contract by his Department was awarded to Virgin Airlines.

Mr. Stanley: 12 June 1986.

Transportation Contracts

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what scrutiny is given by his Department to the financial standing of any company tendering for the transportation of troops or equipment by his Department.

Mr. Stanley: The degree of scrutiny, if any, is a matter for decision on a case-by-case basis.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Guatemala

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to resume consular or diplomatic relations with Guatemala; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 19 May. We have always been ready to resume official relations with Guatemala without preconditions.

British Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much additional expenditure has been incurred by, and how much additional resources have been allocated to, the British Council, in order to safeguard the security of British Council employees and property overseas following the air attacks on Libya: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council estimates its expenditure on extra security costs since the air attack on Libya as likely to be in the order of £700,000 in 1986-87. As regards additional resources for the Council, I would refer the hon. Member to my answer of 14 July to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing for each of the past seven years the level of funding made available by the Government to the British Council.

Mr. Eggar: The following table sets out the information requested. It covers the funding levels for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86.

£ million

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86

Technical Education and Training for Developing Countries			1·4	0·9	0·9	0·9	1·0
Higher Education			2·7	2·5	2·6	2·8	3·0
TOTALS	49·2	55·1	63·5	68·5	73·4	81·6	86·3

Commonwealth Secretariat

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in money and percentage terms of the cost of the Commonwealth Secretariat is contributed by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Since the establishment of the Commonwealth Secretariat in 1965, the United Kingdom has paid 30 per cent. of the secretariat's budget. In 1985-86 this amounted to £1·7 million.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the date on which an officer from El Salvador is due to commence language and military training in the United Kingdom; what is the name and rank of the soldier concerned; and if he will place in the Library a biography of the officer and a synopsis of his history in the El Salvadorean armed services.

Mr. Eggar: The position remains as in my reply of 19 May to the hon. Member. It is not our policy to give specific details of individuals attending military training courses in the United Kingdom. Our offer to El Salvador is consistent with training provided by Contadora group countries, whose efforts to promote a peaceful settlement in Central America we actively support.

South Africa

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whom the Foreign Secretary intends to see on his forthcoming visits to South Africa; who has indicated that they will refuse to see him; and if there has been any change in the proposals that will be made by the Foreign Secretary to the South African Government as a result of his recent visit to Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the speech which my right hon. and learned Friend made on the debate on South Africa on 16 July.

Dr. Kurt Waldeheim

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will institute a search of military records to establish how many British prisoners of war were interrogated by German Army group E, of which Kurt Waldeheim was in charge of interrogation, other than those whose names have been supplied to him by the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West, and to discover their subsequent fate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The search of Ministry of Defence records already instituted in response to an earlier request from the hon. and learned Member is still in progress. To establish how many British prisoners of war were interrogated by German Army group E would require a search of the records of every British prisoner-of-war who went through German hands. With the resources available to the Ministry of Defence that is not practicable.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Money Supply

14. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the annual movement of M3.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the 1986-87 Financial Statement and Budget Report, and of the speech by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Lombard Association in April.

Inflation

15. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when inflation was previously at or below its current level.

34. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when inflation was previously at or below its current level.

37. Mr. Nicholls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when inflation was previously at or below its current level.

38. Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when inflation was previously at or below its current level.

42. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when inflation was previously at or below its current level.

Mr. Lawson: The 12-month increase in the retail prices index was last as low as 2·5 per cent. at the end of 1967.

Labour Statistics

16. Mr. Dormand asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were in employment in May 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: Total employment in Great Britain was a little under 24·8 million in June 1979 and a little over 24 million in March 1986.

Balance of Payments

17. Mr. Weetch asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest projections for the balance of payments for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the forecast my right hon. Friend published at Budget time.

Value Added Tax

18. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking a lowering of the threshold figure of turnover for registration for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A fair number.

27. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the operation of the value added tax penalties introduced in the Finance Act 1985.

Mr. Brooke: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 19 June at column 629.

Share Ownership

19. Mr. Waller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 306, he will make it his policy to commission, at an appropriate future date, a further survey of the incidence of personal share ownership to take account of the impact of the proposed personal equity plan provisions contained in the Finance Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I expect further survey work on share ownership to be carried out next year, possibly as part of the General Household Survey.

22. Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his Budget proposals for personal equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend's personal equity plan proposals have been widely welcomed.

43. Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the proportion of the population who are share owners.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's efforts to promote wider share ownership have attracted strong support, not least from those who have bought shares in privatised companies and in the companies where they work.

Interest Rates

20. Mr. Patchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of interest rates in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on comparable rates in the other six main Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Three-month interbank rates in London are around 10 per cent. As in the other main OECD countries, interest rates in the United Kingdom are kept at the level necessary to maintain appropriate monetary conditions.

European Monetary System

21. Mr. Hunter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further representations he has received seeking full United Kingdom participation in the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Third World Debt

23. Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet Ministers of those Governments who are concerned about the problems of Third world debt repayments.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer frequently meets with other Finance Ministers to discuss the economic difficulties of developing countries, including debt repayments. Discussions will continue in the autumn at a variety of international meetings, including the IMF-IBRD annual meeting schedule for 29 September to 3 October.

Government Fixed Assets

24. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Government fixed assets are covered by insurance.

Mr. MacGregor: As a result of the Government's policy of bearing their own risk except where there are special circumstances, only a very small proportion of Government fixed assets is covered by commercial insurance.

Freeports

25. Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce measures to make freeports value added tax free areas.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Taxation and Unemployment

26. Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the results of studies on the marginal effect on unemployment at (a) tax cuts and (b) increased public spending.

Mr. MacGregor: Some.

Pensioner Price Index

28. Mr. Spencer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the main factors currently influencing the pensioner price index.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The main influence on the pensioner price indices, and indeed on the other indicators of retail price inflation, is the Government's economic policy.

Sub-Saharan Countries (Debt)

29. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the outstanding burden of debt owed to Her Majesty's Government by countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Debt owed directly to Her Majesty's Government by countries in sub-Saharan Africa consists of principal and interest outstanding on aid loans made by the Overseas Development Administration, which was £141 million at 1 April 1986.

Job Creation (Budget Proposals)

30. Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which his 1985 Budget has achieved the encouragement to employment which he anticipated.

Mr. MacGregor: Since March 1985 total employment in Great Britain has risen by 238,000.

North Sea Oil Revenue

31. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the value of North sea oil revenues expected during the current fiscal year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Government revenues from United Kingdom oil and gas production are forecast to be £6·1 billion in the financial year 1986-87.

Fuel Testing (Customs and Excise)

32. Mr. Evennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on roadside fuel testing duties.

Mr. Brooke: In the year to 31 March 1986 roadside fuel testing duties and associated follow up investigations absorbed about 89 man years of effort, including staff engaged part time on those duties.

Married Man's Allowance

33. Ms. Clare Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning his proposals to abolish the married man's allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 19 June at column 630.

Local Authority Finance

35. Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the value of local authority borrowing on foreign capital markets in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1985-86 foreign currency borrowing by local authorities under the public sector exchange cover scheme amounted to the equivalent of £223 million.

Taxation Policy

36. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he takes in formulating his taxation policy of the differential effects of various options on high income-earning and low income-earning tax units, respectively.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The pattern of taxation across the whole income distribution is one of the many factors taken into account in formulating taxation policy.

Capital Gains Tax

39. Mr. Hirst asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest estimates of the yield in 1986-87 in capital gains tax associated costs of collection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that the yield from capital gains tax in 1986-87 will be £1,050 million and the estimated cost of collection at around £20 million.

Profit-related Pay

40. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about profit-related pay.

Mr. Brooke: Informal talks have been held with employers and others both at individual company level and with representative bodies. These exchanges produced a very positive response to the principle of an initiative to encourage further expansion of profit-related pay. The result of these discussions are reflected in the Green Paper "Profit Related Pay: a Consultative Document" which was presented to Parliament on 15 July.

Job Creation (Tax Revenue)

41. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for tax revenue of the (a) part-time and (b) full-time jobs created since 1983.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This will depend on the level of wages and spending patterns of those concerned.

Incomes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people in 1985-86, counting husbands and wives separately, with investment income and—or earned income of less than (a) £10, (b) £15 and (c) £20 a week, showing those above retirement age separately.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Bilingual Forms

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his Department's forms and leaflets are printed in Gaelic or in a bilingual Gaelic-English format.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1986] : None of the Treasury's forms or leaflets is printed in Gaelic or a bilingual Gaelic-English format.

Personal Equity plans

Mr. Chope asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has reached a decision on the limits which will apply to investments in unit trusts and investment trusts within a personal equity plan.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Investment in authorised unit trusts and investment trusts approved under section 359 of the Taxes Act 1970 will be allowed up to £420 a year or 25 per cent. of the investor's annual subscription, which ever is the higher. This will enable a personal equity plan investor to put a monthly subscription of £35 or less solely into a unit trust or investment trust. Those investing larger amounts will, if they wish, still be able to diversify their portfolios by placing a proportion of their investments in investment trusts and-or unit trusts.

The purpose of the limit is to enable small investors to have a reasonable spread of risk, while still encouraging the growth of direct personal investment in United Kingdom companies, which is the primary aim of the personal equity plan scheme.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures for the weekly earnings after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant April 1985 prices of (i) a single man, (ii) a married man, (iii) a married man with two children under 11 years, (iv) a married with four children, two under 11 years, one 11 to 15 years, and one over 16 years, whose gross weekly earnings are at (v) the lowest decile, (w) the lower quartile, (x) the median, (y) the upper quartile and (z) the highest decile for April 1979 under the June 1979 tax/benefit regime and April 1985.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1986, c. 124-25]: Information in the following table is based on estimates of male earnings for those in full time work paid at adult rates, with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates are based on information from the annual New Earnings Survey.

The calculations take no account of income-related benefits to which those at the lowest decile and quartile may be entitled. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance.

WALES

Lambs (Sales Ban)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is yet in a position, following his recent meeting with unions representing farmers in the affected areas, to put forward proposals for compensation for those subject to the current ban on lamb sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is still too early to assess the impact on producers of the controls in the designated areas. I shall make a further statement as soon as I can.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he can yet remove further areas of Anglesey from the current ban on lamb sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I cannot at present add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 10 July as regards restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep in Anglesey. However, continued testing has identified other areas where restrictions can now be lifted. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have therefore today laid an order under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to come into effect at midnight to release a coastal strip between Bangor and Caernarfon in Gwynedd and parts of central Clwyd.

A map showing in more detail the areas to be released and the results of tests made up to 14 July are being published today and a copy is being placed in the Library of the House. The test programme is continuing.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the monitoring of radio caesium levels in lambs on Anglesey and in north west Wales have indicated a trend of dissipation of radio caesium sufficient to enable him to project when the ban on sales will be lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Intensive monitoring has enabled a number of areas to be freed from restrictions on the movement and slaughter of lambs. Testing is continuing in order to derestrict further areas as quickly as possible and an announcement is being made today. It is not yet possible to estimate when all restrictions may be lifted.

Job Losses (Microelectronic Sectors)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been lost in Wales in the hi-tech microelectronic sectors in the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information is not available.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 351]: Of the 13 letters received from right hon. and hon. Members which were still awaiting a substantive reply on 11 July 1986, 11 were received more than one month ago; one was received more than two months ago; and one was received more than three months ago. None was received more than four months ago.

Since 11 July, 4 of the 13 listed above have received substantive replies, one of these having been received more than two months ago and three more than one month ago.

The average time taken to reply to letters addressed to Ministers is 10 working days. In some cases it is appropriate to make enquiries to other Government Departments, local authorities and other bodies, and on such occasions the length of time taken to respond can be longer. When circumstances prevent an early reply being made the correspondent is kept informed and a substantive reply is made as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Tate Gallery of the North

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts what is the anticipated date for the opening of the Tate Gallery of the North.

Mr. Luce: The trustees of the Tate Gallery plan to open the Tate in the North in the summer of 1988.

Arts on Merseyside

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the future of the arts on Merseyside.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to say that as a result of the successful negotiations conducted by the Arts Council and Merseyside Arts, the immediate future of all the major arts organisations on Merseyside has been secured.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Enter and Search Power

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many officials for whom he has responsibility currently have the power to enter and search premises, subject to statutory conditions and, in each case, if he will indicate the statutory authority under which power is exercised.

Mr. Fowler: Officials' power to enter premises is described in the following legislation as powers of entry, inspection and/or examination for specific purposes. The numbers of officials and statutory authorities are:

(a) 16 Medicines Inspectors
—Medicines Act 1968;

(b) 101 Social Services Inspectors
—National Assistance (Powers of Inspection) Regulations 1948;
—Mental Health (Powers of Inspection) Regulations 1960;
—Child Care Act 1980;

(c) 2,886 Social Security Officials — last count February 1985
—Social Security Act 1975;
—Social Security (Miscellaneous) Provisions 1977;
—Emergency Laws (Re-enactment Repeals) Act 1964.

In addition, there are officials authorised by district health authorities under the Registered Homes Act 1984 and the Nursing Homes and Mental Nursing Homes Regulations 1984. The number of officials so authorised is not known centrally.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct health authorities to equip all hospitals with chlorinators in order to combat legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Hayhoe: A wide number of control measures to combat legionnaire's disease are under consideration and it seems likely that a number of different methods will emerge as being effective. Appropriate action will then be taken.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that all waterspray nozzles are removed from National Health Service hospitals so as to prevent outbreaks of legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that available evidence indicates that the removal of water spray nozzles will not prevent outbreaks of legionnaire's disease if the hot and cold water distribution system itself is contaminated. The advice to health authorities on this subject is to maintain distribution systems within a safe range, ensuring the integrity of tank covers and the cleanliness of tanks and storage vessels.

Health Care (Expenditure)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the expenditure, by regional health authority, on primary care, community care and hospital services, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Hayhoe: For the years 1976-77 to 1984-85, tables showing an analysis of total revenue, that is current, expenditure by region and service are included in the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns", copies of which are held in the Library.

I am sending the hon. Member copies of the relevant tables together with the equivalent figures for 1975-76, which are not readily available in published form. A copy of these has been placed in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of caring for those who have acquired immune deficiency syndrome in (a) central London and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not held centrally in the form requested. The cost of treating patients who have the acquired immune deficiency syndrome—AIDS—varies considerably between patients depending on the course of the disease and the opportunistic infections involved. The limited information which is available suggests that in most cases the cost to the National Health Service is between £10,000 to £20,000 per patient.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which health authorities have implemented plans for the testing and counselling of HTLV—3 carriers and for supporting those diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department wrote to health authorities in July of last year asking them to make arrangements for the provision of testing facilities and for counselling before testing and afterwards where a person was found to be infected. The extent and scale of facilities is a matter for health authorities to consider in the light of local needs.

Benefits (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of claimants who move between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom in any one year giving the size of the flow each way and the numbers claiming the long-term rate of benefit.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information on which a reasonable estimate could be based is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were receiving attendance allowance (a) at the higher rate, and (b) at the lower rate, at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Major: At 31 March 1985, the latest date for which information is available, an estimated 222,000 people were receiving the higher rate of attendance allowance and 321,000 the lower rate.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the percentage change in (a) staff handling supplementary benefit and (b) all staff at his Department's local offices serving Tyne Bridge constituency in the period 1979 to 1985;

(2) how many people claimed supplementary benefit in Tyne Bridge constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; and what percentage change that represents.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons claimed supplementary benefit in Barnsley, West and Penistone constituency in (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1985 and (d) 1986 to date; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at local offices of the Department for the same period.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department over the same period.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Housing Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what percentage of council tenants receive housing benefit distinguishing between those below and those above retirement age.

Mr. Major: There were an estimated 3·8 million council tenants, of whom 2·1 million were over pension age, receiving housing benefit in autumn 1985. They represented about 64 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively of all council tenants.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford), 23 May, Official Report, columns 386-90, if he will publish fresh figures for benefit entitlement taking into account entitlement to family income supplement and family credit.

Mr. Major: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Social Security Reform

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the extra costs, using the illustrative figures in the technical annex to Cmnd. 9691, social security White Paper, if (a) the allowance of £30·60 were available to all single people aged 18 years and over and (b) the allowance for a married couple were twice the allowance for single people.

Mr. Newton: It is estimated that the minimum extra cost of paying the £30·60 allowance to all single people aged 18 and over would be of the order of £200 million to £250 million and that of increasing the married couples allowance to £61·20 would be over £1,200 million. Neither estimate takes account of the extra cost arising from the additional claims to benefit that would result from these rates.

State Earnings-related Pensions

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures, similar to those in table 1 of Cmnd. 9711, and using the same assumptions, setting out the Government Actuary's estimates of anticipated expenditure on the proposed new state earnings-related pension in each year between now and 2003-04.

Mr. Newton: The proposed new arrangements for the state earnings-related pension scheme will not begin to take effect until 1999-2000 and savings will build up slowly at first. The estimated cost of SERPS retirement pensions in 2003-04 under the proposed new arrangements is £4·2 billion compared with an estimated £4·3 billion under the current arrangements. I regret that detailed figures for the years 1999-2000 to 2002-03 are not available.

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Kensington on 9 June, Official Report, column 85, if he will publish the new estimates of unclaimed housing benefit, supplementary benefit, family income supplement and one-parent benefit as soon as they become available.

Mr. Major: The new estimates of unclaimed benefits will be published as soon as possible.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his latest estimate of the number of children living in families dependent on means-tested benefits; and how he expects these figures to be affected by the introduction of family credit, income support and the proposed housing benefit changes.

Mr. Newton: The latest estimate, using data from the Family Expenditure Survey for 1984, is that the number of children living in families in receipt of means-tested benefits is approximately 3·25 million

On the basis of the illustrative assumptions set out in the technical annex accompanying Comn 9691, and assuming a minimum 20 per cent. rates contribution, there would be a net increase in the number of children in families on income related benefits of just over 150,000. The principal factor in this is the substantial increase in the number of low-paid working families who would be entitled to family credit, but would not at present be entitled to family income supplement.

Visually Handicapped People (Review)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the reason for delay in announcing an outcome to the Government's review of the certification and registration of visually handicapped people; when he expects to be able to reply to a letter dated 3 February from the director general of the Royal National Institute for the Blind; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have replied today to the letter from the director general of the Royal National Institute for the Blind and have apologised to him for the delay in doing so. The review has raised difficult and complex issues which have taken longer to consider than I would have wished, but we will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Radiation

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he has received from the Committee on the Medical Affects of Radiation in the Environment —(COMARE) — following the various reports on cancers and leukaemias around nuclear installations in specific geographical regions; if he will make a statement on his Department's use of this advice.

Mr. Whitney: COMARE has been asked to report on new information on releases from Sellafield. Its conclusions will be published by the Government and any necessary action taken. As regards the other points raised, results of scientific studies and other relevant data will be put before the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment when they are available.

Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent advice he has received from the National Radiological Protection Board, following the problems at Chernobyl and their impact on the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on his Department's use of this advice.

Mr. Whitney: The staff of the National Radiological Protection Board have been closely involved in environmental radioactivity monitoring following the accident at Chernobyl and in the Government's review of those events. Their advice has contributed and will continue to contribute to the decisions—and action—taken by the Government.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) state registered nurses, and (b) medical doctors are currently unemployed.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Single Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for (a) maternity expenses, (b) redecoration, (c) beds, (d) bedding and (e) cookers were disclosed in his survey of Scottish single payment applications on 2 July.

Mr. Major: The special count made on 2 July was solely of the number of people whose single payment claims were being processed in local offices in Scotland. Further details, such as the item claimed, were not recorded.

Social Workers

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has for each social service department as to the extent of the shortfall in establishment of (a) social workers and (b) senior social workers responsible for supervision, in relation to the levels of staffing prescribed for child abuse work.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 8 April at column 80.

Child Abuse

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the number of children who have been designated as at risk or entered on a child abuse register and who have not been allocated to a social worker either within (a) one month, (b) three months or (c) six months after their name was registered.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not held centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the college establishment-promoted and transferred posts for each further education college in Northern Ireland for the coming academic year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not yet available but figures for 1985-86 are as follows:

1. The VP's in those posts marked with an asterisk also carry out the duties of an HEO.
2. Youthways LII posts are additional to those determined as part of the overall staffing entitlement.
3. The above table does not include details of Lecturers I who have satisfied the conditions for transfer from the maximum of the LI scale to point 8 of the LII scale. Such a lecturer continues to be regarded as a lecturer grade I.

Mr. Hume: asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the information available on the amount of category three, four and five work done in each further education college in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information, in respect of the 1984-85 academic year, is as follows:

Notes:

1. These figures include YTP students' attendance hours.
2. The total of Category V hours at Rupert Stanley College includes part-time Category IV hours. These have not been included in the Category IV column. A breakdown of the hours into the correct categories is not available.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement outlining the criteria used to determine the number of full-time lecturers on the youth training programme appointed to each further education college in Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will make a statement outlining the criteria used to determine the number of full-time lecturers appointed to each further education college in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Full-time mainstream staff requirements are determined on the basis of the number of students at the college, the need for specialist teachers arising from the curriculum and in light of available resources.

Full-time youth training programme staff requirements are determined by the number of students enrolled on courses, the need for specialist teachers arising from the curriculum, the amount of day-release provision required by other providers and in light of available resources.

Riots (Portadown)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on the riots at Portadown, County Armagh on 12 July;

(2) how many plastic bullets were used in the riots at Portadown on 12 July;

(3) how many persons were injured in the riots at Portadown on 12 July.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Antrim RUC Station

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if any visits to Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station by dignitaries were (i) requested and (ii) allowed for Saturday 12 July; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many times the Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Constable has visited Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many police dogs are based at Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station; and what are their ages and breeds;

(4) how many official visits have been made by Royal Ulster Constabulary officers based at Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station to schools in the area covered by Antrim Royal Ulster Constabulary station in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

RUC (Disciplinary Proceedings)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many Royal Ulster Constabulary officers of rank below superintendent have been disciplined or had disciplinary proceedings begun against them in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, resulting from incidents when hon. Members have gained access to Royal Ulster Constabulary stations, at which those officers were stationed, without those hon. Members having gained the permission of the Chief Constable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many Royal Ulster Constabulary officers of rank superintendent or above have been disciplined, or had disciplinary proceedings begun against them in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 to date resulting from incidents when hon. Members have gained access to Royal Ulster Constabulary stations under their command without those hon. Members having gained the permission of the Chief Constable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

RUC (Notification of Events)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many notifications of (a) parades, (b) demonstrations, (c) major sporting events and (d) other major events the Royal Ulster Constabulary received which were scheduled to take place in Antrim during the afternoon of Saturday 7 June;

(2) how many notifications of (a) parades, (b) demonstrations, (c) major sporting events and (d) other major events the Royal Ulster Constabulary received which were scheduled to take place in Antrim during the morning of Saturday 7 June.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

RUC (Visits by Members)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will meet the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to discuss the procedures covering visits to Royal Ulster Constabulary stations by hon. Members and other dignitaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Council By-elections

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the council by-elections which have taken place in Northern Ireland since the last local government elections in 1985 and for which electoral areas the by-elections were held, the dates they were held and the number of votes cast for each party contesting each of those by-elections and the number of votes cast for each party contesting those electoral areas at the local government elections in 1985.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is given in the table:

	District Council	District Electoral Area	Date of by-election	First preference votes cast at by-election	First preference votes cast at local government elections 15 May 1985
1.	Banbridge	Knockaveagh	28 August 1985	Ind Unionist 1,584 SDLP .. ..1,265 UUP.. 1,116	UUP.. .. ..2,331 (4 candidates) SDLP .. .. 905 (2 candidates) DUP.. .. .. 873 (2 candidates) Ind Unionist .. 694

Elections (Identification Documents)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that at each election held in Northern Ireland a record is kept of the number of persons who attend at each polling station and who are refused a ballot paper because they are not in possession of one of the documents specified for identification purposes.

Mr. Scott: No. Procedure within polling stations is a matter for the chief electoral officer, who applies the relevant electoral rules prescribed by statute.

Explosives

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether he has been able to identify (a) the make and (b) the type of fertiliser used by the Irish Republican Army in explosive mixtures;

(2) what is his estimate of the weight of explosive mixture which has been used by the Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland in the current year and in 1985;

(3) what information he has as to how much of the fertiliser used by the Irish Republican Army in its explosive mixtures was sold in Northern Ireland in the current year and in 1985.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Terrorism (Deaths)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each month from 1 November 1985 to date the number of deaths of (a) civilians, (b) Regular Army, (c) Ulster Defence Regiment, (d) Royal Ulster Constabulary and (e) Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve caused by terrorist activity and specify in respect of which terrorist organisation there has been a claim or evidence of responsibility.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

IRA Attacks

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each month from 1 January 1985 to date the number of explosions, punishment shootings, and attacks on the security forces for which the Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility or where there is evidence that it is responsible.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Medical Cards

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to ensure that every person in Northern Ireland who is entitled to hold a medical card is issued with a card of the current type.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Secretary of State (Interview)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the 18 complaints, objections and requests for clarification which the Irish Government have lodged with the Anglo-Irish Secretariat in Belfast about an interview given by him to the Belfast Telegraph on Friday 4 July; what responses he is making to each of the 18 items; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Irish Foreign Minister (Protests)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the implications for the working of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference of recent direct protests by the Foreign Minister of the Irish Republic against the routing by the Northern Ireland authorities of certain Orange parades.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Cement

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will assess the number of jobs likely to be lost in the United Kingdom cement industry by the import of subsidised Greek cement;

(2) if he will assess the damage to the United Kingdom cement industry likely to be caused by imports of subsidised Greek cement.

Mr. John Patten: It is too early to say.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he intends to take to ensure that Greek cement imported into the United Kingdom is of an acceptable technical standard;

(2) what steps he takes to ensure that any Greek cement introduced into the United Kingdom conforms in full to the appropriate British standards.

Mr. John Patten: The Government encourage customers to specify British Standard products, but it is up to each customer to decide whether or not a product is of a suitable technical standard for his purposes.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate is available to him as to the tonnage of cement used in the United Kingdom construction industry each year since 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The information is given in the following table:

Cement Deliveries

(in thousand tonnes)

	Home deliveries of United Kingdom production	United Kingdom imports
		Portland cement	Special cement and clinker	Total
1980	14,034	92	26	118
1981	12,417	158	30	188
1982	12,685	209	73	282
1983	13,094	353	76	430
1984	13,337	395	105	500
1985	13,225	388	231	619

Notes:

(1) Imported clinker that has been ground into cement is included in home deliveries although not necessarily in the same year as the year of import.

(2) Not all cement deliveries are used by the construction industry.

Council House Sales

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects residents of local authority flats will be able to exercise the right to buy with the new discounts included in the Housing and Planning Bill.

Mr. John Patten: The Bill provides for the new discount scale for flats purchased under the right to buy to come into operation two months after Royal Assent. If the Bill becomes law in October the change will therefore take effect by the end of the year.

The general consents have been amended to allow local authorities to sell by agreement to sitting tenants at the new discounts now.

Housing Defects Legislation

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about extending the categories of houses eligible for designation under part XVI of the Housing Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My Department receives various suggestions and queries concerning designations under the Housing Defects legislation, and these are considered on their merits. If my hon. Friend wishes to write to me on any particular matter I will be pleased to deal with it.

Community Relations Councils

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the expenditure by local authorities on funding community relations councils; and if he will make an estimate of the total cost to ratepayers for the most recent 12 months period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Details of financial assistance given by local authorities to community relations councils are shown in the annual reports of the Commission for Racial Equality, copies of which are available in the library of the House.

The total cost to ratepayers depends upon how the community relations councils are financed and on individual local authorities' specific and block grant entitlement. The Department does not hold the relevant information in a form which would enable the total cost to be calculated.

Parish Councils

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the effect of his Green Paper proposals "Paying for Local Government" on the funding of parish councils.

Mr. Waldegrave: We intend that town and parish councils should continue to derive their income by precepting on borough or district councils. We shall shortly be consulting the National Association of Local Councils and the local authority associations about the operation of these proposals.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take arising from the publication of the first part of his Department's research study of houses in multiple occupation in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: We have already strengthened local authorities' powers in this area and issued relevant guidance. We are considering the need for further measures in the light of current research. We hope to publish the second part of the HMO study by the end of the year.

Planning Decisions (Appeals)

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against planning decisions by local planning authorities in Cumbria have been made to him for each year since 1974; if he will list these by each local planning authority; and if he will also list the number of appeals allowed against each authority.

Mr. Tracey: The number of appeals against planning decisions by local planning authorities in Cumbria received in the calendar years 1984 and 1985, the earliest period for which information is available, the number decided and the number allowed were:

Local Planning Authority	Number of Appeals received		Number of Appeals decided		Number of Appeals allowed
	1984	1985	1984	1985	1984	1985
Allerdale District Council	27	34	21	26	5	9
Barrow in Furness Borough Council	8	26	9	20	3	10
Carlisle City Council	14	23	8	14	0	6
Copeland Borough Council	11	13	9	10	3	5
Eden District Council	11	17	11	7	5	2
South Lakeland District Council	60	46	44	48	14	22

Golf Course (Occombe, Devon)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider calling in the application to construct a golf course at Occombe, Devon.

Mr. Tracey: Planning permission for this development has been given. I will write to my hon. Friend about this case.

River Kennett (Fish Deaths)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the implications for planning policies of the death of fish in the river Kennett arising from riparian building works.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no representations on this issue.

River Thames (Effluent Control)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the implications for effluent control policy of dead fish found in the Thames on 8 July.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations on the implications for effluent control policy of dead fish found in the Thames on 8 July.

Due to an unusual set of circumstances, including an abnormal storm, many fish died in the upper tidal Thames. Remedial measures were quickly applied by the Thames water authority, which has assured the Department that there is not likely to be any long-term effect on fish stocks.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, following the report of the Environment Committee on nuclear waste, and following the Chernobyl accident; and if he will report his Department's reactions to this advice.

Mrs. Rumbold: Professor Paul Matthews, chairman of the committee, wrote to my right hon. Friend on 6 May setting out the committee's views on the Environment Committee's report. Copies were placed in the Library. That advice and further advice upon the Environment Committee's recommendations that relate to RWMAC is included in the Committee's seventh annual report to be published on 22 July. That advice has been and will be considered carefully.

The Committee is concerned with the management of radioactive waste. It has not been called upon therefore to give advice following the Chernobyl accident.

Merseyside Residuary Body

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals have been made by his Department in respect of borrowing by the Merseyside residuary body.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Merseyside residuary body has requested borrowing consent for various purposes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has approved the payment of staff compensation costs, the recreation of those balances by Merseyside county council which were internally lent by the outgoing council, and the refinancing of debt inherited from Merseyside county council as purposes for which the residuary body may borrow in 1986-87. Other requests are being considered.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what subjects his Department has discussed with the Merseyside residuary body since its inception.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's officials have met members and officers of the Merseyside residuary body on numerous occasions to discuss matters relating to its functions, including property and finance. My noble Friend has also held meetings from time to time with the chairman of all the residuary bodies.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to widen the functions of the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to widen the functions of Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Merseyside development corporation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: The Secretary of State has not met the chairman of the Merseyside development corporation. I met Mr. Forster on 9 July. The meeting was one in a normal cycle of meetings to discuss the corporation's progress on their current corporate plan and to look forward to the preparation of the next.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the Merseyside development corporation, indicating their occupations and any outside directorships held.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows:

Mr. Donald Forster Chairman
Retired chairman of the family textile company. Former chairman Warrington and Runcorn development corporation.
Mr. John Smith, CBE Deputy Chairman
Chairman, Sports Council
Chairman, Liverpool football club
Professor Graham Ashworth, CBE
Professor of urban environmenal studies, Salford university.
Dr. Noel Boaden
Dean of the faculty of social and environment studies, Liverpool university.
Mr. Philip Carter, CBE
Chairman, Everton football club
President, English Football League
Chairman, Merseyside Tourism Board
Former managing director of Littlewoods Organisation plc
Councillor Thomas Glover
Councillor, Sefton BC
Insurance consultant
Councillor John Hale
Leader, Wirral BC
Public finance accountant with the North-West water authority
Mr. John Leigton-Boyce
Director of Pilkingtons, National Westminster bank plc and County Banks limited.
Dr. John Ritchie, MBE
Chief executive of the corporation

Members of the Merseyside development corporation are not required to notify the Department about their directorships. This list is therefore not necessarily complete.

Croxteth Hall and Country Park

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to make a statement on the future of Croxteth hall and country park, Liverpool.

Mrs. Rumbold: A statement will be made shortly.

Mr. Richard Branson

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what salary or other emoluments are to be paid to Mr. Richard Branson of the Virgin group of companies for his participation in the Government's new scheme UK 2000.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date his Department first approached Mr. Richard Branson of the Virgin group of companies to participate in the Government's new scheme UK 2000.

Mrs. Rumbold: 29 April 1986.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment at what date Richard Branson of the Virgin group of companies agreed to participate in the Government's clean-up scheme as originally announced.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mr. Branson agreed on 15 May 1986 to chair UK 2000.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what period of time Mr. Richard Branson of the Virgin group of companies has agreed to chair the Government's new programme UK 2000.

Mrs. Rumbold: For one year.

Planning Appeals (St. Albans)

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the percentage of planning appeals to him which were successful (a) in total and (b) expressed as a percentage of the total number of planning applications in the area covered by the St. Albans district council in each of the years from 1983 to 1985.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1986]: The number of appeals against planning decisions by local planning authorities in England received in the calendar years 1983, 1984 and 1985, the number decided and the number allowed were:

	Number received	Number decided	Number allowed	Percentage success rate
1983	13,699	11,221	3,633	32·4
1984	16,192	11,643	3,773	32·4
1985	17,053	14,639	5,477	37·4

I will write to my hon. Friend about the number of planning appeals relating to the area covered by the St. Albans city council.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Convicted Persons (Children)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the reports of the review of disclosure of criminal convictions of those with access to children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A joint circular was issued yesterday introducing new arrangements for police checks to be made by local authorities on paid staff and volunteers who apply or transfer to work with children and on adults in the households of those who care for children as foster parents and child minders.

Local authorities are encouraged to make use of this scheme, which will provide for the first time for pre-employment checks to be made with the police on teachers, social workers, probation officers and other staff and volunteers engaged by local authorities who will have substantial access to children in the course of their work.

Similar arrangements for early introduction are being considered by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Wales in relation to certain staff in the National Health Service and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science in relation to those working in the independent schools.

The review body on whose recommendations the circular is based, is considering proposals for an extension of these arrangements to those working in voluntary bodies providing services similar to those provided in the statutory sector for young or otherwise vulnerable children, and an acceptable means of making checking available more widely in the voluntary sector.

The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (Exceptions) (Amendment) Order 1986, which comes into effect today, taken with the 1975 Order which it amends, ensures that those seeking positions that give access to children under the joint circular and the further circulars envisaged, will not be entitled for that purpose to withhold the details of previous convictions that are spent under the terms of the 1974 Act.

Copies of the joint circular have been placed in the Library.

Metropolitan Police (N Division)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken by N division of the Metropolitan police about reports of racial harassment in the Finsbury park area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Four racial incidents in the Finsbury Park area have been reported to the police this year; three relating to burglary, grafitti and damage at local schools and the fourth involved threatening language and criminal damage. The police have been making careful inquiries but no arrests have yet been made in connection with any of these offences.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of stop and search operations in Holloway, Highbury Vale, Upper street, Caledonian road and Kings Cross police stations of N division of the Metropolitan police for each year since 1982 and each month for the current year to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Separate records are not kept for particular operations but the total numbers of persons or vehicles stopped in N district are as follows:

	Holloway & Highbury Vale	Kings Cross	Islington
1982	—*	—*	—*
1983	8,591	—*	—*
1984	4,535	3,293	3,756
1985	1,488	725	1,144
1986 January	59	19	30
February	59	11	13
March	45	38	30
April	56	15	18
May	34	17	14
June	34	10	11

* Information not available.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports and complaints have been received about the occupants of 35 Avewall road, London N5 by N division of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The N district community liaison officer received a telephone call alleging that criminal offences were being committed on the premises. Police inquiries have revealed no evidence to support that allegation. The police have also received recent reports of two assaults taking place at the premises. Inquiries into this are continuing.

Overseas Visitors (Sportsmen)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the practice of his Department on allowing entry into the United Kingdom in relation to visits by overseas sportsmen to the United Kingdom where the visit has been paid for by charitable organisations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Many sportsmen are admitted under the provisions in the immigration rules relating to visitors but work permits are required if the terms of the engagement amount to employment.

Immigration

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to send letters of reminder before reaching a decision in immigration cases where the applicant must supply evidence to his Department within a reasonable time and the information is not then to hand.

Mr. Waddington: Applicants are allowed a reasonable time in which to provide information we need to resolve their cases. Where it appears that the applicant is taking an undue period to send in this evidence, our practice is to send a standard reminder letter which refers to the previous request and explains that, if the information sought is not provided within two weeks, the application may be refused.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy not to refuse applications for extension of leave to stay in the United Kingdom on the grounds of unreasonable delay in producing documents or other evidence of support unless a reminder has been sent to the applicant and a further period allowed for reply.

Mr. Waddington: This is already our practice. If the hon. and learned Member has any particular case in mind in which he considers that this has not happened I shall willingly look into it.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that any representations by hon. Members in immigration cases may be rejected or refused only on the personal authority of a Minister of the Crown in his Department after personal consideration by such a Minister.

Mr. Hurd: The respective roles of Ministers, their Private Offices and the immigration service are set out in the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, which this House endorsed on 26 March.

Murder Investigations

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what additional police resources will be made available to the Brixton division to assist in the present wave of murder investigations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The deployment of his officers is a matter for the Commissioner but I understand that, as a result of these inquiries, 106 officers are currently on loan to No. 4 Area which includes Brixton division.

Juveniles (Alcohol Purchases)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been during the last five years for which records are available in cases relating to juveniles purchasing alcohol from (a) supermarkets and (b) home brew outlets.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete to a varying extent in different years, is shown in the following table. The information collected centrally does not include details of the circumstances of the offence.

Persons proceeded against for selling intoxicating liquor to persons under 18 and persons under 18 proceeded against for buying or consuming intoxicating liquor in licensed premises.

England and Wales	Number of defendants
	Total	Selling liquor	Buying liquor
1980	4,506	439	4,067
1981	3,175	410	2,765
1982	2,254	323	1,931
1983	1,934	307	1,627
1984	1,485	314	1,171

Licensing (Occasional Permissions) Act 1983

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the operation of the Licensing (Occasional Permissions) Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans to do so. The introduction of occasional permissions was a welcome development and we have no evidence to suggest that a review is necessary.

Civil Defence

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which elements of the north-west's pilot study on home defence planning would not be included in civil defence planning.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The pilot study is concerned with the regional co-ordination of all civil home defence planning. It includes therefore planning for civil support to the military as well as civil defence.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which civil organisations with responsibilities in a war crisis have been invited to take part in the regional civil defence exercise in the north-west at the end of November;

(2) which civil defence organisations in the south-east have been invited, and which have been instructed, to take part in the regional civil defence exercise at the end of November; and which of these have agreed to participate;

(3) which district and county councils have been invited, and which have been instructed, in accordance with the 1983 civil defence regulations, to take part in the regional civil defence exercise at the end of November; and of these, which have agreed to participate.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 30 June at column 369.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the scenarios to be used in the regional civil defence exercises in the south-east and north-west at the end of November.

Mr. Giles Shaw Yes, nearer the time when they have been finalised.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister which Commonwealth countries have indicated support for current Government policy towards South Africa.

The Prime Minister: All Commonwealth Governments subscribe to the policy with regard to South Africa agreed at the Nassau summit in October 1985.

Official Visits

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 218, if she will specify the reason for each of the official visits abroad listed in that answer and in the earlier answers of 10 December 1985, Official Report, columns 575-77, and 7 July, Official Report, column 5.

The Prime Minister: The purpose of my official visits overseas has been primarily to take part in multilateral and bilateral meetings including those of the European Community, the annual economic summits, and Commonwealth Heads of Government. I have also had the pleasure of taking up a number of invitations I have received to pay official visits to overseas countries.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 218, if she will specify the countries included in the following official visits abroad: April 1981 middle east, September/October 1981 middle east, September 1982 far east and April 1985 south-east Asia.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

April 1981
Saudi Arabia
Abu Dhabi
Dubai
Oman
Qatar

September 1981
Kuwait
Bahrain

September 1982
Hong Kong
China
Japan

April 1985
Malaysia
Brunei
Indonesia
Singapore
Sri Lanka
India

On my return journey I also visited Saudi Arabia.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vickers plc

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial aid Her Majesty's Government have given to Vickers plc to support its business in north-east England ; and how much has been given by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department of Trade and Industry has given £3·579 million financial aid (regional development grants (old style) and regional selective assistance) to Vickers companies in north-east England since 1 May 1979. It would require a disproportionate use of resources to attempt to assemble information about any aid given by local authorities.

Notes:

(a) Any support for innovation assistance provided under the Science and Technology Act cannot be disclosed without consent of the applicant.

(b) The figure for regional development grant consists of individual payments of £25K or more of old style RDG as published in "British Business".

(c) The figure for regional selective assistance consists of offers as published in "British Business".

(d) Aid given means offered in respect of RSA and paid in respect of RDG.

EUREKA

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why Yugoslavia was excluded from the EUREKA programme; and what are the criteria for EUREKA membership.

Mr. Pattie: EUREKA is a framework to encourage commercial collaboration between European firms on market-oriented high technology projects. The EUREKA members have agreed that membership of EUREKA will not be increased for the present, but participation in projects by firms from non-EUREKA countries at the invitation of the participating companies is not excluded.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what alterations have been made to the support for innovation scheme to allow EUREKA projects to become eligible for support.

Mr. Pattie: Under the support for innovation scheme, United Kingdom firms participating in EUREKA are eligible for support of up to 50 per cent. of their share of the applied research costs and up to 25 per cent. of their share of development costs. For the purpose of participating in EUREKA, only one United Kingdom firm (as opposed to three) need be involved in a project to qualify for assistance at the higher level. In other respects, the terms of assistance in each case will be determined under the normal SFI criteria.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated United Kingdom trade with (a) the rest of the Commonwealth, (b) the New Commonwealth and (c) South Africa in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table.

United Kingdom Trade—Year Ending May 1986

	£ million, OTS Basis
	Exports	Imports
Commonwealth	8,301	6,959
New Commonwealth*	4,902	4,250
South Africa	873	917

* Commonwealth excluding Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

India and Pakistan (Rice)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes are proposed concerning the importation into the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community of basmati rice from India and Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Commission has proposed a 50 per cent. reduction in the levy for imports of 15,000 tons of basmati rice. The proposal is intended to help both India and Pakistan but in its present form appears unlikely to do so. The Commission has been asked to reconsider its proposal to improve benefits to India and Pakistan and to minimise any damage to the Community rice milling industry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Portadown (Injuries)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces and civilians were injured during civil unrest in Portadown in the period 1 to 14 July in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Portadown (Plastic Bullets)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets were fired by security forces in Portadown in the period 1 to 14 July in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Portadown (Orange Parade)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received any representations from the Government of the Republic of Ireland in the aftermath of the Orange parade in Portadown; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Strangford (Public Order)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the level of public order maintained during the recent Orange celebrations in the Ards and Castlereagh districts within the constituency of Strangford; and what estimate the police have made of the numbers taking part.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Drugs

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent of involvement of paramilitary organisations in the misuse of drugs and drug trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level and trends of misuse of drugs in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to possible changes in the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and what discussions he has had with the Government of the Republic of Ireland about that possibility.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the 18 complaints, objections and requests for clarification that have been called for by the Irish Government on the Anglo-Irish Agreement as a result of his press interview released on Friday, 4 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 371]: The Anglo-Irish Agreement provides under article 11 that the working of the Intergovernmental Conference shall be reviewed after three years and that it may be reviewed earlier if either the United Kingdom or the Irish Government wish. The Government have made it clear that if there were agreement upon proposals for devolved government we should need to review the implications of any such proposals for the working of the Intergovernmental Conference. I can foresee no other circumstances in which we might need to review the working of the conference before the end of the three year period and I have not discussed any proposals with the Irish Government.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the implications for the working of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference of recent direct protests by the Foreign Minister of the Irish Republic against the routing by the Northern Ireland authorities of certain Orange parades.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1986]: I see no grounds at present to justify a review.

Orange Marches

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Republic of Ireland about traditional Orange Marches during July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 367]: Decisions on the routes of individual marches are the responsibility of the Chief Constable. After he had made public his decision in respect of the march at Portadown on 12 July to allow a limited number of Orange lodges, subject to strict conditions, to parade along Garvaghy road but not Obins street, the Irish Government communicated their strong views on that decision. They have made no representations about other particular routes for Orange parades, but they have conveyed to me very clearly their views on the general issues of marches, including especially the safety of the minority community.

"Belfast Telegraph" (Ministerial Interview)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Government of the Republic of Ireland arising from his interview in the Belfast Telegraph on Friday 4 July; and if he will make a statement on each of the issues involved in these representations.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 367]: Mr. Barry has expressed views on the article in the Belfast Telegraph. I hope in due course to be able to discuss with him the issues with which it dealt.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many letters from hon. Members to his Department still awaiting a substantive reply were received more than (a) one month ago, (b) two months ago, (c) three months ago and (d) four months ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 368]: The information is as follows:

Category	Number outstanding
(a)	2
(b)	2
(c)	—
(d)	2

The majority of letters are answered within seven working days. The six outstanding letters raise complex issues which require further detailed investigation or need to await the outcome of statutory procedures, before substantive replies can be given.

Medical Cards

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to ensure that every person in Northern Ireland who is entitled to hold a medical card is issued with a card of the current type.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1986]: It is the responsibility of the individual to apply to the Central Services Agency for issue or replacement of a medical card.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Financial Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1956 the increase in the national debt and in the cost of servicing it, together with the ratio of the national debt to gross domestic product at the end of each year;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1956 the net increase in the floating debt in terms of sterling and as a percentage to one place of decimal of gross domestic product showing separately the value of money market instruments held by the Bank of England;

(3) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the expansion of domestic credit (DCE) each year since 1970, in the current year to date and in terms of sterling and as a percentage of sterling M3 at the beginning of the year and also for each period the percentage increase in sterling M3 and in the gross domestic product deflator;

(4) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1956 imports of United Kingdom finished manufactures as a percentage of gross domestic product to one place of decimals;

(5) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1970 and in the current year to date the difference in the percentage increase in earnings and, respectively, the increase in retail prices and the gross domestic product deflator, to one place of decimals;

(6) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1956 and in the current year to date the increase in wholesale prices of manufactures as a percentage of the increase in unit value of (a) imports and (b) exports of finished manufactures;

(7) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1977 and in the current year to date the velocity of circulation for narrow and broad money, respectively, together with the percentage change to one place of decimals;

(8) whether he will publish in the Official Report the annual increases in output per head, wages and salaries per unit of output in manufacturing, rate of unemployment and increase in retail prices since 1981.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information on the increase in the real money supply in certain countries given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby dated 5 March 1985, Official Report, columns 450-2; and if he will include comparable figures for 1964 to 1973.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 434]: No. The Official Report is not a statistical abstract.

European Communities (Own Resources Payments)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the early payment of non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities in July.

Mr. Brooke: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77, the Commission has invited member states to advance from August the payment of own resources other than VAT in respect of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties collected by the Government on its behalf.

In accordance with this request, the Government propose to make an advance payment of some £118 million on 21 July. this will be financed initially by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund, pending Royal Assent for the Estimate approved by the House on 10 July. The payment of levies and duties on the due date will be reduced by the amount of the advance. There will, therefore, be no net addition to public expenditure.

EC Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate information available to him on the assessed base, in mecu and pound sterling, for each of the 12 member states of the European Economic Community for the year 1986, together with the unadjusted rate of that base levied, to three places of decimals, together with the equivalent sum, in mecu and pound sterling, to be paid by Her Majesty's Government to the European Economic Community, on the basis of the Council budget, expressing that sum as an approximate percentage of income likely to accrue from domestic value added tax in 1986.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1986, c. 194-5]: the VAT base of each member state in 1986 is given in the table. On the basis of the recently agreed budget for 1986, adopted on 10 July, the unadjusted (or uniform) VAT rate is 1·2505 per cent. The United Kingdom's VAT contribution is 4,140 mecu before abatement (£2,572 million at the budget exchange rate), and 2,240 mecu after abatement (£1,392 million). £1,392 million is 6·7 per cent. of the expected VAT yield in 1986-87.

DEFENCE

Challenger Tank Regiment

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his statement on 1 July, Official Report, column 862, when he anticipates he will be in a position to announce his decision as to a seventh Chanllenger regiment; what representations he has received from suppliers as to the implications of further delay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As regards timing of a further order for Challenger tanks I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 11 July 1986 at column 305. As the House is aware, we are in discussion with Royal Ordnance and Vickers plc, which are potential suppliers of Challengers tanks. Some suppliers of tank components have also inquired about the prospects for future orders.

COD Donnington

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are planned to maintain present levels of security clearance of those working at COD Donnington after the planned putting out to contract of security services.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1986, c. 427]: The feasibility study into contracting-out of administrative functions at COD Donnington and its associated Garrison will not be complete until the end of November 1986. However, security considerations would be fully taken into account when arriving at the eventual decision.

Royal Ordnance Factory Barnbow

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of Royal Ordnance plc now employed at royal ordnance factor Barnbow in Leeds are in mobile grades with the right to transfer elsewhere in the group in the event of the sale of royal ordnance factory Barnbow to an outside purchaser.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1986, c. 305]: I am advised that there are about 380 people in mobile grades at royal ordnance, Leeds. As regards mobility, in the event of a sale to an outside purchaser, all employees at Leeds would be in no different position from the one they were in at the time they were transferred from the Civil Service to Royal Ordnance plc.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Tanzania; and what steps he has taken in response.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no recent reports of human rights violations in Tanzania.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Uganda; and what steps he has taken in response.

Mrs. Chalker: The situation in Uganda is much improved. President Museveni's administration is committed to full respect for human rights. The United Kingdom is providing substantial economic assistance, training for Ugandan army instructors, and assistance to the police force to help in establishing stability in Uganda and encouraging respect for human rights.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Kenya; and what steps he has taken in response.

Mrs. Chalker: We are aware of only a very limited number of detainees held without trial under the Preservation of Public Security Act. The general policy of the Kenyan Government is to bring such cases to trial at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Ghana; and what steps he has taken in response.

Mrs. Chalker: In general the human rights situation in Ghana has improved over the last few years. A small numbe: of political dissidents remain in detention under the Preventive Custody Law 1982.

We continue to monitor human rights on a worldwide basis and regularly make clear in appropriate fora our view that human rights must be respected in accordance with internationally agreed standards.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of human rights in Nigeria; and what steps he has taken in response.

Mrs. Chalker: The present Nigerian Government, who came to power in August 1985, have taken a number of steps to demonstrate their commitment to human rights, including the release of former political detainees and the restoration of press freedom. The Government have also announced a return to civilian rule by 1990.

We continue to monitor human rights on a worldwide basis and regularly make clear in appropriate fora our view that human rights must be respected in accordance with internationally agreed standards.

Penguins (Radiation)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the result of the examination of the 15 penguin carcases being examined at the veterinary investigation centre in Norwich; what radiation levels were found in the penguins; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 3 July at column 640.

Foreign Minister (USSR)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent meetings with the Foreign Minister of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mrs. Chalker: Our talks with Mr. Shevardnadze were useful and businesslike. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary discussed with him a full range of East-West issues including arms control and regional questions. The Soviet Union were urged to resume the summit process with the United States. In the course of a wideranging discussion of current arms control and disarmament issues, the importance was stressed of reaching agreement in the conference on disarmament in Europe at Stockholm and urged support for a British initiative in Geneva proposing a way forward towards a global and verifiable ban on chemical weapons. We also urged the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and pressed for progress in resolving human rights cases and cases of divided families. We signed agreements on long-term economic co-operation; on the prevention of incidents at sea; and on the settlement of the long standing question of pre-1939 claims. Both my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary have accepted invitations to visit the Soviet Union.

South Africa

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Commonwealth countries have made representations to Her Majesty's Government concerning South Africa in the last two months.

Mrs. Chalker: Policy towards South Africa is one of the subjects regularly discussed in our exchanges with other Commonwealth Governments.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make representations to the South African Government for the release of the following individuals who have been detained without charge, namely Lizz Mayisa, Emily Ntuli, Joyce Ntuli, Ephraim Nkosi, Maurise Ngwena, Elizabeth Ngwena, Wiza Mabena, Stanley Mtshali, Zephamia Matuebula, Deluve Mayaba and Sarah Ngubeni from Leandra township, Reverend Bikisha Njimbuwea, Dunuisa Nthuli, Mr. or Mrs. Khanyile and Dolly Mateza from Thokoza township, Reverend Sipho Masemola from Radfontein township, Reverend Joseph Mcilougo from Khutsong township, Bishop Sigisbert Ndwandwe from Jouberton township, Joseph Thobela and Lephina Thobela from Duduza township and Zacharia Mohutsioa from Katlehoug township; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make representations to the South African Government for the release of the following individuals who have been detained without charge, namely Reverend Peter Hortop, Ames Mahlangu, British Sxabai, Duke More, Cyril Jautjies, Philip Mazusa, Mauda Motsweni and Nora Mitchell from Kwa Thema township, Nat Ramokgopa, Pat Lepouya, Vusi Khanyile, Isaac Mogafe, Ishmail Mkhabela, Dr. Abu Asvat, Moses Mayekiso, Aza Cachalia, Azir Cachalia and Cauzi Lisa from Soweto township, Reverend Aaron Mdoi from Tembisa township, Kempton Nhlapho, Sello Nhlapho, Suiuon Mayisa, Mama Mayisa and Joshua Mayisa from Leandra township; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make representations to the South African Government for the release of the following individuals who have been detained without charge, namely: Collie Hayward, Victor Sibaude, Percy Dladla, Charles Dladla, Sipho Mageta, Whiza Dladla, Doctor Mthobeni, Dad Maseko, Jabulani Shinini, Mbuzini Mahlangn, Oupa Mobatha, Harry Yeude, Bheki Khosa, Alan Manwele Nthinunye, Luidsay Sibaude, Kenneth Nkosi and Makabuza Yeued from Bethnal township; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make representations to the South African Government concerning an incident at the Ecumenical Fellowship Centre, Wilgespruit, near Johannesburg, on the evening of 26 June, when police raided the centre and took away five children whose whereabouts are now unknown; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her reply of 26 June to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) at column 265 we have made representations to the South African Government about detentions under the state of emergency. Acting on behalf of the Twelve, the then Netherlands presidency had previously made representations to the South African Government about the imposition of the state of emergency. The presidency protested at the indiscriminate arrests of church, community and trade union leaders. We remain ready to make further representations where appropriate.

China (Government Bonds)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in the negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the People's Republic of China for the settlement of capital and income from bonds issued by the Government prior to 1948; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A first round of claims negotiations was held in Peking from 5 to 10 May 1986. They took place in a friendly and frank atmosphere. We are currently discussing with the Chinese authorities the dates and venue for a second round of talks.

WALES

Radioactivity

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what other animals, materials or crops and silage he is using for the purpose of monitoring levels of radiocaesium besides sheep on Anglesey; what are the results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: General data relating to agricultural produce and animals throughout Wales since the Chernobyl accident are being published today. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to authorise local housing authorities who, as a result of circular 30/86, perceive a shortage of houses in their area considered to be sufficiently attractive for senior managers and senior technical staff, to acquire by compulsory purchase second or holiday homes in order to make them available for such purposes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is not my intention to consider such a policy.

Welsh Water Consumer Committee

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will expand the length of time that a member may serve on the Welsh water consumer committee to 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Committee on Welsh Affairs recommended in its report "Establishment of Local Consumer Advisory Committees" (HCP335, Session 1981-82) that the maximum period of continuous service for a member of a local consumer advisory committee in Wales should be six years. This was accepted by the Government when the committees were established in November 1982 and there are no plans to extend the period significantly.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to proceed with alterations in the water and sewerage law so that private sewers are adopted by the Welsh water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Government are currently considering the responses to the water and sewerage law consultation paper. No decision has yet been made on the question whether private sewers should be adopted by water authorities.

O and A-Level Examinations

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh students took A-level and O-level examinations this year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information for 1986 is not yet available. The figures for 1985 summer examinations, as provided by the Welsh joint education committee, are 11,583 and 56,522 respectively.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judicial Review (Single Judge)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Attorney-General if it is now the invariable practice for the single judge, in refusing an application for a judicial review, to state his reasons; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Where an application for leave to apply for judicial review is refused without a hearing, it is the practice of the judge to state his reasons in writing, concisely, on the prescribed form of notice of his decision. Where there is a hearing the court indicates its reasons when announcing its decision to refuse leave.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programmes (Managing Agents)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many managing agents appointed under the community programme or the community enterprise programme, have been excluded from the schemes since their start; and what were the reasons for exclusion or curtailment of their activities.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 4 July 1986 at column 622.

Restart Programme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many individual claimants have been disqualified from receiving benefit as a result of restart interviews of long-term unemployed claimants in each of the nine pilot areas, giving the reasons for disqualification; whether a standard form of questions is asked of individual claimants; and whether the responses of claimants are to be collated and the results made available.

Mr. Lang: People interviewed under the restart programme may subsequently be disqualified by the benefit authorities from receiving unemployment related benefits for two reasons:

(i) if they are not available for work or are imposing such restrictions on the kind of work they are prepared to accept that they have no reasonable prospects of securing employment; or

(ii) if they refuse without good cause a suitable job or training opportunity.

These conditions apply to anyone receiving unemployment related benefits and not just to those interviewed under restart. The information requested for each pilot area is as follows:

Number of cases in which unemployment and/or supplementary benefit was disallowed (up to 27 June)

Pilot area	Reason
	Availability for work	Refusal of suitable employment or training
Billingham	1	1
Crawley	1	11
Dundee	3	—
Ealing	20	1
Huddersfield	1	—
Plymouth	6	—
Port Talbot	14	4
Preston	1	1
Stoke-on-Trent	13	—
Total	60	18

In cases of doubt about availability for work, the unemployment benefit office will ask the claimant to answer certain standard questions, under long-standing procedures for inquiring into availability for work. The responses to these questions are used to consider an individual claimant's entitlement to benefit, and they will not be collated.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what proportion of people interviewed on the restart programme are referred to Department of Health and Social Security benefits offices on the grounds that they are earning more than £4 a week.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 16 July]: The prime objective of the restart programme is to help long-term unemployed people back into jobs. Interviews are conducted with this aim in mind and the information requested by my hon. Friend is not therefore available from this particular source.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General (1) how many vacancies exist by industrial classification in (a) the north-west and (b) Lancashire;

(2) what is the total number of vacancies by industrial classification currently known at his offices in (a) the Burnley constituency, (b) the Pendle constituency, (c) the Hyndburn constituency and (d) the Rossendale constituency.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the north-west region and in Lancashire as at 2 May 1986, analysed by the 1980 standard industrial classification. The table also gives figures for those jobcentres which cover areas closely corresponding to the parliamentary constituencies requested.

1980 Standard Industrial Classification	North West Region	Lancashire	Best fits to Parliamentary Constituencies

Supplementary and Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General (1) whether the attendance of a person offered a place on the Manpower Services Commission's voluntary projects programme or wider opportunities programme, available under the Government's restart programme, will be monitored for the purposes of eligibility for unemployment benefit, if in receipt of such benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the attendance of a person offered a place on any of the education courses available under the Government's restart programme will be monitored for the purposes of eligibility for unemployment benefit, if in receipt of such benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Consideration of disqualification from receiving unemployment benefit for up to six weeks is considered where the Manpower Services Commission reports to the unemployment benefit service that a person interviewed by jobcentre staff (under restart or otherwise) has without good cause refused an opportunity of a suitable job or training approved by the Secretary of State. Those who decline places on the voluntary projects programme, the wider opportunities programme or education courses, and also the restart course itself, are not so reported.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what arrangements have been made for the financing of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, for Northern Ireland and for Wales announced the setting up of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in the White Paper "Working Together: Education and Training" presented to this House and in another place on 2 July. The council will be established initially as a controlled non-departmental public body in receipt of a grant-in-aid from the Department of Employment with contributions from the Department of Education and Science and the Northern Ireland and Welsh Offices. From the beginning of financial year 1990-91 we shall expect the council to be self-supporting.

Legislative authority for this Government expenditure is provided by sections 2 and 3 of the Employment and Training Act 1973. Financial provision will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the labour market services vote (class VII, vote 1). Pending Parliament's approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £300,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

SCOTLAND

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the projected capital costs, fuel costs and other operation costs in pence/kwh at March 1986 prices for the first four years of the operation of Torness power station;

(2) if he will give an estimate of the cost of interest and borrowing charges arising from the construction of Torness power station.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall ask the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his Department's current forecasts for the costs of coal, oil, and nuclear fuel, respectively, in pence/kwh during the lifetime of Torness power station.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Industry Department for Scotland makes no such forecasts.

Electricity Tariff

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average electricity tariff in the South of Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall ask the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to write to the hon. Member.

Power Station Costs

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the capital costs, fuel costs and other operational costs in pence/kwh at March 1986 prices, for the power stations at Inverkip, Longannet and Hunterston B;

(2) what price per tonne is currently being paid for new supplies of oil fuel for Inverkip power station;

(3) what percentage increase there has been in each year since 1980 in fuel costs at the power stations at Inverkip, Longannet and Hunterston B, respectively.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall ask the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the price per tonne of power station coal under the new agreement between the South of Scotland electricity board and British Coal.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Costs of coal are the subject of confidential agreement between the SSEB and its suppliers.

Superior Court

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the report of the review body on the use of judicial time in the superior courts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: On Tuesday 23 July 1985, the First Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments considered the Draft Maximum Number of Judges (Scotland) Order 1985, the purpose of which was to increase the maximum number of judges of the Court of Session from 22 to 23. During the proceedings, my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland with responsibility for home affairs, health and social work, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram) announced the setting up of a review body under Lord Maxwell's chairmanship wth the following terms of reference:—

"To investigate means by which judicial time in the Superior Courts may be organised more effectively in order to secure earlier disposal of cases sent to the appropriate rolls of the Court of Session for proof, debate and appellate court hearings: and to report with recommendations."

The review body was set up with the agreement of the Lord President of the Court of Session and it was asked to report as quickly as possible.

Lord Maxwell submitted his report to me on 25 April and since then its recommendations have been the subject of consultation between the Lord President and myself. The report is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and will be made available to representative bodies who made submissions to Lord Maxwell's review body. Copies of the report are available from the Scottish Courts Administration at a price of £7·50.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

South African Observatory

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will provide an estimate of the value of equipment to which the Science and Engineering Research Council has title at the South African astronomical observatory;

(2) if he will direct the Science and Engineering Research Council to terminate its inter-agency agreement with the South African Council for Scientific and Industrial Research and arrange for the repatriation of the Science and Engineering Research Council's equipment at the South African astronomical observatory.

Mr. Walden: The SERC has already suspended the inter-agency agreement for financial reasons. The SERC-owned equipment at the South African astronomical observatory comprises the equipment from the former Cape observatory, the principal items of which were valued at R750,000 at the time of the agreement in 1972, together with equipment purchased over the period 1972-83 for about R200,000. In addition, SERC holds joint title to library and archival material acquired by SAAO since its establishment. With the exception of some small items of electronic equipment the cost of repatriating the equipment to which SERC has title would almost certainly exceed its value.

School Buildings (Toilets)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 105, if the sample survey of the improvement needs of the existing stock of school building has yet produced any fresh estimate of the number of schools which still have only outside toilets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The survey of school improvement needs, when complete, should provide information on the improvements needed to toilet accommodation where this is below the standards of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 (SI 909). As the regulations do not prohibit outside toilets as such, the survey will not yield information on the extent of their provision.

Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current figure for the number of surplus places in primary and in secondary schools; and what further number he expects to be taken out of use in the next five years.

Mr. Dunn: There are currently around 1,000,000 surplus pupil places in primary schools and 670,000 in secondary schools. It is estimated that 273,000 pupil places in primary schools and 730,000 in secondary schools could be taken out of use by 1991-92.

School Attendance

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Mid Staffordshire of 8 July, Official Report, column 130, about school attendance, if he will list in the Official Report which local education authorities did not reply to his Department's circular "School Attendance and Education Welfare Services" by 31 May last; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that these authorities take steps to reply.

Mr. Chris Patten: Sixty three local education authorities have replied to the circular. Those whose replies are still outstanding have been asked to reply as soon as possible.

Teachers and Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the maximum and minimum salaries of (a) a senior teacher in a school and (b) a lecturer on the career scale lecturer II senior lecturer in a polytechnic at (i) 1 April 1979, (ii) 1 September 1980, following the comparability study under the chairmanship of Professor Clegg and (iii) 1 April 1986 all expressed in terms of 1 April 1986, as corrected by the index of average earnings and the decrease in comparable terms between 1 September 1980 and 1 April 1986 following the recent interim award.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures for the years 1979-80 to 1986-87 for the level of capital expenditure, broken down into major and minor works, purchase of items costing over £100,000, other teaching and research equipment, furniture/plant/machinery/vehicles, unrelated to new building work, land acquisition, design fees, and any other expenditure, and showing the relative scale of expenditure in (a) the university sector and (b) the public sector of advanced further education.

Mr. Walden: I regret that the information in the form requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

16 to 17-year-olds

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the percentage of the population aged 16 to 17 years in full-time and part-time education in school and in further education in each local education authority for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85.

Mr. Dunn: The readily available information was published in April in the Department's Statistical Bulletin 9/86, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hampshire

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many teachers were employed, and pupils were enrolled in (a) secondary schools and (b) primary schools in the county of Hampshire in each of the last 10 years, and to the teacher-pupil ratio in each case for each year.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1986]: The number of pupils and qualified teachers in maintained primary and secondary schools and the pupil-teacher ratio within each type of school in each year between 1976 and 1985 are given below.

Hampshire

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Butter

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with (a) the European Community Commission, (b) the French Government and (c) the New Zealand Government about proposals for increased butter imports from New Zealand into the European Community following the agreement between France and New Zealand on the Rainbow Warrior incident; and what quantities will be imported (i) into the United Kingdom and (ii) into France.

Mr. Gummer: We have had thorough discussions on this subject with our colleagues in the European Community, in particular during the Agriculture Council which my right hon. Friend the Minister chaired on 14-15 July. We have also discussed the question with visiting New Zealand Ministers in recent months.

The Council has to decide by 1 August 1986 on the quantities of butter which can be imported into the United Kingdom on special terms in 1987 and 1988. The Commission has proposed that the 1986 quantity of 79,000 tonnes should be reduced to 77,000 tonnes in 1987 and 75,000 tonnes in 1988. The question will be considered further by the Foreign Affairs Council next week.

Radioactivity

Mr. Heddle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the latest results of testing undertaken by his Department on foodstuffs other than sheepmeat following the accident at Chernobyl.

Mr. Jopling: In addition to monitoring sheep and lambs from Cumbria, my Department has continued to test other foodstuffs which could have been affected by the Chernobyl accident. I am arranging for a copy of the data available since such information was last published on 20 June to be placed in the Library of the House.

The data shows that radio-iodine is no longer of radiological significance and amounts of radiocaesium, which takes rather longer to decay, are continuing to fall steadily in all food products including sheep. The special measures I have taken in Cumbria will ensure that all sheep being marketed are within internationally acceptable levels.

I can, therefore, report on the basis of current and previous monitoring results that the position on foodstuffs produced in this country for home consumption and export is entirely satisfactory.

North-West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation

Mr. Heddle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the adoption of commission document 8000/86 concerning the NAFO joint international enforcement scheme and commission document 8001/86 concerning a scientific observation programme in the NAFO regulatory area.

Mr. Jopling: Commission document 8000/86 contains a draft decision concerning the scheme of joint international enforcement of the North-West Fisheries Atlantic Organisation and commission document 8001/86 contains a draft decision on the arrangements in the form of an exchange of letters between the Community and the Government of Canada on the establishment of a scientific observation programme in the regulatory area of the NAFO convention. In both cases the draft decisions were intended to authorise the Commission to withdraw from or terminate the existing schemes which had not in the Commission's view been working satisfactorily and to renegotiate successor arrangements.

At the meeting of the Fisheries Council on 25 June it was agreed these two international agreements should be renegotiated. Exceptionally, I agreed to the adoption of the two decisions in advance of the deposit of the documents in both Houses and the completion of the normal scrutiny procedures, so as not to delay the required notice of withdrawal from the current NAFO joint enforcement scheme by 30 June 1987 and termination of the scientific observation programme by 31 December 1986, as requested by the Commission.

Hedges (Grants)

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the grant for removal of hedges in order to amalgamate fields was introduced; and when it was discontinued;

(2) what level of grant was paid to farmers in each of the last three years to assist them in removing hedges in order to amalgamate fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 17 July 1986]: Grants for the removal of hedges to facilitate field amalgamation were introduced in 1957. They were discontinued in 1974 and no grants have been paid for this purpose since 1976. The agriculture inmprovement scheme, which was introduced on 1 October 1985, now encourages the provision, replacement or improvement of hedges through grants at rates of 60 per cent. in the less-favoured areas and 30 per cent. elsewhere. These high rates of grant reflect our concern for the conservation of the environment.

Faroe Islands

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of fish and fish products, respectively, imported from the Faroe Islands in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1986]: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of Fish and Fish Products: Faroe Islands 1981-85

(£ million)

	1981	1982	1983	1984	*1985

Total fish = Fresh or chilled and frozen.
Fish products = Cured fish, prepared and preserved, shellfish, fishmeal oils and fats.

Iceland and Norway

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of fish and fish products, respectively, imported from (a) Iceland and (b) Norway in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1986]: The information requested is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of Fish and Fish Products: 1981-85

TRANSPORT

Airships (Noise)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the controls on airships overflying the metropolis, particularly in terms of permitted noise levels.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An airship has to comply with the Air Navigation Order 1985 and the rules of the air and obey air traffic control instructions. There are no noise regulations for airships. Recently a number of people have been disturbed by repeated overflights and I am considering whether there are any steps that can sensibly be taken to alleviate the nuisance.

Safety Barriers

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Fry) of 4 July Official Report, column 653, on motorway and trunk road safety barriers what was the number of deaths and injuries occasioned by the accidents listed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers of deaths and injuries in accidents in which at last one vehicle crossed the central reservation and hit a crash barrier, detailed in my reply to the hon. Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Fry) on 4 July, Official Report, column 653 are given in the table below:

Year	Motorways		Class 'A' Dual Carriageways
	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured
1980	1	51	3	47
1981	5	75	1	46
1982	3	39	7	61
1983	14	97	8	89
1984	8	46	7	116

In 1984 these accidents accounted for some 4 per cent. of deaths and less than ½ per cent. of injuries on motorways; and 1 per cent. of deaths and less than 1 per cent. of injuries on class A dual carriageways.

Arundel Bypass

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Arundel from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport dated 13 June, he is now in a position to announce what progress has been made in implementing an agreed work programme for the Crossbush section of the proposed Arundel bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not yet completed investigations into the possibility of building the eastern section of the Arundel bypass ahead of the rest. Work is proceeding as quickly as possible. I will make an announcement as soon as I can.

"Tomorrow's Buses"

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the cost of the series of leaflets entitled "Tomorrow's Buses", produced by his Department; and what is the total projected cost of this campaign.

Mr. David Mitchell: So far a total of £81,000 has been spent. A further leaflet and accompanying booklet for those thinking of running local bus services for the first time are in preparation. The total cost will depend on demand.

Greater Manchester PTA

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport what financial allocation has been made for 1987-88 and 1988-89 for the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority; and what is the current figure.

Mr. David Mitchell: The capital allocation for the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority for 1986-87 is £8·734 million. Allocations in respect of 1987-88 and 1988-89 have not yet been made. As to current expenditure, I refer the hon. Gentlemen to my reply given at column 666 on 20 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester). Expenditure levels for passenger transport authorities for 1987-88 will be determined and announced later this month.

Heathrow Airport

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the undertakings given by his Department to the hon. Member for Windsor and Maidenhead since May 1979 regarding the Government's policy towards the construction of a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport; what is Her Majesty's Government's current policy on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's current policy remains that set out in paragraph 5.19 of the June 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd. 9542). A listing of the many times that this policy has been reiterated would involve a search incurring a disproportionate cost to the Department.

ENVIRONMENT

UK 2000

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how people in Bradford interested in joining projects within the UK 2000 scheme should apply; how many places are expected to become available to people in Bradford; how firms in Bradford interested in participating in UK 2000 become involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Individuals and firms interested in participating in UK 2000 should contact the secretariat at 95-99 Ladbroke Grove, London W11 1PG, or contact one of the voluntary organisations that are a part of the scheme. UK 2000 community programme places have not been allocated to particular areas and we hope that Bradford will be able to take full advantage of the opportunities available.

Development Corporations

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has had any discussions with local authorities about the possibility of development corporations being appointed in some areas to take over certain local government functions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce a development corporation into the metropolitan district of St. Helens; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Hippy Convoys and Encampments

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it is his policy to adjust the rate support grant 1986-87 to take account of the costs incurred by district councils in dealing with the hippy convoys and encampments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Rate support grant is unhypothecated grant paid to support local authority expenditure in general. I do not think that it would be appropriate to adjust RSG in 1986-87 to take account of these costs.

Homes Insulation Scheme

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 14 July concerning grants available to local authorities under the homes insulation scheme, what criteria he used in reaching the level of funding available to St. Helens district council for 1984-85 and 1985-86; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the outturn figures for spending by St. Helens district council under the homes insulation scheme in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Sir George Young I shall answer these questions shortly.

Homelessness

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish estimates prepared by his Department comparing the public expenditure implications of maintaining homeless households in receipt of supplementary benefit in commercial board and lodging accommodation, with providing such households with local authority rented accommodation by building new dwellings for them; and if he will publish separate estimates assuming the household concerned is (a) a single person, (b) a couple without children, (c) a single parent with one dependent child and (d) a couple with two dependent children accepted as homeless and in priority need of accommodation by (i) a London borough and (ii) a non-metropolitan local authority.;

(2) pursuant to his statement on 20 December 1985, Official Report, column 709, if he intends to announce further measures to help relieve homelessness;

(3) what was the number of homeless households placed by (i) local authorities in Greater London and (ii) local authorities in the non-metropolitan areas in bed and breakfast accommodation (a) at the end of 1984 and (b) at end of 1985;

(4) what is his Department's explanation of the increase in the number of homeless households placed by (i) local authorities in Greater London and (ii) local authorities in the non-metropolitan areas in bed and breakfast accommodation at the end of 1985 over that at the end of 1984;

(5) what is his Department's explanation of the higher percentage increase in the number of homeless households placed by (i) local authorities in the non-metropolitan areas, compared with (ii) local authorities in Greater London in bed and breakfast accommodation at the end of 1985 over the number of households placed in bed and breakfast accommodation at the end of 1984.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mental Illness

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department has issued about accommodation for patients now receiving in-patient care in district general hospital psychiatric departments.

Mr. Whitney: Current departmental guidance is contained in hospital building note 35 published in 1973. As indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 26 June at column 293, this guidance will be superseded by a revised publication early next year. The Department has also produced a series of reports and a pamphlet in the mental health buildings evaluation series, aimed at evaluating the buildings provided under the DHSS-sponsored and funded Worcester development project to test a new pattern of services of the kind envisaged in the 1975 White Paper—"Better Services for the Mentally Ill".

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the most recent figures for places for the mentally ill in (a) day hospitals and (b) local authority day centres analysed by (i) region and (ii) local authority.

Mr. Whitney: The most recent figures for places for mentally ill people in local authority day centres analysed by local authority were given in my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 21 February at columns 392-394. The numbers of places in National Health Service mental illness day hospitals are given in the table by regional health authority.

Places in NHS mental illness day hospitals on 31 December 1985

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate an inquiry into the causes of high readmission rates among patients admitted to hospital annually with a diagnosis of schizophrenic psychosis.

Mr. Whitney: Schizophrenia is an illness which, for many sufferers, follows an episodic pattern; periods of acute mental disturbance alternate with periods of relative well-being. It is during a period of acute disturbance that the person with schizophrenia may require admission to hospital — mainly on a voluntary basis — for intensive specialised treatment. Effective modern treatments mean that the patient is often well enough to leave within a few weeks. Understandably, most patients suffering from schizophrenia choose to spend as little time as possible in hospital, preferring to return to their own environment at the earliest opportunity and receive any further treatment on an out-patient or day-patient basis. Many experts now believe that an important part of recovery from episodes of schizophrenia is for the patient to resume the normal responsibilities of life outside hospital as soon as he is able. From the nature of the illness itself therefore and from the pattern of care now considered most appropriate it is to be expected that readmissions will often occur.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the study of bed usage in district general hospital psychiatric departments undertaken by the Royal College of Psychiatrists and the hospital advisory service will be available.

Mr. Whitney: The study referred to was undertaken by a working party set up for the purpose by the social and community psychiatry section of the Royal College of Psychiatry. I understand that the college has accepted the working party's report, and that a paper based on it will be published in the next few months.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if research into the role of mental health centres in local mental health services has begun; and if there is a planned date for publication.

Mr. Whitney: A few studies of English mental health centres, not funded by the Department, have already been published; one by Dr. F. Hutton appeared in the British Journal of Psychiatry in 1985. However, more descriptive and evaluative research into different patterns of community-orientated psychiatric care is needed. The mental illness research liaison group considered community mental health centres at its meeting in February this year and plans to commission a full literature review. When this has been carried out the group and the Department will be better placed to decide on further research plans. In addition one particular centre has recently volunteered a draft project for an evaluative study of its work, and we are now considering whether to fund this.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the number of cases of pneumonia in 1985; and how many of these can be attributed to Legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Hayhoe: Legionnaire's disease is a form of pneumonia. In 1985 in England and Wales there were an estimated 218·5 newly diagnosed episodes of pneumonia per 100,000 population, and a total of 210 reported cases of Legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence the Health and Safety Executive has received of clusters of two or more deaths from Legionnaire's disease during 1983 and 1984; and if he will give details of the work being carried out to register these numbers.

Mr. Hayhoe: There were no clusters of two or more deaths from Legionnaire's disease in England and Wales during 1983 and 1984. The communicable disease surveillance centre receives laboratory reports on all incidents and cases where Legionnaire's disease has been positively diagnosed. Further inquiries are made and a report for health authorities is prepared every four weeks. Annual summary figures are prepared jointly by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the public health laboratory service and are published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Pharmacists (Contract)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the views of the Office of Fair Trading in relation to competition policy when it was consulted about the proposed new contract for retail pharmacists.

Mr. Hayhoe: During the discussions on the proposed new contract for retail pharmacists officials of the Office of Fair Trading expressed some reservations about the possible effect of the new contract on competition in the supply of National Health Service pharmaceutical services. The Government's view however is that the revised new contract strikes a balance between competition, the need to control National Health Service dispensing costs, and, above all, the need to provide adequate services to National Health Service patients.

London Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the meeting with representatives of London teaching hospitals on 10 July.

Mr. Fowler: I met three London teaching hospital consultants on 10 July, and I listened to the points they put to me. I agreed to study some documents which they promised to send me, and to meet them again once I had had the opportunity of considering their points fully.

Domestic Assistance Addition

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many retirement pensioners are in receipt of domestic assistance addition; and if he will give the figures for (a) the average weekly payments made, (b) the range of weekly payments made and (c) the total amount involved.

Mr. Newton: At December 1984, it is provisionally estimated that some 2,000 retirement pensioners were in receipt of a supplementary benefit domestic assistance addition with an average weekly payment of around £2·70. This would be equivalent, using December 1984 numbers and rates, to total annual expenditure of around £300,000. These amounts take no account of the available scale margin. The available data are not sufficiently reliable to enable a breakdown by range of payment to retirement pensioners to be given, but I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 3 June at column 531, which showed the range of payments to all recipients of the addition.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants are estimated to be eligible for severe disablement allowance, but do not claim it.

Mr. Major: I regret that reliable estimates are not available.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Tooting constituency in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (a) staff handling supplementary benefit and (b) all staff in his Department's local offices for the same period.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Manchester, Wythenshawe constituency and the city of Manchester, respectively, in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change the figures represent; and what were the percentage changes in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at his Department's local offices for the same period.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Coventry, North-West constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1985; what percentage change that represents; and what was the percentage change in (i) staffing handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at the local offices of his Department over the same period.

Mr. Major: I shall let the right hon. and hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Operating Department Assistants

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up a special pay review board to review the salary scales for operating department assistants.

Mr. Whitney: No. The pay of operating department assistants is a matter for the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council.

Patient Costs

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average daily cost of administration to the National Health Service of one hospital patient and the equivalent average daily amount paid by a private patient in a private clinic or hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe: The costing returns for 1984-85 submitted to the Department by health authorities give an average cost for hospital administration (including medical records) of £4·35 per in-patient day. This average includes hospitals of all types except those administered by the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals, for which equivalent figures are not readily available. It does not include the administration costs of regional and district headquarters, as these are not apportioned between hospital services and the other services for which health authorities are responsible. I regret that information is not available on amounts paid in private clinics or hospitals.

Abortions

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were performed in the United Kingdom in 1975 and 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of notifications of legal abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 in the United Kingdom in 1975 and 1985 were 147,029 and 180,983 respectively. The Act does not apply in Northern Ireland.

Infant Mortality (Staffordshire)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the rate of infant mortality in the Staffordshire, Moorlands district in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what is the comparable rate for England.

Mr. Whitney: The infant mortality rate, that is the number of deaths under one year of age per 1,000 livebirths, for Staffordshire Moorlands county district for 1985 is 8·9, and the corresponding rate for England is 9·2 per 1,000 live births.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cervical cancer in each year from 1981 to 1985 in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority area.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is shown in the table.

Numbers of deaths with underlying cause as malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9) 180) to women usually resident in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health area 1981-1985*

Area of usual residence	Year	Number of deaths
Burnley Health District	1981	16
Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale	1982	13
District Health Authority	1983	16
	1984	12
	1985	8

* International Classification of Diseases 9th revision

Mobility Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were receiving mobility allowance at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Major: The figure was 434,000 as at 11 July 1986.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress there has been on the Whitley Council negotiations on speech therapists' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I understand that when the management side of the scientific and professional staffs council met the staff side representatives of speech therapists on 19 June an offer representing an increase of 5·5 per cent. of the pay bill was rejected. Negotiations were adjourned and a further meeting has yet to be arranged.

Severe Weather Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many exceptionally severe weather payments were made for the month of February in England and Wales; what was the average payment; and what was the total amount paid to claimants;

(2) how many exceptionally severe weather payments were made for the month of February in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland; what was the average payment; and what was the total amount paid to claimants in (i) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland.

Mr. Major: The information is not yet available. When the period during which payments are likely to be made is over, local offices will be asked to make a return so that the number of payments and amounts paid can be calculated.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what actions he is planning to ensure that some hospitals do not close a proportion of their beds during the winter months because of difficulties in recruiting nursing staff and as a result of the possible overflow of acute medical cases during those months.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although there are from time to time nursing recruitment difficulties in particular locations or in specific specialisms, overall the numbers of nursing and midwifery staff continue to increase—by a further 3,500 to 401,000 whole-time equivalents between September 1984 and September 1985. The recent increase in the pay of nursing staff should also help to aid recruitment. Responsibility for recruiting staff to meet local needs and priorities and for planning to deal with peaks in workload must rest with individual health authorities. Only they have the detailed local knowledge necessary to make these judgements; their performance is, of course, monitored and reviewed through the accountability review process.

Pharmacy

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes that pharmacists on the proposed new pharmacy practices sub-committees and appeal bodies therefrom should give guidance only but have no vote upon applications.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am not proposing change of any kind in the composition or voting arrangements for pharmacy practices sub-committees. However, after careful consideration of points raised by hon. Members during proceedings on the NHS (Amendment) Bill, I intend that pharmacists should retain membership of the bodies which will consider any appeals from pharmacy practices sub-committees in order to give guidance and advice but without a power to vote. I also intend that the membership of these appelate bodies should be drawn from a national list approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. I expect similar arrangements to apply to Scotland and Wales.

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many mentally handicapped people (a) live in institutional care or (b) are cared for in the community, in the United Kingdom.

(2) what is the annual funding for (a) institutionally based care and (b) community based care, for mentally handicapped people in Britain.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Maternity Allowance

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the gross and net cost of increasing the single person's rate of maternity allowance by £7·35.

Mr. Major: The cost of increasing the basic rate of maternity allowance by £7·35 per week would be about £47 million in a full year, with a saving of about £2 million on supplementary benefit expenditure. If the increase was confined to single women only, the cost would be about £6 million.

Low Income Families

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1)if he will publish a table showing for 1983 (a) the numbers of families with one, two, three, four or more children living below, at, and up to 140 per cent. of the supplementary benefit level on the latest basis and a basis comparable with 1981 and 1979, (b) how many of these families were in work or out of work and (c) the total number of families with one, two, three, four or more children, on the same basis as his reply of 16 May 1985 to the hon. Member for Thurrock, Official Report, column 224;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown from the low income families 1983 table of the main reasons for people falling below the supplementary benefit level on the same basis as his reply of 14 December 1983 to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams), Official Report, column 517;

(3) how many children were living in families below supplementary benefit level, on supplementary benefit, with incomes up to 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level, classified by employment status, and whether they were in one- or two-parent families in 1983 on the latest basis and on a basis comparable with 1981 and 1979; and what proportion these children make up of the total number of children.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 8 July at column 157. When the tables are published, I will then be in a position to reply to the hon. Member's questions.

Leukaemia

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment will consider the preliminary study by the information services division of the Scottish Health Service into the incidence of leukaemia in Scotland in the birth to 24 years age group; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, in the light of uncertainties about the completion date of the final study and difficulties met with in case control studies recommended by the Black report, he will commission immediately the case control studies recommended in the preliminary study by the information services division of the Scottish Health Service into the incidence of leukaemia in Scotland in the 0-24 year age group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I have been asked to reply.

I expect the full study of the incidence of leukaemia in Scotland in under 25-year-olds undertaken by the information services division of the Common Services Agency of the Scottish Health Service to be published in the autumn. Thereafter the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment will be asked to consider this full report. It is not intended to commission new studies until the committee's guidance on the need for and nature of further investigative work has been obtained.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 101

SESSION 1985-86

7th July—18th July 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
